be completed. The congregation wishes to thank many friends for their expressions of sympathy.

—The Foreign Society has received a gift of $4,800 from a friend in Kansas on the annuity plan. This is the second gift he has made on this plan.

—We deeply regret to learn of the death of Sister Dalton, of the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati. For many years she had been an active worker in our cause.

—John L. Brandt, pastor of the First Christian church of St. Louis, delivered an address at Topeka, Kansas, before the Kansas state temperance union, Feb. 16, to a large and enthusiastic audience. His subject was "Great Epochs in History."

—C. A. Young of the Christian Century called on us last week en route from Springfield, Mo., where he has been preaching, to Chicago. He is looking well and feeling hopeful for the future of the Christian Century. He was delighted with our new plant, and he and Brother Snively remained to our editorial midday lunch.

—The church at Waynesboro, Pa., under Bro. J. A. Hopkins, is sending out a circular letter showing the special opportunity there is there and the special need for at once purchasing a desirable lot upon which the church has an option. As this option expires March 15 an appeal is made for outside help to meet the emergency. The local brethren are doing all they can. They are now meeting in a rented church at considerable expense.

—The Chicago Daily Review, a new journal devoted to the permanent and wholesome interests of the American family, has come to our desk and we are glad to commend both the spirit which prompts its publication and the get-up and contents of the paper. It is an effort to publish a clean daily paper and we trust it will have abundant success. Of course the news is "boiled down" and the subscription price is likewise—being only $1.

—For a small western church of less than 100 contributors that over which Bro. Geo. C. Ritchey, at Roseburg, Oregon, is pastor, deserves notice. As an educational offering this year it gave one endowment note to Eugene divinity school for $500, and $40 in cash and pledges. There had previously been $160 in cash and pledges given. If one-tenth of our churches did as well as this, the cause of Christian education would be well supported.

—The Florida state convention is to be held in Jacksonville March 1 to 3, and the First church is planning to take care of a large attendance. Jacksonville would be glad to have every church in the state send four or five delegates, and it is hoped that no church will fail to be represented. Bro. C. W. Zaring, Cor. Sec., says that a special invitation is extended to brethren from other states who may now be visiting in Florida. The state work is going forward, and a good convention is expected.

—The initial preaching service of a new church at Joliet, Ill., has just been held by Claire L. Waite, pastor of the Douglas Park church, Chicago, and A. Larrabee, secretary of the Chicago Christian missionary society. The new organization is an outgrowth of cottage meetings held for some months, and is to be known as the Central Christian church of Joliet, and will form the second congregation of Disciples in that city. Those who are identified with this work in its beginning number between twenty-five and thirty.

—The church at Findlay, Ohio, where Bro. C. H. Bass is preaching, is determined to progress. They have adopted as their immediate aim: (1) The building of a parsonage; (2) the doubling of the resident church membership by the time of the jubilee convention; (3) the increasing of the general missionary offerings until they will be able to become a living link church, supporting their own missionary in the foreign field, and (4) the organization within the church of a mutual benevolent association for the purpose of taking care of their sick and destitute.

—Under date of January 11, G. L. Wharton, writing from Jubbulpore, India, says: "You will be glad to know that the Bible college opened two days ago with 18 students enrolled from seven different stations. We have rented a bungalow until we can get our new building erected. It accommodates the school and the printing press, which we have also rented till the money comes for the new press. The facts before us prove that there was no exaggeration as to the great need of these factors in evangelizing India."

—In a letter from J. R. Riggs, who is an elder of the church at Hoquiam, Washington, he informs us that the brethren there are making efforts to buy a lot and build a house. He says: "We are a small band of Christians, struggling to have the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ planted in this town. We are now meeting in a hall, and are trying to maintain a preacher half time." Cannot our state board in Washington send an evangelist to that place to hold a meeting and solicit subscriptions? Such a nucleus ought to be cared for, and assisted in their efforts to plant the cause of Christ in their community.

—W. F. Richardson, pastor of the First Christian church, Kansas City, Mo., has been granted a three months' leave of absence by his congregation on account of a throat trouble, which it is believed will be relieved by a complete rest. He and Sister Richardson may go to southern California about March 1, for several weeks, and then return through New Mexico and spend the remainder of the time with their son, Clement, or they may go to Florida. We are sure our readers will join with us in the sincere wish and prayer that our brother's throat trouble may be entirely relieved by this change of climate and complete rest, and that he may be able at the appointed time to resume his most useful work in the ministry. We hope he will be able to let our readers hear from him occasionally and know how he does.

—Not many churches support three living link missionaries but at the annual meeting of the Warren, Ohio, church, where J. E. Lynn ministers, it was reported that a total of $7,416 had been raised in all departments, $2,361 of which was for missions, three living link missionaries being charged to this church. The treasury of the Bible-school showed a balance in the current expense fund, after all bills were paid, of $387. This church has discarded suppers and entertainments and socials as means for raising the Lord's money.

—We reget to learn, through Bro. A. J. Elliott, that Bro. G. B. Van Arsdall and wife of Peoria, are sorely afflicted in the loss of their only daughter, Irene, seven years old, from diphtheria. This blow has fallen just on the eve of their departure for Cedar Rapids. The burial was at Connersville, Ind., February 15. Brother and Sister Van Arsdall will have the sympathy of all the brethren, who will pray that the entry upon their new and important field will in some measure relieve their minds and hearts from the extreme poignancy of such a grief.

—The Fourth Christian church of this city of which Bro. E. T. McFarland is pastor, has passed resolutions of sympathy with their pastor because of the recent tragic death of his father, Martin McFarland, as related in our last issue. The resolutions express profound sympathy with their beloved pastor, and in view of the serious illness which the deceased had suffered before his death, express the confidence that his act was the result of mental aberration for which he is not responsible. They also express their appreciation of his work as a minister of the gospel, and they cherish his name as one of the "sturdiest soldiers of the Cross." At our last ministers' meeting a committee was appointed to present resolutions of sympathy to Brother McFarland, a member of our ministers' alliance, in his bereavement. These expressions of sympathy reveal a common bond of brotherhood, which unites true believers, and makes them sharers in each others' sorrows and joys.

—J. K. Shellenberger will begin a month's meeting in the church at Duluth, Minn., for which he is pastor.

—"It's very cold here (Joplin) but we begin our third week with 42 additions."

Joplin, Mo., Feb. 10. W. A. Moore.

A Great Meeting at Huntington, Ind.

We have just closed, so far as the actual results are concerned, the greatest meeting ever held in our city—there were 222 additions.

1. The evangelists were the Brooks brothers, of Ladoga, Ind. These two young men make a strong team in their chosen field, evangelism. They present a striking personality, both are college graduates and preachers, both are singers, and above all, they are earnest, consecrated, Christian gentlemen. A. K. Brooks is an effective soloist, has a deep, rich voice, is a fine leader of song, and rallies about him a large chorus. W. T. Brooks is a speaker of wonderful magnetism, holds his audiences, has great faith in his message, preaches the plain, simple gospel, and with no undue excitement, advertising or clap-trap methods, scores of people come forward and accept it. We have never been in a meeting—of six weeks—in which so complete harmony and sweet fellowship throughout prevailed between evangelists and pastor, evangelists and people, leader and chorus, and all the forces within the churches and outside generally. At no time could we accommodate our audiences, and with room to accommodate all who desired to come the results might have been doubled.

2. Our people were ready for a meeting. For some time our audiences and Sunday-school had outgrown our building, and we were having frequent additions—seven on a Sunday before the meeting and three the Sunday previous. So that with such men as the Brooks brothers to lead us we were assured of results.

3. All departments of our church work have made steady growth. The membership has doubled since the pastor took charge of the work two years ago. The Sunday-school, under our model superintendent, H. S. Butler, has doubled itself since he took charge a few months ago, and now has an enrollment of 300, with new members added every Sunday. The C. E. societies have been greatly increased; we have an excellent C. W. B. M. auxiliary of 75 members. With our present church membership of 600, the interest manifested in our work and the power of our plea—this all means a new and modern building which we now have under consideration.

Mr. Whang is interpreter at the German Consulate. He is a strong, influential Christian and preaches for us sometimes at the Christian church in Wauking.

RESIDENCE AND DISPENSARY OF DRS. C. L. AND LETA M. PICKETT.

Laoag, Philippine Islands. In this building medical work is conducted by the missionaries of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Dr. C. L. Pickett is a brother of our beloved and well-known J. L. Pickett, Denver, Col. Dr. Pickett is wielding a wide influence among the people of that land. His work grows in influence and power.

Mr. Carnegie Helps Bethany.

As we go to press we learn by telegram that Mr. Andrew Carnegie has agreed to give $20,000 to Bethany college for a library building. President Cramblet makes no reference to any condition, but it is usual for Mr. Carnegie to attach some condition to his gifts, and the possibilities are that the college has to raise an equal amount to Mr. Carnegie's promised gift to ensure its actual payment. All friends of old Bethany will rejoice in any gifts that will make her better able to carry on the work her founder had at heart.

Some Suggestions for the Offering.

Every detail for taking the March offering should be carefully arranged and definitely understood. The sermon should be prepared with scrupulous care. The service of prayer should be a special pleading for help from on high. Appropriate missionary songs will help to create a suitable spiritual atmosphere. The special work of the deacons should be carefully planned and well understood. They should be imbued with the importance of the occasion. It will be well to hold a preliminary conference to arrange every detail. It will be well also to see a few of the most able and generous givers in advance and be able to announce some handsome gifts. This will help to stimulate larger and more general giving.

In the March offering the churches should be impressed with the truth that money-giving is a fundamental virtue, like faith and love (2 Cor. 8:7). A Christian man should be as solicitous about his liberality as about his faith. Paul so teaches. Giving of money is a proof of the sincerity of our Christian profession (2 Cor. 8:8). And there is no large development of Christian character possible without generous giving (2 Cor. 9:6). The March offering can and should be made a means of grace. It will strengthen and nerve the whole church.

If at all possible, aim to make your church a living link in the March offering by raising the salary of a missionary, $600. It is believed that most churches that support preaching all the time can provide the salary of a missionary. Smaller churches can provide the salary for six months, $300, or three months, $150, or for one or two months. There is scarcely a church in our brotherhood that could not secure the salary of a missionary for at least one month The salary of a missionary is about $1.65 per day. Almost every member of the church will give this amount if the matter is properly presented.

A CHEAP HEART CURE.

A Norwich Lady Tells You What to Use at Home, If You Would Cure Yourself at Once.

Alice A. Wetmore, Block 67, Norwich, Conn., says if any sufferer from Heart Disease in any form will write her, she will without charge direct them to the perfect cure she used.

We advise every one interested to get this free information now, for Miss Wetmore is very positive it will lead to their complete cure.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

West Virginia.

Things of late years have undergone some changes in West Virginia, chief of which has been along missionary lines. This was a hard problem to solve, and our churches are showing marked progress in missionary co-operation. We have 147 congregations of the 197. These churches that have come into co-operation are being educated to the support of regular preaching and this has proved a great factor in our work.

We are trying this year to introduce a regular system of pastoral work into all our congregations. This with the aid of good literature and up-to-date religious papers will greatly help the cause of the Master.

Our churches have suffered from legalism. In some places doctrine has taken the place of teaching along the line of living and working for the advancement of the cause of Christ. But we are coming more and more to realize that religion is a life. The men in the Christian church that have been advocating that religion is a life have done great service to our great plea. The fundamental truths of the New Testament, to which we have invited a return, have made a profound impression on the religious world.

We now need to bring our members up to the standpoint of a life of consecration to those truths which the pioneers so nobly defended. This will make our churches active in every good cause. We want to furnish you some news from our state.

J. B. Smith has been holding a good meeting at Bethany. W. A. McCaffery and W. M. Long are holding a meeting at Fairmont. Percy H. Wilson held a very good meeting a Moundsville. H. H. Moninger assisted J. W. Underwood at Colliers, in one of the best meetings ever held at that place. I am preaching every night at Endicott, with a good interest.

Washington State.

I have just arrived at home after a meeting of four weeks with the church at Pomeroy. There were 28 additions, 21 of them by confession of the Christ. Harry Benton and wife minister at Pomeroy and are held in high esteem by the church and the general community. They will, no doubt, lead out in a building enterprise soon, that will give our people more room and better equipment for work. It is much needed. On my way home I stopped over with Brother Benton at Starbuck where we arranged with brethren to secure a house and begin holding regular services right away. This work will be a mission of the Pomeroy church and will be fostered by them under the leadership of Brother and Sister Benton. Both are good preachers.

E. F. Beaudreau and wife have removed from Latah, Wash., to Lewiston, Idaho, and assume pastoral care of that church. The wives of both of these good preachers (Benton and Beaudreau) are daughters of J. B. Daisley who has for years been recognized as one of our ablest preachers in this state.

On my return home it seemed good to find the whole congregation busy getting ready for our meeting to be led by J. V. Updike. It is a joy to be again yoked with him in evangelistic work.

This church (at Yakima) is backing Bro. L. D. Green in his work of ministering to the country surrounding the city, and his work is beginning to bear fruit. He has had 23 confessions in the last month.

Prosser church, M. A. Thompson pastor, is planning for a great evangelistic campaign. R. L. McHatton is in a good meeting at Clarksdon, and J. A. L. Romig at Garfield has moved the meeting to the opera house. Colfax church thought they had a preacher, but he was led to change his mind. They now have another in view and if they land him will be in shape for a great move forward.

In view of the convention coming to the coast this year every church on the coast should arrange for a meeting just before and just after the convention and thus avail ourselves of the services of the many preachers who will be in the west at that time. I am hoping that this matter may be taken up by the churches and pushed with vigor.

Missouri.

Liberty, having completed an elegant parsonage, is now moving for a new church house. They will be wanting a state convention next.

Seneca has her new house almost ready for dedication; it is, of course, the "best house in town."

Trenton raised $2,400 the other day to pay on their new church house. They have a great task, but with S. J. White to lead them they fear not.

Dr. H. L. Willett has been at Independence giving his lectures on "Beginnings of Christianity" to great audiences.

W. J. Wright, national superintendent of evangelism, is following up the great union effort in Kansas City with a two weeks' meeting at First church, resulting in about 30 additions to date. Our churches in greater Kansas City have had something like 300 additions since the union meeting began. Not all, possibly, as the result of that meeting, however. Sixth and Prospect congregation is now in the basement of the new church and if this upper room carries out the prophecy in this part of the structure, it will be a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

H. L. Willett, of Chicago, delivered a course of lectures at South street, Springfield. C. A. Young, the editor of the Christian Century, followed.

W. A. Moore, corresponding secretary state Bible-school board, is in a meeting with J. W. Baker at South Joplin, with 24 to date. This is his second meeting at that place.

Our Missouri lectureship and the Disciples' congress meets at Columbia, the Athens of Missouri, March 21-23. We are expecting a great gathering of great men. The corresponding secretaries of the Mississippi valley states have a special meeting at the same time and place.

We rejoice in the recent addition to our ministerial force in Missouri of S. J. White, of Ohio, at Trenton; L. O. Bricker, of Iowa, at Cameron; T. J. Thompson, of Illinois, at Slater; J. H. Wright, of Iowa, at Paris; C. E. Freeman, of Arkansas, at King City; H. G. Bennett, of Illinois, at Jefferson City; E. B. Widger, of Nebraska, at Kennett; J. C. Howell, of Indian Territory, at Weston, and W. M. Thomas, of Wisconsin, at Burlington Junction. We give them all hearty welcome and believe our work in Missouri will get great good from them.

C. A. Lowe, of Columbia, has accepted the work at Mitchell Park church, St. Joseph. It is a hard fight but he will make it go.

L. P. Kopp, Danville, Ill., has been called to the Ivanhoe church, Kansas City. Will begin work March 1. Welcome, brother.

We have complaints from Paris, Madison, Macon, Armstrong and other places that W. E. Stanley, formerly of Hopkins, Mo., has succeeded in borrowing (?) money from the brethren at these places. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Several papers have been trying hard to locate O. W. Jones, of Jasper, Mo., at Herington, Kansas. It is all a mistake; he is to stay at Jasper for good.

E. W. Yocum, of Mountain Grove, is doing a great work in his section, he has organized three new congregations in the last four months and added many to the number of the saved.

J. D. Babb is now employed as evangelist in Polk, Dallas and Hickory counties and already the work is taking on new life.

T. A. Abbott.

WHAT THE MINISTER SAYS

Is Most Convincing.

"I thought I would write you what Pyramid Pile Cure has done for me. I had a most aggravated case of bleeding piles; indeed I dreaded when I had to go to stool. One fifty cent box cured me. I feel like a new man. I have recommended it to others as being the most wonderful remedy known. It is indeed a great blessing to suffering humanity. You are at liberty to use this for all it is worth, and I hope it may do good." Rev. W. E. Carr, 355 No. Holbrook St., Danville, Va.

Clergymen (like all professional men who lead sedentary lives) are especially addicted to piles, in various forms, and are continually on the lookout for a remedy which will give relief, with little or no idea of obtaining a cure.

Recognizing this fact, Rev. Mr. Carr consents to the use of his name, in order that other sufferers may know there is a cure called Pyramid Pile Cure, which is sold by druggists everywhere for the low price of fifty cents a package, and which will bring about for every one afflicted with piles, the same beneficial results as in his own case. Be careful to accept no substitutes, and remember that there is no remedy "just as good."

A little book describing the causes and cure of piles is published by Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., and will be sent free for the asking. All sufferers are advised to write for it, as it contains valuable information on the subject of piles.

Cancer of the Breast no longer Incurable—How Mrs. Geo. Ampt, of Aurora, Ind., was cured.

Aurora, Ind., June 29, 1904.

Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Dear Sirs—I am glad to be able to testify as to the merits of your Cancer Cure, for to-day I am entirely well of my cancer of the breast, thanks to your Combination Oil Cure. Any one wishing to hear from me will be promptly answered. Yours respectfully,

MRS. GEORGE AMPT, Aurora, Ind.

No need of cutting off a woman's breast, or a man's cheek or nose in a vain attempt to cure cancer. No need of applying burning plasters to the flesh and torturing those already weak from suffering. Soothing, balmy, aromatic oils give safe, speedy and certain cure. The most horrible forms of cancer of the face, breast, womb, mouth, stomach; large tumors, ugly ulcers, fistula, catarrh; terrible skin diseases, etc., are all successfully treated by the application of various forms of simple oils. The Union Evangelistic Meetings in Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Feb. 15, 1905.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Your readers will doubtless be interested in the results of the union interdenominal revival recently closed in this city. First a few facts in a general way. This campaign was undertaken too late in the fall to allow of sufficiently careful preparation. The committees had hardly time to plan their work on such ample lines as ensured success. Especially was it unfortunate that the general committee was so late in securing the evangelists, very many of the best known and abler ones being already engaged for work elsewhere. The result of this was that some men were called to the work who were hardly able to direct so great an enterprise, while some of them were very ordinary in pulpit ability, and preached rather below the average of their audiences than above it.

But, with this exception, which in one instance led to an unfortunate public criticism of one of the men by a pastor, shortly after the close of the revival, expanded by the local press into an assault upon the whole body of men, there was quite general satisfaction with their work, and the conviction on the part of most of our Christian people that the campaign had accomplished untold good. There were twenty-eight districts, I believe, including Kansas City, Kansas, and Independence. Reports indicate that about three thousand converts will be added to the churches as a result of the revival, though these figures are in part an estimate. It may require a few months to realize this result, but I think it will not prove far from the figure given.

As to the part taken in this work by our Christian churches and pastors, I am glad to report favorably. On the general committee of forty in charge of the whole movement Bros. J. J. Morgan and R. H. Fife represented us, while Bro. Geo. H. Combs was chairman of the executive committee. Two of the evangelists, W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism for the American Christian Missionary Society, and J. M. Rudy, pastor of the First church of Sedalia, proved themselves such efficient preachers of the gospel and able leaders in their respective districts as to win the confidence and love of all the churches and ministers with whom they wrought. It is needless to say that they preached the gospel of Jesus Christ in its simplicity and scriptural power, but with kindness and loving spirit, and it was received and enjoyed by the members of all the churches. They took the confession from their converts in the good old way with which our people are so familiar; and the preachers praised it as a better way than that to which they had been accustomed, such as raising the hand, standing for prayers, or kneeling at the anxious seat. The number of their converts exceeded far the average of other districts of like size and character, and we are proud of them. Bro. W. M. Mundell, of Ottawa, Kansas, gave splendid service in one of the districts as a singing evangelist, and his praise is heard on every side among the workers there. Whatever other good resulted from this union effort, one at least is manifest to everybody. The preachers and people of all our churches got closer together, and learned to love each other better than ever before; while the absolutely unbroken harmony with which they labored for the one end of saving souls was an object lesson on the growth of the spirit of Christian unity among all believers.

Following the close of the union revival, we kept Bro. W. J. Wright with us for a short meeting in the First church. He began his work with us on Monday night, Jan. 30, and closed it on Friday, February 10. The first two nights the audiences were large, and everything promised a great meeting; but then came an awful blizzard, and intense cold and deep snow has been the story without a day's intermission since that day. Despite the dreadful weather, and almost universal sickness throughout the city, we had fairly good audiences, drawn by the strong, scriptural sermons of Brother Wright, and results beyond what we might have anticipated. Including several who are yet to be baptized, we had about thirty additions, most of them by obedience to the gospel.

Brother Wright has gone to Louisville where he is to preach in one of the larger districts in the union revival now in progress there. It is well that the American society can let him do some of this work, for he is very successful at it, and exalts the place of evangelism in the church, wherever he goes. Several other of our churches held brief meetings at the close of the union revival, but I have not learned the results with sufficient definiteness to report. All in all, we are glad that this movement was realized in our city, and believe that its result is good in many ways. W. F. RICHARDSON.

Austin, Texas.

The capital city of Texas is now full of life. The legislature is now in session and there are visitors here from all parts of the state. Our people are well represented, especially in the House of Representatives. I acted as chaplain in opening this body, and quite a number wanted me to be a candidate for the permanent position, but as I had never been a candidate for any position, I had no difficulty in declining. Judge T. J. Brown is one of the supreme judges, and Judge A. E. Wilkinson is the reporter for the supreme court. The state librarian, Judge Raines, is also a member of the Christian church. So you can see that we are well represented in the state administration.

Our people are also well represented in the State university. Judge James B. Clark is proctor, and Prof. W. S. Lutton is at the head of the School of Pedagogy. Dr. Willis Campbell is a professor in the English department. We also have more students at the university than ever before. A few nights ago Mrs. Lowber and I attended a debate, and all four of the men on the affirmative are members of the Christian church. The judges decided in their favor, although contrary to their wishes they had been placed on the wrong side of the question. The proposition was, Affirmed that the Dispensary system is superior to Prohibition. For a number of years we have had a course of lectures in the interest of the students of the university. A number of the leading professors have lectured for us. Last Sunday night, Dr. Sidney Meses, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, lectured to a very large audience on "The Family." The university has shown great interest in the church.

It is now quite well known that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions has established a Bible Chair connected with the State university. It now has a very desirable property near the university and nearly ten thousand dollars' endowment. Prof. Wallace C. Payne and his wife are here spending a few weeks in its interest. It certainly has a great mission in teaching the Bible to the students of the University of Texas. Instead of injuring our own schools, it will stimulate our educational work throughout the state. The C. W. B. M. is evidently doing a great work along this line.

I begin my ninth year with the church here under more favorable circumstances than ever before. Since I came to Austin, I have had three opportunities of doubling the salary the church here is able to pay, but I am grateful that I have stood by the work in this great state. To be perfectly candid, Mrs. Lowber is largely responsible for the success of the work here. We have had a hard financial struggle; for while we have four hundred members, about half of them are university students and persons who cannot be expected to pay much. Our Central building is the newest and (as the people say) the most up-to-date building in the city. Our Hyde Park mission building is also the best in that part of the city. We owe about one-third of the cost price on each building. While we have so much mission work on hand in this city, we cannot do as much for the work beyond as we would like to do, but our people are constantly advancing. They gave for mission and educational work last year more than a thousand dollars. This, of course, included the Bible chair, which they regard as one of our most important missions. J. W. LOWBER.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs, and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Stockton, Feb. 13.—Closed a meeting at Elliott, with 21 additions. One was a Congregational minister, who will preach for us. W. T. Lambert, the pastor, is succeeding well.—J. B. Askew.

COLORADO.

Colorado Springs, Feb. 7.—Since November 1, there have been 139 additions under Bro. Crayton Brooks. P. H. Edwards had charge of the music in our special meeting. Miss McMillan, one of the finest solo singers in our city, obeyed our Savior in baptism.—J. B. Ellis.

Denver, Feb. 16.—Meeting in the Highland church closed last night; 18 sermons; 48 additions—by confession, 34, by letter and restored, 14. Five others, not reported, were added just before the beginning of the meeting, making 53 since January 1. I. I. Walters, of Grand Junction, did the preaching throughout the meeting. The church is greatly strengthened. —J. E. Pickett, minister.

ILLINOIS.

Winchester, Feb. 12.—We begin meeting with Allen Wilson at the helm Jan. 19. Baptized five last week. One confession to-day. E. C. Gill is in meeting at Glasgow with 15 additions.—W. W. Wharton.

Le Roy, Feb. 8.—We had one baptism last Lord's day.—E. A. Cary, pastor.

Buffalo, Feb. 10.—L. A. Chapman just closed a short meeting of three weeks' duration with eight additions to the church. We have good and attentive audiences despite the very cold weather. The absence of any abuse of our religious neighbors was very noticeable in Brother Chapman's preaching.—J. F. Ellington.

Pana, Feb. 11.—Seventy-two to date.—Lawrence and Edward Wright, evangelists.

Mechanicsburg, Feb. 9.—Since our last report nine have been added at Buffalo—seven by letter and statement and two by primary obedience. I can hold a short meeting outside of my own work this spring for some church. Address me here.—L. A. Chapman.

Saunemin, Feb. 10.—Began a meeting here Sunday, Feb. 5, in the midst of a blinding snow storm. Audiences good and splendid interest manifested. Two confessions to date and outlook good for a fine meeting. Bro. R. Irvin is the pastor.—C. H. DeVoe and H. K. Shields, evangelists.

McLeansboro, Feb. 12.—We have just closed a two weeks' meeting with home forces; 16 additions. All departments of work in a good condition. Future prospects are bright.—Edward U. Smith, pastor.

Pekin, Feb. 13.—We are in a meeting here with Charles E. McVay, of Benkleman, Neb., as leader of song and I am preaching. Nine have made the good confession. Meetings began Sunday and will continue throughout February. Brother McVay is touching the heart of the people and large audiences are attracted by the music. Prospects are good for a large ingathering.—James A. Barnett.

Williamsville, Feb. 9.—I recently closed a meeting, with home forces exclusively, which resulted in 11 confessions and baptisms. This makes a total of 15 additions since Jan. 1, 1905. There have been 35 added in the two years of my pastorate here, besides building and paying for a new church, costing nearly $10,000.—Ivan W. Agee.

Kewanee, Feb. 7.—I was with the new church at Savanna a week ago, and we had one confession. The church was organized last fall, after a meeting held by State Secretary J. Fred Jones and Harold E. Monser, and now numbers 43 members. The prospects for a strong church are bright.—A. C. Roach.

Abingdon, Feb. 13.—I am now in an enjoyable meeting with the church. This has been a prosperous year. I have been asked to remain another year.—Thos. J. Shuey.

Galesburg, Feb. 14.—I assisted in a meeting at Blandinsville. There were 27 additions—19 confessions and eight otherwise. Brother Richey has been doing a good work there. He is planning to make preparation for greater usefulness, hence expects to enter Chicago university next fall. We may rightly anticipate good things from him in his future work.—Albert Schwartz.

De Land, Feb. 7.—At a meeting held here three were added to the church from the German Baptists. It was our good fortune to have Sister Long, of Paris, Ky., with us on a Lord's day. She sang "The Upper Room," which you published in the Christian-Evangelist, at our communion service, to the perfect delight of all present. The upper room will be so real to us with all of its hallowed influences when we listen to this gifted singer present it in song. The ladies' aid society gave her the proceeds of the musical recital she gave.—I. W. Lowman.

Lake Fork, Feb. 13.—Meeting closed Saturday night with 59 additions—24 by confession and baptism, 24 by statement, eight by letter and three by restoration. Of these two are from the Methodists and two from the United Brethren. This is a new and very difficult field, so that the meeting is regarded as a great victory for the pure gospel. Most of those added are men and women of age and influence. Also a number of young men were baptized. The work has been greatly hindered by cold and opposition. The writer did all the preaching and for several days was sick and hoarse. But the truth triumphed and the victory belongs to our God.—J. D. Williams, minister.

Waukegan, Feb. 18.—Two additions here last Sunday, making four since last report.—E. N. Tucker.

Chicago, Feb. 17.—Six added in Metropolitan church on last Sunday, making 114 since January 1. Splendid interest and large audiences.—Chas. Reign Scoville.

Vermont, Feb. 16.—In second week; 17 added, all by primary obedience. Bro. G. W. Ross is now in his 12th year as pastor of this great church. He is universally beloved. The church is alive and at work.—R. A. Omer.

INDIANA.

Marion, Feb. 13.—W. S. Buchanan of the Tabernacle church at Marion, has been called for another year at this place. Great advancement in all lines of work has been made since Brother Buchanan took up the work there ten months ago; 133 additions have come to the church under his preaching during this short period. Much is hoped for on the first Sunday in March.

La Porte, Feb. 9.—Meeting at Illiopolis, Ill., closed with 26 additions. Began here last Sunday in a big snowstorm. The snow is 16 inches deep. Geo. E. Hicks is the pastor.—V. E. Ridenour, singer.

Markle, Feb. 13.—We have closed a very successful meeting. I did the preaching, and Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Stevens, of Gas City, assisted as singing evangelists. Brother and Sister Stevens are strangers to Indiana, but not strangers to evangelistic work. There were 11 additions, nine by confession and two by letter, and the church was strengthened and unified.—M. G. Long, minister.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT OF BEEF
COMPRESSED VIGOR

Every advanced physician admits the value of concentrated food products in convalescense or impaired digestion. LIEBIG Company's Extract is by far the best of these. Excellent for the Sick and a good thing for the well.

Summitville, Feb. 13.—Twenty additions in our meeting, 18 by primary obedience, one from M. P.'s, one from Baptists. We reached many new families. We have the good will of all the people in Summitville. M. V. Nelson, of Marion, conducted the music.—Chas. E. Underwood.

Ft. Wayne, Feb. 2.—I have just completed my fifth year with the West Jefferson street church. During this time there have been 490 additions, $20,000 raised, $3,400 of this amount being for missions and benevolence. Professor Paul, of Hiram college, is holding us a missionary institute this week —E. W. Allen.

Jasonville.—The meeting is now three weeks old. There have been 93 additions so far and many coming every night. Since the first addition from four to 21 have come each night. The weather is intensely bitter. Being compelled to give up the M. E. church, in which the meeting began, the opera house, seating 900, was secured and the meeting goes on. T. J. Legg came down one night and preached a fine sermon, to which 17 responded and entered the Master's work in Jasonville.—C. R. L. Vawter.

Salem, Feb. 4.—R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., held a 12 days' meeting here, in which 33 persons by confession and baptism, 13 by statement, five by letter and six from the denominations were added. The membership feels that great good has been done by Brother Crossfield.—W. Y. Allen.

Warsaw, Feb. 13.—We closed a short meeting of 16 days on Jan. 30. I gave seven sermons on the "Message to the Seven Churches of Asia," preliminary to the meeting, and found them excellent as a means of preparation. We closed with interest sufficient to fill the church nightly, but under the extremely difficult opposition of snow and sleet and bad sidewalks, concluded it might be best to wait until the weather became settled. There were 22 accessions—all adults—nearly all heads of families. Prospects are good. We are to give a series of three entertainments Feb. 14-28 and March 14; proceeds to apply on church debt. The spiritual interest is growing in our labors here. The people are working better and the prospects are fine for growth along all lines.—Edward O. Tilburn.

Kewanna, Feb. 13.—In meeting one week old; one from the Baptists. We have had severe cold, together with a five weeks' old M. E. meeting as opposition. Since I began here two years ago, I have worked full time, and afternoons at Fairview, six miles distant. I have baptized 23, and received about the same number by letter and statement. The church here has offered to continue my present salary another year, and permit me to come and go to and from school, where I purpose attending this coming fall and winter, but the expense would be such that I am anxious to correspond with churches near Indianapolis who are in need of a preacher part or full time. I close my work here the second Lord's day in March.—I. G. Shaw.

Terre Haute, Feb. 16.—Our great meeting under the leadership of Allen Wilson closed last night with 270 additions.—L. E. Sellers.

Waterman.—Am in a fine meeting in a pioneer field. Am doing frontier work in true pioneer style. Will constitute a church here before I leave. There are about a dozen or fifteen members here. We are holding our meeting in the new church. The members are enthusiastic in their support. Whether they will stay by us to the end remains to be seen. The Baptist church here is strong and they are arrayed against the allied forces of the "Campbellites" and Methodists. We believe that the Lord is with his own and we are trying to do his work in his own way. Will report later as to developments.—A. Walter Gehres, pastor of Veedersburg church.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Weleetka, Feb. 14.—I am at present holding the following mission points: Ada, first and third Sundays; Okemah, second Sunday; Wetumka, fourth Sunday. We have organized the Wetumka work since last report, with just one dozen members. Much sickness and severe weather interferes with our work just now, but we contemplate and plan for an active forward move in the early spring. My two former missions are now among our most active territory churches. I refer to Okmulgee and Weleetka congregations.—A. M. Harral.

IOWA.

Knoxville, Feb. 6.—Brother Garmong was with us for two weeks, and conducted the singing. Then he went to other fields and Miss Pauline Wambo, of Des Moines, led us for two weeks, with a spirit that wins souls to Christ. There were about 30 additions by statement and confession. When the meeting was at its best, the pastor, who was doing the preaching, became sick. The church got Brother Clinker, of Des Moines, and kept on with the meetings almost a week, but as there was a scare from smallpox it was thought best to close. We will continue our campaign until next fall, when with an evangelist we hope to complete the work. The church is in splendid condition spiritually, all united and ready to work.—F. E. Day.

New Sharon.—The evangelistic spirit seemed to take hold of some of the members here recently, with the result that at the regular services we have had five confessions. All were baptized immediately.—Pastor.

Redfield, Feb. 6.—I closed my work here Jan. 31. I preached for Wm. J. Lockhart, Feb. 5, at Ottumwa. He is in a revival at Rock Island. He has a live, willing people at Ottumwa. They are working for a $20,000 plant now, and are certain of it.—J. W. Johnson.

Cherokee, Feb. 13.—One conversion not reported.—S. K. Reynolds.

Oelwein, Feb. 11.—J. Seldon Shreve, pastor, Jno. P. Jesse, evangelist, and Evans, singer, are in a great meeting two weeks old with a number of additions and increasing interest already reported.

Laurens, Feb. 2.—We have just closed a most successful meeting resulting in 47 additions to the church: six by statement, one reclaimed, one from the Baptists, two from the M. E.'s, and 37 by confession and baptism. G. W. Elliott, of Brookings, S. D., did the preaching. The church has been greatly strengthened, the members realizing what it means to be allied with the great restoration movement, several stating that now they could not be identified with any other people, while before they had felt that one church was as good as another. Much good seed has been sown, and we will reap all through the year from this sowing. Complete harmony reigns, and every department is doing good work. Bible-school attendance from 100 to 120; Endeavor society active, prayer-meetings largely attended. We feel greatly encouraged, and hope for large things this year. At the close of the meeting a reception was given to the new members, and at the close, when an invitation was given, a lady responded; making the good confession. J. Will Landrum, of Audubon, conducted the song service. He goes to Bozeman, Mont., to conduct the singing in a meeting to be held there. —Jos. N. Harker, minister.

Iowa Falls, Feb. 12.—Our meeting at Iowa Falls has been in progress four weeks, through the severest cold and storms; 14 have come forward in all, 11 to confess faith in Jesus, and three to unite by letter and statement. Chas. G. Stout, state evangelist, is preaching. This has been and is a royal battle, and it is not over yet. The little band of Disciples have been loyal and brave and deserve success. We continue through this week at least.—Carl C. Davis, pastor.

Carson, Feb. 15.—Five additions recently.—H. M. Johnstone.

Davenport, Feb. 16.—Our meeting moves on nicely; 32 additions to date.—H. A. Northcutt, evangelist, A Martin, pastor.

KANSAS.

Marion, Feb. 8.—Seven accessions since we came to the work here.—W. M. Berkeley, minister.

Wilsey, Feb. 7.—One baptism last week.—J. G. E.

Lyons, Feb. 11.—Sixteen additions last night, 52 in the last six days, 149 to date. We continue.—Hamilton & Wilkinson, evangelists.

Cunningham, Feb. 9.—Fine hearing; six days, 10 added to date. McLain the good pastor.—Atwood & Garner, evangelists.

Gridley.—Meeting here starts nicely—weather bad but interest increasing. We go to Fall River next. We will be able to make dates for March and April, will remain in Kansas if called.—Jas. S. Beem and wife.

Topeka, Feb. 9.—The most successful meeting Carterville, Mo., has ever had was held during the stormy weather of last month, closing Feb. 5. The pastor, R. S. Campbell, held his own meeting and the success was due to his preparation and hearty co-operation of as faithful a band of workers as any church ever had. Sixty-three were added to the membership—43 by confession, seven from the Baptists and 13 by statement and reclamation. Twenty six were added, 21 being men, by confession, one of whom will study for the ministry. Forty-seven families are represented by the 63 conversions and Christianity has been introduced into several homes where it was not known before. The membership has grown too large for the building and it was voted by the congregation to erect a new building during the summer. A reception was given the new members the evening of Feb. 6. I am open for engagements as soloist and leader of song.—Bert I. Bentley, singing evangelist.

Canton, Feb. 6.—One addition at McPherson, Jan. 29. I am now at Canton assisting R. A. Adamson in a revival. Began with excellent prospects, but very bad snow storm.—W. A. Morrison.

McPherson, Feb. 4.—At the annual meeting of the church, Geo. W. Allison, the senior elder of the congregation, gave a history of the church which stirred all hearts, as they listened to the ups and downs, the defeats and victories, of the church. Every department of the work was represented on the program, which was a feast of good things. W. A. Morrison gave the pastor's report, and inspired all with the bright outlook for the coming year. The church is in the best spiritual condition it has been for years, and Brother Morrison enters upon the second year of the indefinite call with a rich increase of spiritual prospects, and a handsome increase of salary.—Robt. Matthews, church clerk.

Cunningham.—Mesting 11 days, 15 added, 14 confessions, one Presbyterian, one Catholic, The weather is very severe. We are rapidly arranging spring and summer dates. We continue.—C. C. Atwood, Nelson Gardner general evangelists.

Lyndon, Feb. 17.—The meeting at Lyndon conducted by Holloway and Shaffer continues with 10 additions to date. The interest growing. Holloway and Shaffer are a strong team.—J. F. Powers, pastor.

Ottawa, Feb. 17.—We recently closed a short meeting with home forces, resulting in 18 confessions and 18 added otherwise. Church is hopeful.—Chas. S. Earley.

Hiawatha, Feb. 18.—Brother Dutcher is conducting a meeting with good interest.—Mrs. M. L. Staley..

Lyndon.—The meeting conducted by Holloway and Shaffer continues with 10 additions to date. The interest growing.—J. F. Powers, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Lathrop.—Our work progresses. The church being without a pastor in December we had the C. W. B. M. collection ($20.25) late.—J. G. Creason.

Queen City, Feb. 10.—Meeting starts off with great prospects; 13 confessions, 9 last night. Meeting not yet one week old. J. Edward Cresmer, of Des Moines, Ia., is the evangelist. Brother Cresmer has in him the material for making one of our greatest evangelists.—P. M. Lind.

Excelsior Springs.—Our meeting with Bro. Jesse Gusham, pastor, lasted three weeks and three days. We had many things to hinder yet our audiences were good during all the meeting. The ingathering was 21, all grown people and most of them heads of families. They are all good, substantial members. The children were brought in—forty or more—during last year's meeting. The spiritual interest was deep, reaching out and quickening all the activities of the church, also upon all who came to the meetings. It was more of a sowing than a reaping. The church is growing united, harmonious, spiritual, progressive, and is planning for great things in the future. Brother Gusham is highly respected by his fellow townspeople. The Christian-Evangelist has a large and warm place in the heart of this people and I find it holding the first place among the many papers taken by this church.—M. F. Redlien, evangelist.

NEBRASKA.

Hastings, Feb. 8.—B. B. Burton, evangelist, and Lucile May Park, song leader. will lead us in a series of meetings beginning Lord's day, Feb. 12. We are preparing for a great meeting. We had one by letter and one by confession—both young men—to unite with us Feb. 5. Thirty-four have been added to our membership the past year at regular services. Hastings is a growing city of 12,000 population and we ought to have a strong church here, and shall if we work to that end.—H. F. Gilliam.

Beaver City, Feb. 17.—One confession last night, at our second service. This church is one of the best in Nebraska. T. S. Donner, of Kansas, is the new pastor. Brother Altheida, of Iowa, is my singer. We expect 200 souls in this meeting.—W. L. Harris, evangelist.

NEW JERSEY.

Plainfield, Feb. 12.—Two additions Feb. 3—one from Presbyterians and one by statement.—Phil. A. Parsons.

NEW YORK.

Niagara Falls.—Three confessed Christ at our regular service Lord's day, Feb. 12. Seven young men were baptized at the night service, four of these already reported.—J. A. Wharton.

Troy, Feb. 13.—The Brooks Bros. begin a meeting with the River street church next Lord's day. We have had seven additions, five by baptism, one by letter and one by statement from a denominational church, at our regular services in the last three weeks.—G. B. Townsend.

Dunkirk, Feb. 13.—Work progressing. Bible-school growing. Eight confessions at regular services since the new year. Bro. S. I. Corey, state evangelist, is teaching us in special meetings beginning last night with full house and three confessions—two fathers and one mother.—R. P. McPherson.

OHIO.

Rudolph, Feb. 10.—Brother and Sister John E. Pounds, of Cleveland, held a 19 days' meeting with us in January. There were 20 additions: 18 confessions and two by statement from other denominations. We had two other accessions by letter in January.—John Munro.

Lowell, Feb. 13.—We are in a good meeting here. Nine additions to date. Miss McKibben, of Lima, sang for us last week and Mrs. Cooper, of Wheeling, W. Va., will sing for the remainder of the meeting. Miss McKibben goes to Reno.—John Mullen, McConnelsville, Ohio.

Cleveland, Miles avenue church, Feb. 6.—After the meeting closed here with 120 additions there were four more added yesterday. At the reception the pastor, J. Alfred Fleming, was surprised and presented with a handsome gift in gold from the church and new members.—J. E. H.

Findlay.—At the First church we had six additions during January, four by primary obedience.—C. H. Barr.

Millwood, Feb. 10.—I closed a six days' meeting here this evening, with four added by commendation from other churches. This makes a total of 11 added here since January 1. Begin fifth year's work here soon.—A. E. Meek.

Ravenna, Feb. 10.—Closed a three weeks' meeting here to-night with 52 additions, 49 by confession and three by statement. A large per cent were young people, many from homes not represented in the church. Geo. Darsie, of Massillon, assisted me. He did a splendid work with us. This is one of the very best meetings the Ravenna church has ever experienced, and our hearts are rejoiced.—M. E. Chatley, pastor.

Geneva, Feb. 8.—Closed a four weeks' meeting here last Lord's day. Home forces. Forty-four additions, 16 the last day, 21 baptisms, eight restored, six from the denominations and nine by letter. Six others not reported, one by baptism and five by letter. C. A. Kleeberger was with us the last few days in the Bible-school's interests and helped to make last Lord's day the climax of the meeting—the largest attendance at Bible-school in years.—Frank M. Field.

Youngstown, Feb. 6.—Seven additions yesterday to the Third church, two a week ago: eight by confession, one by commendation. S. H. Bartlett, secretary of the O. C. M. S., comes to-day to hold a series of meetings.—L. J. McConnell.

Warren.—The meeting, though greatly interfered with by grippe getting hold of both pastor and singer, was continued for two weeks with outside help and resulted in 34 accessions. Ten have been added since and there is a deep spiritual interest in all departments of the church.—J. E. Lynn.

New Holland, Feb. 14.—My meeting at Big Springs, resulted, one by letter, one reclaimed, four baptisms. They all “count.”—W. W. Harris.

Akron, Feb. 15.—I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., has just closed a very successful series of meetings with the High street church, Akron. There were 47 additions to the church, most of them by baptism. But the accessions to the membership by no means measures the good results of Brother Spencer's work with us. The church has been given new inspiration and new hope and we feel sure we can do a better work for the future. Not a single objection has been heard to Brother Spencer, his preaching or his methods; the church simply rejoices in the privilege of having heard him. There is one element of power in Brother Spencer's preaching that many preachers would do well to study and try to attain. While he preaches the same simple gospel one usually hears at evangelistic meetings he does it so as to make that gospel appear as the mercy and goodness of God granted unto men. The love of God is made to appear in all the plan of salvation. We greatly prefer this method to the method that makes the steps of salvation appear as dogmatic requirements and must then prove the love of God from some other phase of his dealings with man. The weather throughout the entire meeting was very cold and the success was somewhat hindered.—J. G. Slayter.

Marion, Central Christian church.—Ten days' meeting with five additions. One came last Sunday. Work is very hopeful. Will build next summer.—O. D. Maple.

OKLAHOMA.

Alva, Feb. 11.—We closed our meeting here February 9. We had bad weather and four of the denominations ran a “union” meeting at the same time. There were 58 additions: four Methodists, one Baptist, one Catholic, one Presbyterian, one U. B., two reclaimed, five by relation and the rest from the world. Mrs. W. T. Green led our singing. I did my own preaching. We will go to Capron next week and hope to plant a church there.—E. A. Newby, minister.

Wellston.—F. M. Monroe is in a meeting with J. M. Cameron here, with 76 additions up to February 1.

Newkirk, Feb. 15.—We have just closed what the people say is the greatest meeting Newkirk has ever had. E. W. Brickert, of San Antonio, Tex., did the preaching. There were 26 accessions, all of whom, excepting two, were grown folks, and more than half of them were heads of families. The town is deeply stirred and all classes are talking New Testament Christianity. Sister Brickert came near the close, and gave us some touching solos. The prayers of our people attend Brother and Sister Brickert in their new field.—F. D. Wharton, pastor.

OREGON.

Roseburg, Feb. 6.—Two added yesterday by statement.—Geo. C. Ritchey.

The Dalles, Feb. 13.—Our meeting at Hood river valley closed after continuing 22 days. There were 44 added to the church—40 by confession and baptism. We began here Feb. 5. In the first eight days there have been 15 added.—T. S. Handsaker and wife, evangelists.

was being remodeled. During period of service there were 32 added—18 by statement and 14 by primary obedience. Richard S. Martin did the preaching.

Vanderbilt, Feb. 14.—Closed a meeting of sixteen days with the church here last night. There were 21 additions—16 by baptism and six by statement. C. B. Knight is pastor. I begin at Big Run, Feb. 19.—F. A. Bright, evangelist of Western Pennsylvania.

TEXAS.

Gonzales.—Notwithstanding the extremely bad weather, the meeting at this place was a success, resulting in 27 additions—25 of them clear gain. R. Lee Courtney is the beloved pastor of the church and having so recently taken to himself a wife who is in love with church work, we may expect the Gonzales church to soon rank among our best. When these lines are read the writer will be in a meeting at Baton Rouge, La.—B. B. Sanders.

Leadonia, Jan. 30.—The report of the church during the 14 months of my ministry from November 1, 1903 to December 31, 1904: the number of additions here was 40 and elsewhere 42, a total of 82. I held two district missionary meetings and assisted in organizing one new congregation. One ladies' aid organized here. The Junior C. E. society supports one orphan in India. The church membership is now 257. The total received in collections and pledges for the fourteen months was $9,819.97. I resigned my work here January 1, and am now open to engagements for evangelistic work and any one desiring my services can address me here.—E. V. Spicer.

WASHINGTON.

Waitsburg, Feb. 7.—After running five weeks our revival meetings closed last Sunday. S. G. Griffith did the preaching. There were 30 additions—22 confessions, three by letter, and five from other churches. Sickness kept many away from the meetings. Brother Griffith is in a meeting at Pullman at present. —W. T. Adams.

Spokane, Feb. 6.—Our meeting at the Central closed last evening with 82 added to the church. B. B. Burton did the preaching for five weeks and brought to us the experience of many successful years both as pastor and as evangelist. He keeps sweet to the end. This meeting leaves us with a membership of about six hundred. Last year, without any special service, we had 129 additions, 45 by confession and baptism. The same number, 129, were added the year before at regular services. The church raised last year all told nearly $10,000. All departments are in good condition and growing healthfully. By the way, the northwest has not been before so favored with large meetings and able evangelists. McHatton, Dorris, Coombs, Burton, McConnell, Romig and Rose have been doing large things this year in East Washington and Oregon, and we are to hear from Updike and I hope others. This is a ripe field. It receives no unmerited attention. A forward movement may be expected as this section is now better pastored than for some time.—B. E. Utz.

Cheney, Feb. 7.—Our church is in a meeting with home forces. In one week there have been eight additions—seven by confession and baptism. In the past two months there were 14 additions.—Mrs. M. A. Spangle, clerk.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Wheeling.—Since beginning my work with Island Christian church, on Christmas day, have received into the church 11, besides my own family. Eight by letter, one of them from Baptists; one by statement; two by baptism, one of them from the Methodists. Every department growing. Special evangelistic services begin Feb. 5.—C. Manly Rice.

WYOMING.

Sheridan, Feb. 16.—We have had four additions to the church since last report, three by letter and one baptism. Last Lord's day morning the thermometer registered 42 below zero, and our Sunday-school attendance was 73. Who can beat that in a church of 150 members? The writer can be had for a meeting in March or April.—F. E. Blanchard.

Dedication at Yates Center, Kansas.

I have just returned from Yates Center, Kansas, where I dedicated the church building. It is a most beautiful house, whether we look at the exterior or the interior. The ceiling is of a handsome design in decorative corrugated iron. The choir loft is unique. The large lecture room is seated with easy chairs, and opens into the main auditorium with large, sliding windows. The pastor's study is to the right of the pulpit, and is fitted up with gas lights, telephone, handsome desks and chairs. The entire building is heated by a gas furnace. The basement is to have a reading room, gymnasium and perhaps bath room. Altogether it is one of the best houses owned by our people in Kansas. Dedication day was a red-letter day for Yates Center. All the other churches in the city with their pastors attended the dedication. Several preachers from surrounding churches were also present. Bro. J. G. Slick, the hard-working and very successful pastor of the church, was master of ceremonies, and in a most beautiful and graceful way presided over the exercises. Brother Slick is a model Christian gentleman, a preacher of exceptional ability and a pastor who knows how to reach the people and win their hearts. There was a $4,000 debt to provide for, but the giving was so generous that it was all provided for at the morning service. At the close of the sermon at night there were five accessions to the church, three by confession and baptism and two by letter. We shall not soon forget this happy trip to the sunflower state.

It Grows in Estimation.

I have just been re-reading Aylsworth's "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism." It is one of those books of abiding value that proves better after a second or third reading. If our evangelists would saturate themselves in spirit, and preach after its style, there would be no cause for complaint as to the results of their fruitage. Chas. M. Fillmore.

"The Christian Lesson Commentary," by W. W. Dowling (8vo. cloth, 386 pages, price $1, St. Louis, Christian Publishing Company,) is the twentieth consecutive issue of this aid on the International Lessons to Bible teachers and advanced students. The helps are in part original and in part selected, the main purpose having been to throw all possible light on the Scriptures.—United Brethren Review.

I commend very highly "The Christian Lesson Commentary" for 1905 by W. W. Dowling. I am acquainted with many others, but know of no superior. It is an advantage to have the Common Version and the Revised side by side. The Christian Publishing Co. has done a great work in publishing this standard work for twenty years. Success to the teachers of 1905. A. M. Growden.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The editor says "be brief." We will try to do as he says. Our message this week is on the Home Department of the C. W. B. M. This is for the benefit of those interested in missions, and especially in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and who live in places where there is no auxiliary to our board. Any person may become a member of the Home Department by subscribing for the Missionary Tidings, and paying the regular monthly offering of fifteen cents, which constitutes auxiliary membership everywhere. So many sisters write that they wish they could help in this cause, but, "there is no auxiliary here, and very little interest taken in the missionary cause, I am sure it would be useless to organize here." For such, the Home list will exactly meet the needs. They cannot have the monthly meetings until a Home Department band shall develop into an active auxiliary; but they may have the joy of giving something to help along the splendid cause, and be, at the same time, laying foundations for a larger work. Anyone in Missouri wanting further information about this list write to the secretary. We ought to have at least one hundred Home Members inside of three months. Let us hear from you, my sisters. While we write, a letter from Mrs. R. B. Helser, of Fayette, comes with the good news of the reorganization at that place. She says, "Everything comes to those who wait. You have waited long for the auxiliary at Fayette to be started again, and now it is started. To-day, in spite of the cold weather, 13 of the good women met with Mr. Helser for the purpose of organizing; and we organized. We have elected our officers and adopted the constitution and by-laws laid down for the auxiliary. Our officers are: Mrs. R. B. Helser, Mrs. Frank Quinn, Mrs. Jack Burkhart, Mrs. Joe Withers. Tidings Committee, Mrs. John Bradley. Lookout Committee, Mrs. Sam Brown. Program Committee, Mrs. Florence Armstrong." We most gladly welcome this auxiliary back to our hearts, and trust we shall never let go of it again. May God bless this dear pastor and his faithful wife.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

THE CHURCH ESSENTIALLY MISSIONARY.

(Read Mark 5:19 and Matt. 28:18-20.)

The last passage cited above is the great commission which Jesus gave to his disciples, after his resurrection, and just prior to his ascension. He announces to them that all authority in heaven and on earth had been given into his hands, and on the basis of that he commanded them to go and "make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Its Universality. Notice the universal scope of this commission. "All authority;" "all the nations;" "to observe all things;" "with you always." There is no limit to his authority, and there is no limit to the gospel which is intended not only for "all the nations," but "for every creature." Nor is there any limit to his promise to be with his disciples, who are engaged in this work, except the end of this age, or gospel dispensation. Any limitations which men may make in either one of these respects is therefore without any divine sanction. This harmonizes with the statements concerning Christ's mission and death for all men. The angel that announced his birth to the shepherds said, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people" (Luke 2:10). Again, "God so loved the world"—not a part of it merely—"that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth on him"—without regard to race, nationality, color, or any other distinction—"might have eternal life" (John 3:16).

The ground of our obligation to send the gospel to others. 1. The "all authority" of Christ commands it. This is enough. He is our commander, and we are followers of him (Matt. 28:18-20).

2. "The love of Christ constraineth us." If we love men as Christ loved them, we can but do what in us lies to save them. Love for humanity is the great impelling power that lies behind all efforts to evangelize the world. It was love that brought Christ into the world and it is love that is sending out his disciples into all parts of the earth with the good news of the gospel.

3. The world's needs call us to missionary endeavor. Who that has learned the condition of the heathen world, without Christ, does not feel impelled by a sense of obligation to have them share with us the benefits of the gospel? Idolatry, superstition, hopelessness as to the life beyond, and all the abominations associated with heathendom—these appeal to us to send the gospel to all the nations.

4. We can best show our gratitude to Christ for our salvation in extending it to others. When Jesus had cast the demons out of the man who met him out of the tombs, and the grateful man desired "that he might be with him," Jesus "suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go to thy house unto thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and how he had mercy on thee" (Mark 5:19). This teaches clearly what Jesus would have us do now by way of showing our gratitude to him—pass on the blessing to others.

Benefit of sharing in this work of preaching the gospel. The promise of Christ to those who engage in this work is, "Lo, I am with you always." The church that has Christ with it, and in it, as the energizing power of its activities, is bound to be a growing, successful church. This is scripture, and it is also history. It is also our present-day experience and observation that the most prosperous churches among us to-day are those which are enlisted in missionary work, and their prosperity is in proportion to the degree in which they give themselves to this great essential work of the church. This is natural and reasonable. That is what the church is for. Why should a church prosper that is not fulfilling the purpose for which it was established? How can it fail to prosper if it is engaged in such work?

Falling into line. Every year a larger number of our churches observe the first Lord's day in March as the day dedicated to foreign missions, and make an offering for this holy work. We trust that no church into which the Christian-Evangelist goes and which uses these topics will fail to make an offering for foreign missions during the month of March.

Prayer: Oh, God, our Father, since Thou didst so love us as to send us Thy Son to be our Savior, and the Savior of the whole world, may we, who have tasted the sweetness of His redeeming love, have a share, according to our ability, in sending this glorious gospel to the ends of the earth. Forbid that we should be narrow and selfish and withhold from others the blessings which have so enriched our own lives. And in our efforts and sacrifices to extend Thy gospel may we have the realization of Christ's presence with us. We ask it in His name. Amen.

THE MAKING OF A CHRISTIAN: HIS SPEECH.—Ps. 145:1-12, 21; Matt. 10:32, 33.

(Consecration Meeting.)

For the Leader.

The making of a Christian is a topic upon which the young people of our church are well posted. We have a ready fund of knowledge on hand on this theme. There is one phase of the subject, or rather a result of becoming a Christian, that is much misunderstood. This is not confined to any Protestant church. I refer to the speech that should characterize a Christian. There is a very careless vein in the church, a vein running through nearly every circle of the church. Pure speech should characterize a Christian. There should be a reverent speech. There should be an effort to own the Lord in our speech. If out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, then there is certainly an abundance of irreverence in the hearts of the people of God to-day. One is shocked at every turn to hear the language of Christian people. Let us see to-night if we can not call out some of the ways in which we are falling below the mark in respect of our speech.

For the Members.

1. The 145th Psalm is a very devout piece of literature. How the writer pours out his heart in that Psalm! He is a true lover of God. He is an adorer of the Most High. He can not sufficiently express, it seems, the contents of his heart. What a fine example of the devout worshiper of God! This man was not permitted to live in the day of the fullness of the Christ. Yet he excels us in many respects. He was devout. How much more should we be devout in speech, with our advantages!

2. Do we think that we should leave behind us something that can be used by oncoming generations as the generation of the Psalmist is being used by us to-night? Why not? Here are David and others who are, though long since gone home, furnishing us with vehicles for the expression of our praise to God. We should be making some for ourselves. If our generation has to borrow its forms for expressing its devotions from another generation, it indicates a decreasing devotion in us.

3. Shall we forever be borrowers? Here we are not able to say for ourselves how the Lord has blessed us. We have not fitting forms for the expression of our thoughts toward God. How is that? It is better than not at all. But, I tell you, if one is always a borrower he will some day be a bankrupt man. If this generation is living upon the bounty of another, some day this bounty will run out, some day the end of the rope will be reached, some day the slack will all be taken up, and we will not be able to keep up this system of bookkeeping that has concealed the fact of our insolvency. That will be a sad day.

4. Just a word with Christian people as to the speech that characterizes many of us. First, there are the substitutes for careless profanity. Some of these words have the name of God in them, or the name of Jesus, or a contraction of that name. Women as well as men are guilty. It should cease. One becoming a Christian should be made new in speech as well as in heart. If he is made new in heart, some say, he will be Christian in speech. Second, there are the substitutes for angry profanity. Men and women who would not use commonly accepted profanity when angry, use substitutes nearly the same, for the same purpose. What is the difference? Very little. The speech should be cleansed of all this.

5. Then, let us consider the other side. We have been looking into the speech that we should not use. Now let us consider the speech that we should use. There are such things as dumb spirits. The dumb devil is the hardest to cast out. We are not guiltless from the fact that we have left off the forbidden speech, but we must use the good speech for the glory of God and for our good. We must testify in the assembly of the young Christian. It will help us to grow. It is a means of grace. It will help others. They see us and they are helped to do their duty. They say, "There is my friend speaking for the Lord, why not I? I must say a word for the Lord. I must do my duty." Let there be more talking in our societies. We must show forth the love that is in our hearts in the assembly more than we have been accustomed to do.

Quiet Hour Thought.

When I complain of its being hard to take part in the Endeavor meeting, is it because I have not given the matter thought, because I have not taken time to prepare something to say?

THE PASTOR AND MODERN MISSIONS: A PLEA FOR LEADERSHIP IN WORLD EVANGELIZATION. By John R. Mott, M. A., F. R. G. S. (Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions. $1.00.)

The general outline of this book is essentially the same as that followed in a course of lectures at Ohio Wesleyan university, at Yale, at McCormick and at Princeton. The table of contents is as follows: The non-Christian world at the beginning of the twentieth century and its message to the churches of Christendom; the pastor as an educational force in the world's evangelization; the pastor as a financial force in the world's evangelization; the pastor as a recruiting force in the world's evangelization; the pastor as a spiritual force in the world's evangelization; the pastor's missionary library.

John Mott is the best known man in missionary circles alive. He is the best equipped man living to write such a book as this. He is the head and heart of the student volunteer movement. He has visited all the fields and studied the problems of the missionary enterprise with care. John R. Mott has a great brain, and he is able, as few are, to take in the situation.

To his mind the work of missions is the greatest work of the church. It is not a by-play or a by-work, it is the first work our Lord assigned his followers. He holds that the real problem of foreign missions is in the home churches, and without the pastors it cannot be solved. Dr. Munger says, "The weak spot in missions to-day is not in the field, nor in the administration of the board, nor in the pews, but it is in the pulpit." Professor Christlieb asks, "Whence the great difference in interest in missions often in one and the same province? I answer, chiefly from the difference of the position taken by the clergy in this matter." Mr. Mott says, and truly, "Wherever you find a pastor with overflowing missionary zeal and knowledge, you will find an earnest missionary church." It is ever so. Here and there an exception may be found, but such exceptions are exceedingly rare. If the pastors are on fire with the missionary passion the churches will be kindled.

The minister's must teach and lead the people in missions as they do in all else that pertains to life and godliness. It has been well said that whatever the Lord Jesus wants the people to know or believe, the pastor ought to know and believe; whatever he wants the people to do, the pastor ought to do. When he was bishop of London Dr. Temple told the ministers of his diocese that they ought to preach twenty missionary sermons each year. When they said they did not know enough to do that he said they ought to know. If men in the pulpits will make it their business to keep themselves informed about missions no one will complain that missions are dwelt on too much. Such sermons will be anticipated with pleasure and heard with delight and profit. If stale platitudes and a superabundance of statistics are thrown into the form of a sermon, the preacher need not be surprised if the people sleep, or hear with little patience.

There are men who see nothing beyond their own little and local affairs. They lack the missionary passion. They do not lift up their eyes and look on the fields. They do not see the world through the eyes of Christ. They do not feel about it as Christ feels about it. They do not make sacrifices for its redemption as Christ made sacrifices for its redemption. They are sorry when the missionary days come and immensely relieved when they are over. Such men would do well to read and digest this book. Every minister in Christendom will be better for a careful study of its pages. If ministers were to read it once every three months the cause of Christ would be greatly advantaged. Others besides preachers should buy and read this great work.

THE KEY TO THE KINGDOM. By Dr. Charles E. Bradt. (Winona Publishing Co., Chicago. 50 cents net.)

This work, by the distinguished pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Wichita, Kan., is an exposition of the great commission. Dr. Bradt has had a settled conviction for years that the secret of all successful Christian work is found in literally obeying the commands of Christ to his followers. He has also come to believe that all these commands receive their true setting and sanction in the light of his latest and greatest command known as the great commission. When one comes to obey that command he is furnished with a proper stimulus to obey the other commands of Christ, such as: to pray; to be filled with the Spirit; to have faith, hope, love; to search the scriptures; to go, give, work, deny self; in fact, all the teachings of the Lord Jesus, the observance of which would help to cause God's kingdom to come. This book is well worthy of the study of God's people everywhere. No one can read it with care and moral earnestness without immense profit. It is on a subject that deserves special emphasis in this day.

POWERS.

Elmira M. Powers, long a member of the Richmond avenue church of Christ, Buffalo, "fell on sleep" Feb. 8, to awaken, we are sure, in the very presence of God. In November last she passed her ninetieth birthday. As long as she was permitted to be active she was "instant in season and out of season" in the cause of the Master, and, because she lived Christ, to her it was gain to die.

ANSON G. CHESTER.

SPECK.

Frederick Speck died at his home in Waynesboro, Pa., on Jan. 13, 1905, aged 86 years, one month, one day. He became a Christian about 1847 at Beaver Creek, Md., and was a faithful and liberal member there. For a good many years he lived in this part of Pennsylvania, but occasionally visited his church home. He became a charter member of the church at Waynesboro a year and a half ago.

SMITH.

On Friday night, Feb. 3, 1905, death removed from earth one of those sweet spirits whose lives are like beams of sunshine amid earth's shadows. Mrs. Elbert E. Smith, formerly Miss Mae Hinkle, was a faithful member of the Hyde Park Christian church, Kansas City, Mo. She was married on June 12, 1901, to Brother Smith, by the writer, of whose congregation she was at that time a member. Their short married life was one of unalloyed happiness. Mae was the favorite in the wide circle of relatives in both families, and her death the first to break that circle. She and her husband have been devoted workers in their church, and everybody who knew her grieves over what seems her untimely death. But we know that to one who loved the Lord as she did there can be nothing untimely, for God cares for his own, and she is forever at rest with him. May the everlasting arms be around her stricken young husband and all the mourning family, and fill them with the peace that abideth forever.

"Only Two."

By William Remfry Hunt.

Written at Ch'u Cheo city, Anhuei province, central China, on New Year's eve, after perusing a communication from the dear homeland, that out of all our colleges and universities, during the year, "only two" had offered themselves for service in the mission field.

'Mid the wealth, and the culture, and blessing,
Of our churches ten thousand strong;
From the ranks of its million members,
With its stewardship held so long—
Is it true, as 'twas whispered softly,
Lest the message should cross the main
And discourage the lonely workers
Assailing their faith to complain,
That in all the year, and from all the schools—
For the love of Christ and "those heathen fools"—
Aye, in answer to such prayer: that those Who offered, were "only two"?

While the men in the field were hard fighting,
Philosophies wrong and keen;
And the women with grace contending
Its idolatries, gross, obscene;
When the heart sighed for answers to longings,
And soul-battles racked us within;
A signal was flashed o'er dark Asia;
And with eyes that e'en sleep could not win,
We spelled out the mysterious spectre
Strange handwriting! "Stewards so few,
The church guards its sacred deposits
And offers its gift— 'only two.'"

While the millions of pagans are dying,
Shall we champion the testing of creeds,
While India and Burmah are sighing,
Will dim guesses meet their soul's needs?
Has the church lost its share in the trophies,
That we hold for the King in that day:
From Afric, and Cuba and Nippon,
With Thibetan, the Turk and Malay?
Though the least in the kingdom of service—
To his cross and his compass we're true
And 'twill outweigh all other ambitions—
That for Jesus we've "gained other two."

We ring loud for men, leaders, giants,
Whose anchors are tested and found—
With faith, hope, and love firmly 'stablished,
Lest should wreck mid the crags that abound!
See its worship, its loathsome oblations;
Such rude thoughts! Ah, too base to tell—
This product of heathen devotion
Stands black as its night, dark as hell!
Soul! ask thee, tho' some sun be shining
While races their god-search pursue;
Can'st thou yield to false lights of pagan,
And hide from them heaven's azure hue?

When worlds unto worlds are now linking,
And science dethroneth the gods,
Orient sons at our fountains are drinking,
New kingdoms acknowledge his word:
E'en now in these fairest of gardens,
Mid temples and shrines—to our shame
Are the sheaves we should render the Saviour,
With black rot and blight on its grain.
Who sent us and pledged his commission
Should all be fulfilled? Is it true
That the church of a million Disciples
Can find for its world-field so few?

Still, soul! begone thy vain boasting,
Achievements that never were done.
Such resting in easy quiescence,
With stern solemn duties to shun.
Arise! O thou church of the Saviour,
Hath thy lamp yet its oil, let it shine.
Trade thy talents, scatter seed now, or lose it
And haply thy birthright decline!
Tho' late; coin thy wealth, aye, and seal it
With the Christ's royal image anew—
And lift o'er these shade-lands new torches,
Nor shrink should the call come to you!

CHAPTER XXI.

THE NEW CHURCH.

The large congregation, on Thursday evening, was composed of members who were in favor of the change, quite a number who belonged to other churches, but had read Mr. Baxendale's book and were ready to take a stand with him, and likewise fifty or sixty who had never been identified with any fellowship. Also a large number of cards had been signed and sent in by people who could not attend the meeting.

Having opened the service with prayer and announced the object of the occasion, Mr. Randolph turned to ask Mr. Baxendale for a more detailed explanation of the course to be pursued, when Major Burns arose and said: "Mr. Chairman, I may be out of order, I have never taken part in religious gatherings and scarcely know how to behave. However, I want to become a member of this church, but I am not sure that its future policy will be exactly in line with my way of reading the New Testament. Thus far I have heard nothing about the form of baptism, and I believe in immersion. I, therefore, wish to ask if it will be out of order for me to be baptized in the apostolic way."

Following the major, Mr. Baxendale delivered an address, which surprised his audience, and yet everyone agreed with him save "Grandfather" Peterson. He said, in part: "I am glad the major has introduced the subject of 'baptism.' It was my purpose to call your attention to it before the meeting adjourned, and I shall now perform that duty. I, too, have recently given it careful consideration. The history of sprinkling, which is quite easily traced, together with the New Testament as a commentary upon the subject, and especially the universal definition given to the Greek word baptizo, convince me that immersion, only, is Christian baptism. But waiving all scriptural and scholastic discussions of the subject, I wish to place one fact before you. We have met to form a new organization, and the fundamental plea upon which we shall stand is 'The Union of God's People.' Eliminate it, and there can be no excuse for our existence as a church. I feel that the important mission, to which we have been so unexpectedly called, extends to the other churches of the city as well as to the unsaved in our midst.

"Our responsibility will be co-extensive with our influence, and our example must be consistent with our plea. The chief sin of denominationalism is its disposition to create and perpetuate divisions in the church by insisting upon things that are inconsequential. The denominations are agreed upon the real essentials to union, and they disagree upon things that are foreign to the object and necessary practices of Christianity. If humanisms were eliminated, the Savior's prayer is already answered. For example, all are agreed upon the New Testament creed and name of the church—the divisions are over the human creeds and names that have hung as 'millstones' about her neck. In regard to the subject in hand, the entire religious world acknowledges that immersion is valid baptism, while a large percentage does not believe—and never will—that sprinkling is baptism at all. So far as baptism is related to the divisions in the church, they exist entirely upon sprinkling. And since all agree that immersion is baptism, if affusion were eliminated, the greatest and most bitter controversy in the church would cease, without the sacrifice of anyone's convictions. If all, of every denomination, believe that immersion is baptism—and they do—why should any cling to the other, thereby perpetuating strife? Shall we?"

The meeting was harmonious throughout, and the business was transacted with unusual speed. "Immersion" was decided upon, it was agreed that the Lord's supper—free to all—should be celebrated every Sunday, four elders and twelve deacons were appointed, and Warren Williams was unanimously called to assist Mr. Baxendale.

As Mr. Randolph arose to adjourn the meeting, "Grandfather" Peterson slowly walked to the front and addressed the audience as follows: "My brethren, I am broken-hearted. You have departed from the faith and I cannot consistently retain my membership with you, neither can I get the consent of my mind to go elsewhere. My life has been spent here; my dearest friends have lived and died in this fold; in yonder pew my precious wife—long since gone home—worshiped with me; and—oh, God, what shall I do?" Here the old man broke down and sank into a nearby chair.

Stepping forward and taking one of the withered hands in both of his, Mr. Baxendale tenderly said: "Grandfather, we all love you devotedly and do not want you to worship elsewhere. If you cannot believe as we do, stay with us anyway. You shall keep your latch-key, and all the privileges you have heretofore enjoyed shall be accorded you so long as the Lord permits you to remain in our midst. Your long, useful life has been a great blessing to the Poplar Square church, and we hope that you will be spared many years yet to go in and out among us and to let the benediction of your beautiful, consecrated age fall upon us."

Mr. Randolph then offered the closing prayer, the entire audience sobbing and all feeling sad, but happy.

The last Sunday in September was another great day in the Poplar Square church. Mr. Baxendale had returned from his vacation feeling strong and looking altogether like a different man.

During his absence, Warren Williams had occupied the pulpit and superintended the putting in of the baptistery and the material changes incidental to this addition.

At the close of the anthem, which followed Mr. Baxendale's sermon on "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it," the curtain back of the pulpit was drawn, and the two preachers appeared in the baptistery. After a brief prayer by Mr. Williams, the great audience looked on in solemn silence while the beloved pastor was buried with his Savior by baptism.

At two o'clock in the afternoon, the service was reconvened, and the two preachers alternately occupied the baptistery, baptizing the candidates indiscriminately, as both members and non-members of the church presented themselves.

Mr. Randolph was the first to comply with the ordinance. After his baptism, he remained in the baptistery, and, assisting Major Burns down the steps, helped Mr. Baxendale to baptize him.

The service, which was interspersed with special music and congregational singing, closed at five o'clock. One hundred persons were baptized that afternoon, notably among them, Alma Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham and their son Ralph.

Baptismal services were held each evening during the week, except Saturday, and also the following Sunday afternoon. More than twelve hundred, in all, became obedient unto the new order and were enrolled as members of the church.

Mr. Steele and the nearly two hundred members who opposed Mr. Baxendale's proposition, resigned from the church and started a new congregation known as the Fourteenth ——— church, to the pastorate of which the Rev. William Augustus Thorn, the former assistant at Poplar Square, was called.

Good News for Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant, recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Asthma, as claimed at the time. We have received the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery.

Mrs. L. D. York, of Henderson, Me., writes, thanks be to my God and the Kola Compound I am now completely cured of Asthma after many years of suffering. Hon. L. C. Clute, of Manchester, Iowa, writes, was permanently cured of Asthma after eighteen years severe suffering and want other sufferers to know that the Kola Compound did it. Mr. E. B Hume, 1345 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., a widely known traveler writes was cured after physicians and everything else failed and I tried all so-called remedies known. Mrs. Sadie Montgomery, Lapel, Ind., writes, I could not lie down or walk fast for several years, but the Kola Compound cured me, although every other remedy failed.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Chinese Roads and Streets.

By Elliott I. Osgood, M. D.

Are the roads of this ancient empire broad and lined with beautiful elms like the roads in some parts of the New England states? Are they macadamized like the old Roman roads running through some parts of England? Or are they straight, running over mountains, across rivers and through valleys as the construction of the "great wall" of northern China might lead us to suppose?

They do have a few macadamized roads in some of the port cities which have been influenced by foreigners. When a tree gets as large as the elms of New England they put a fence about it, stick up a small shrine and it becomes an object of worship. "Only a god could keep a tree alive through four dynasties." The roads do go up and down the mountains and across valleys and rivers—if the water is low enough to ford—but they are the most crooked routes that a man ever walked.

Their fields are, in central China, fitted for irrigation. The road runs on the banks of the field. The fields are rarely more than an acre or two in extent. Many contain only a few square rods. They push out or recede according to the lay of the land. The road necessarily follows suit. It becomes in places a giant stairway laid on the side, adding from one-fifth to one-third of the air line distance between points. To add to the difficulty, the people cut small canals across this to irrigate on both sides of the road. One cannot ride faster than a walk in consequence. To still further increase the difficulties they will dig out the edge of the field for a water course and throw the earth up on the narrow road leaving it in the shape of a miniature mountain. You ride over the mountain ridge. The road on either side is flanked by miniature precipices, the field being several feet lower than the roadbed. Rains break these roadsides down, leaving a very narrow path perhaps a foot in width over which wheelbarrows, caravans of animals loaded with between 200 and 300 pounds of merchandise, horseback riders, sedan chairs, and thousands of footmen must pass.

They may span the cross irrigating ditch with a small bridge made of wooden poles covered with brush and dirt packed down. This in time will give way and a hole just large enough for an animal to put in its leg will stare up at the rider. No wonder the horses and donkeys learn to walk with bowed heads and a fixed stare at the ground.

At the beginning of the Ming dynasty over 400 years ago one of the emperors whose original home was in the northern part of Anhuei province, built or rather improved the road running from Nanking to Feng yang fu, a distance of 100 miles. This is the main caravan route from the north to Nanking. Continuously traveling on this 100 miles of road are no less than 10 000 wheelbarrows and as many pack animals, all capable of carrying from 200 to 350 pounds of freight.

He improved this road by building great bridges over the rivers, constructing dykes, where the water was likely to flood, widening the road to a minimum of 15 feet, and laying a pavement of cobble and cut stone through and out some distance from each market town and city through which the route passes.

No one repaired this road and now the bridges are in a dilapidated condition, the stone pavements are just so many individual stones lying about obstructing traffic, and fields have re-encroached upon the path, making it worse than before it was improved—if that is possible. Travelers go around the bridges and dodge the cobble stones, using them only when the depth of mud forbids their nonuse.

Other places the roads are mere paths, often mixed up in such confusion that one does not know whether he is on the route to a city or just taking some private path to an out-of-the-way farmhouse. There have never been any surveys, only a blazing of the way. Traffic has sought the easiest way between places, curving and twisting as necessity demanded. Sometimes some official, to gain favor with the people, will lay out a road or build a bridge but it is forever after neglected and relapses into a worse condition than before. It is entirely a private activity and the removal of the individual removes the possibility of permanency.

Cities and villages are laid out just as haphazard. A number band together for mutual protection and trade. They select a favorable site, perhaps by the aid of a fortune teller, and begin to build. There is first a main street, 10 to 20 feet wide. On either side of this they build their houses close together, the roofs making two continuous lines from one end to the other, The lines may be broken for a cross street. At the end of each street they erect a door. This effectually shuts out all night prowlers. Up and down this street at night parades the night watchman, beating his gong as he goes.

Newcomers to the place may build out on the outskirts. Later, as the number of these increases, new streets are added and they may curve in all directions to run past the doors of these later comers.

The layout of their roads and streets, as well as their evil habits, impracticable customs, and heathen worship, is so well described by a description of some American streets that we cannot refrain from quoting it. The author is unknown.

"One day through the primitive wood
A calf walked home, as all good calves should;
But made a trail all bent askew,
A crooked trail, as all calves do.
Since then two hundred years have fled,
And I infer the calf is dead.
But still he left behind his trail,
And thereby hangs a mortal tale.
The trail was taken up next day
By a lone dog that passed that way.
And then a wise bell-wether sheep
Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep,
And drew the flock behind him, too,
As good bell-wethers always do
And from that day, o'er hill and glade,

Through those old woods a path was made,
And many men wound in and out,
And dodged and turned and bent about,
And uttered words of righteous wrath,
Because 'twas such a crooked path;
But still they followed—do not laugh—
The first migration of that calf,
And through this winding woodway stalked
Because he wabbled when he walked.
This forest path became a lane
That bent and turned and turned again;
This crooked lane became a road,
Where many a poor horse, with his load,
Toiled on beneath the burning sun,
And traveled some three miles in one.
And thus a century and a half
They trod the footsteps of that calf.
The years passed on in swiftness fleet,
The road became a village street,
And this, before men were aware,
A city's crowded thoroughfare,
And soon the central street was this
Of a renowned metropolis.
And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf;
Each day a hundred thousand rout
Followed the zigzag calf about;
And o'er his crooked journey went
The traffic of a continent.
A hundred thousand men were led
By a calf near three centuries dead."

Similar is the inner history of this hoary empire. The road has dodged because a stone was there and no man took the time to remove it. It has dodged again because on it was a favorable elevation upon which to build a signal mound. It dodged again because forsooth some fortune teller decided a lucky spot upon which some farmer should build his house. It dodged again because a fortune teller decided that Li Hung Chang should find the luckiest place for his private burial place immediately across a great public highway. There have been times when rain has not come and the official has ordered the main gate of the city closed, and compelled the traffic to take a circuitous route to another out-of-the-way gate, all in order to appease some angry god. So have their homes and their temples and their public buildings been built. Born of fear, of desire for luck, or by mere chance, or to appease some god or demon, they have constructed their lives and all their possessions, yea, and all their hopes. No wonder China is topsy-turvy and within her is found no certain thing. They have missed the great root of all order, namely, faith in God, the ruler of all.

Lord's Day in India.

By Adelaide Gail Frost.

Yesterday as I sat in church and looked at the bright young faces which were upraised to the speaker, I thought what a joy it would be to such men as Brother Garrison, President Zollars, Bro. J. Z. Tyler and others, if they could expound the word of God to these young people who are to be pioneers, forerunners, messengers, to some of the darkest, most benighted corners of the earth. For they are to go to their own with three thousand years of "feeling after God," and wandering in blind ways back of them, but with a to-day filled with a light that they believe is great enough to lighten the whole world. These young faces shine as they sing:

"Nearer my God to Thee, Nearer to Thee!"

in their own tongue.

Perhaps some, even many of them, may know—

"E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me!"

but surely they will all find—

"Steps unto heaven."

As my eyes travel from face to face, I can but pause to recall some of the events of the past eight years in Mahoba, and I thank God for the blossoming time—such poor little dry brown stalks they were in the rainless days! There sits a refined looking girl, whose appearance made my flesh creep when first I saw her, though my heart was never repulsed. There is an older girl who used to sit with weak hands folded, looking blankly out into the cruel sunshine nearly all day long. She is singing cheerfully now. Here before me is a little girl whose parents belonged to an aboriginal hill-tribe near Harda; there is another near her with a pretty face whose ancestors were of the brewer-caste; what wild times she has seen, her last view of her mother was through a prison door! Yonder is a fair-faced girl of Brahmin descent. She, whom once the shadow of a sweeper woman would have contaminated, swept and papered the chapel room for this service; there is a child with the marks of the burns of a cruel mother-in-law; so many stories back of those young Christian faces; you, too, have seen the illumination of the spirit; it shines through brown skin as well as white.

The speaker begins, his chapter tells of the raising of Lazarus, and he goes from that story of the resurrection and the life to that clarion call of Isaiah: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." How that whole 60th chapter thrills one as he hears it read in such surroundings! How truly the speaker can picture the resurrection from the long death in sin and idolatry to greet the rising of the Son of Righteousness! We have few eloquent sermons from India's pulpits under green trees, by dusty roadsides, in crowded, primitive villages, or modest chapels erected amidst old and crumbling temples, but the stately, solemn words of the Book lift one, awe one with a new meaning in the East. What are the great things in this great age? Deep questionings come to me as I sit in church with the pleasant February afternoon air swaying the long sword-ferns in the windows. There are so many wonderful inventions, great books, big ideas, we can add little or nothing to any of them, but we can serve our generation in a great way by training the youth of the far east to be ready for what the west has wrought. What opportunities have we to influence wide areas in Christian lands! I cannot overcome my surprise that young men and women with the blood of conquerors in their veins do not come in great numbers to this battlefield. Our forefathers carved for themselves an inheritance from the wilderness; we are to return eastward to rebuild the ruined citadels of a past in east lands—shall the foundations be again laid in sand or upon the rock? I fear I am getting most of my sermon from the faces of the audience. It is time for the Lord's supper. More than one hundred commune in loving memory of the Christ of the east, of all lands. The words of "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow" ring out, and then the girls flit out into the sunset glow, a few grown Christians linger, but we are soon in the Sunday quiet of the mission home, and to me this is beginning to seem a most familiar Lord's day.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

Mr. Woodney returned to the middle room to dress. He said to his wife, "It is idle to lie there, my dear Geraldine, as sleep is impossible. Let us all arise and bend our forces to disposing of the dog. Then we can make up for this loss of sleep by staying in bed in the morning."

"Papa," called Mace, who had already begun to dress in the darkness, "who was that at the door?"

"Bob Enderthorpe. His mother is ill and she asks us to have our dog stop barking."

"Why, yes," said Mace's mother; "we might throw him some meat powdered with morphine. Wasn't it Cerberus they threw meat to in the story?"

"Cerberus had three heads," said Mr. Woodney. "If he hadn't been such a dog, he could not have barked with one while he was eating with the other two."

"Fortunately," called the grandmother, "the dog chained to our parlor door has only one head to our four, so we can surely devise some means of silencing him. Perhaps it will be best to go for Mr. Tumbleton."

"Who knows the way?" asked Mace. She lit a match. "Now are you all ready?" she called. "I'll make a paper torch for a lamp. Where is all that waste-paper we unpacked?"

"It is at the parlor door," said her mother. "I think the dog is bedding upon it. Don't get any paper, Mace, it might be pages from my manuscripts. Are we all ready?"

"Wait," cried her mother-in-law, "I have forgotten my teeth." Mace held up her match by the burnt end, while her grandmother hunted for her teeth. "I am sure I put them in the tall frosted glass," murmured the old lady, searching diligently, "but I cannot find the glass."

"I saw that tall frosted glass just before sundown," remarked her son. "Is it not on the organ?"

"Let us leave the teeth," counseled Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, "for the dog is plainly our superior if we meet him upon that level. Light another match, Mace, and let us march."

Mace went first, holding a lighted match. Her father walked by her side, his hand on her arm that he might be sure of his steps. The two ladies brought up the rear. They opened the front door and found Bob Enderthorpe upon the path in a state of painful embarrassment. "I am so sorry to cause all this trouble," he stammered awkwardly, "but mother is real nervous, and I thought you could make your dog keep still by just speaking to him."

"No," said Mr. Woodney, "we did speak to him, but it only made him worse. We are very sorry about your mother. Come in, and we will form some plan for silencing the dog." As if the beast heard and understood these words, a horrid din roused the echoes, caused by rattlings of the chain, plunges at the rear door, and deafening barks.

"This is our kitchen," said Mrs. Woodney, "but come in; the parlor is temporarily put out of action—to speak in nautical language."

"No, I will not come in," said Bob, reading hostility on Mace's countenance which the match revealed against the darkness in a ruddy glow. He looked as it were upon a picture by Rembrandt, the faces brought out in mellow light, but the forms shaded away to dim gloom. All appealed to him. The blind face of Mr. Woodney was gentle and calm, eloquent of a good life and a tender heart. The pensive, dreamy face of his wife, with the eyes which looked beyond the limits of household duties, and the refined, dignified and almost stern face of the older Mrs. Woodney, speaking of generations of culture and improvement—all this Bob liked. But the face of the young girl—of that he was not so sure. The abandon of the hair, and the evidence of hasty dressing, did nothing to lessen her charm. The very dark brown hair and the black eyes, the smooth dark cheeks, the pretty mouth and chin and throat—all this was very well. But the eyes were so unfriendly and the mouth compressed in such haughty lines, while the little chin was tilted up in such a disdainful angle, and the glance which she cast upon him was so superior, not to say scornful, that all her beauty went for nothing. "I will go back," he said hastily, "and tell mother you can't stop the dog."

"I beg of you not to do so," said Mr. Woodney. "Can you not advise us? The fact is the dog has not yet learned to know us—he is new to the family—and we are afraid of him. He has kept us awake, as well as your mother, and it would be a real kindness if you could come to our rescue."

Mace lit another match. Bob considered deeply. "If father were at home," he said at last, "he could help us. But he and

The Round Table
A NEW WEEKLY FOR GIRLS AND BOYS

EDITORS { W. W. DOWLING, Editor Our Young Folks.
METTA A. DOWLING, Editor The Young Evangelist.

This New Paper is issued weekly and consists of eight pages of three columns each, printed on fine book paper, bran-new type, in the best style of the art, and as far as appearance is concerned, will not suffer in comparison with any similar paper in the land.

For Whom Intended. THE ROUND TABLE is a paper for wide-awake, bright-eyed Boys and Girls in their "early teens," who are a little too old for The Young Evangelist and not quite far enough along in years and in their tastes and acquirements to be greatly interested in the material which goes into the columns of Our Young Folks, which is intended for young men and women who are engaged in Bible Study and Christian Work, especially along Sunday-school and Endeavor lines.

Its Contents. THE ROUND TABLE is quite distinctly a "Story Paper," five of its eight pages will usually be occupied with Serial and Shorter Stories, always pure in tone and instructive in character, with fine illustrations. The remaining pages will be filled with Table Talks on a great variety of themes; Odds and Ends of useful information; Outlines of the Sunday-school Lessons and Endeavor Topics; A Puzzle Drawer full of Riddles, Charades and Problems, to exercise the wits of young readers, and in each issue a sufficient amount of Pepper and Spice to keep its readers awake and smooth out any wrinkles that may have a tendency to gather in their faces.

Subscription Price. One copy, one year, 50 cents; in clubs of five, to one address, 40 cents each; in clubs of ten or more to one address, 36 cents each. Quarterly subscriptions at proportional rates.

Address, Christian Publishing Company,

my brothers have gone to Kansas City. If it is a little dog, I could put him in a bag—"

"He is not at all little," said Mrs. Woodney. "He is much larger than a bag. If there were some means of directing his thoughts into another channel, I think it would be all right. He has fallen into a habit of barking every five seconds, and he does it automatically. Should he ever stop, he might not think to begin again. We wouldn't mind a continuous noise so much as that regular sound at every five seconds."

"Then I have it," said Bob. "I will bring my lantern and go around there and create a diversion."

"You talk like a soldier," said Mr. Woodney smiling. "Perhaps you think of entering West Point when you are older."

Mace smiled sarcastically at her father's innocent remark, for nothing could be less soldierlike than Bob's awkward bearing.

"No," he said, "I hope one day to be a awyer."

Mace lit another match.

"A lawyer?" said Mr. Woodney very much interested. "That is a delightful profession. I followed law the first five years of my married life. I wonder if I couldn't be of help to you? I have a good many lawbooks, and they are all at your service."

"Oh, Mr. Woodney!" cried the youth, his tone thrilling with amazed delight. "Would you let me look at them?"

"Look at them!" cried the other. "You shall read them aloud to me, and I'll explain the difficulties."

Bob blushed. "I know so little, sir; I have been on the farm all my life—and am yet. I go to school here in the village—I couldn't put such a weight upon you."

(Bow! wow! wow! Bow! wow! wow! Boof!)

"My dear young friend," said Mr. Woodney, laying his hand upon the other's shoulder, "when a person wants to give me anything I am always glad if I haven't it, because it's such a pleasure to him to help me. And usually I haven't it, either! Now it will give me as much pleasure to help you as it will you to be helped. So you won't deny me the privilege. Have you ever looked at Blackstone?"

"I think," spoke up the grandmother, "that he had better look at the dog, now, and save Blackstone for daylight." Mace lit another match. Bob, being thus recalled, hurried after his lantern. He soon returned and carried it around to the back door.

"Why, hello, Pup!" he cried in surprise. "What are you doing here?"

Pup whined, and wagged his tail. The Woodneys would have followed, but the dog, detecting the first odor of their intention, barked frantically. "There, there!" said Bob, patting his huge head. "Be quiet! Mr. Woodney, his chain is nailed to the doorfacing with big staples."

"Can you not remove the doorfacing?" called the master, from a safe distance. "We would part with the entire doorpost if need be."

"The doorfacing is loose," called Bob. "At least only one nail seems to keep it in place. But I don't like to take it off."

"We do not want it," called the other. "If you can't take the chain off the dog, take as much of the house as you need."

"If you will all go inside and close everything, I will take the chain off the dog," shouted Bob; "but I couldn't hold him. He seems wild to get at you." The family went inside and presently Mrs. Woodney called "Ready!" as if they were playing a game of hide-and-seek. The chain was unsnapped and the dog went plunging about the house, trying every wall for entrance. Mr. Woodney climbed up to the little parlor-window and called Bob under the opening. "I am sure I have it now," he said. "A Tumbleton fastened the dog to our door, so he think she was brought to keep us prisoners. He makes more noise loose than when chained up. If it would not be too much trouble for you to bring Mr. Tumbleton, I wish you would ask him to take Pup away. Tell him we do not care to buy him; and tell him the price is no consideration."

When at last Mr. Tumbleton's oldest child had carried the dog home, and quiet once more settled upon the new home, Mr. Woodney remarked, "Do you know, I like that young Bob Enderthorpe very much, indeed?"

"Can you recall any one," asked his wife, "whom you do not like?" Her husband laughed.

Popular Hymns No. 2.

By C. C. CLINE.

The ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. POPULAR HYMNS No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

Evangelists will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

Choristers will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

Christian Endeavorers will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-inspiring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. Superintendents who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church.

Pastors who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in style.

Like its predecessor, IT IS AN ALL ROUND BOOK.

GOD ALL AND IN ALL

REARED on the heights of towering mountain-side,
Fed with the storms that drive their cruel way,
Filled with the sight of myriad flaring fires,
A nature rare;
Daily the clouds about his dwelling ride,
Nightly the stars majestic music play;
E'er comes the word that ne'er the hearer tires—
That God is Power.

'Mid meadow's wealth of flower and grasses green,
Where flows the stream along its quiet path,
Where birds of morn awake the sleeping earth,
A poet dwells;
The whispering zephyrs play in Summer's sheen,
The twilight dips the earth in roseate bath;
The message fills his soul, with each day's birth—
God Beauty is.

How God has through the ages wrought,
How universe from atoms has been formed,
How man developed Godward step by step,
The sage's quest;
The rocks for him are filled with wondrous thought,
The savage and the statesman wisdom-armed,
All in his mind the message e'er beget—
That God is Wise.

Born in a land where peace and plenty dwell,
Held in the arms of fond affection e'er,
Fed with the truth of kindly charity,
Piety's son;
Spring's newborn glow, the Summer's lingering tale,
Autumn's twilight and Winter's sheltering care,
All bade him in their beauty rare to see
That God is Love.

Workingmen will find it poor economy to employ ordinary laundry soaps for personal use. Those soaps contain free alkali, which injures the skin, and makes it rough and sore. Ivory Soap is pure, and is soothing to the skin; it is cheap enough to be within the reach of all.

Side-Lights on a Public Office.

Henry A. Castle, Auditor of the Post-Office department, taps strange veins of human nature in the conduct of his office. "Careless, Ignorant, and Defiant Postmasters," contributed by him to the March McClure's, is a collection of the queer flotsam caught in the web of the red tape. From a Texas town a courteous citizen sent this mild protest against the too strenuous manners of the "lady postmistress."

"We don't set up any claim that our manners are all they should be, but we'd like to be reasoned with and helped along. The postmistress here is a worthy woman, all right, but she certainly is rude and hasty. One day last week, the mayor being some flushed up and careless, refused to move his hat and bow on asking for the official mail, whereupon his hat was shot off and plumb ruined. There's another thing we don't think is fair. This postmistress won't let niggers and greasers come into the office under any consideration. We ain't over fond of niggers and greasers ourselves, but it is sure discommoding for the leading citizens to have to go to the post office personally to get their mail, just because this lady don't like to see anything but a gentleman. We don't like to appear fault-finding and picayunish where a lady is concerned, but this one I'm talking about is sure arbitrary and abrupt, and we'd like to have her toned down some."

The North Sea Decision. A compromise decision has been rendered by the special international commission to which was committed the task of investigating the attack upon the British trawlers in the North Sea by the Russian Baltic squadron. The incident seemed so clear at the time—to the non-Russian mind, at least—and the action of Admiral Rojestvensky and his men so indefensible, that even the most indignant Englishmen were not wholly averse, after a little consideration, to an investigation by an impartial tribunal. It seemed safe. The commission has, to some extent, disappointed British expectation in laying no serious blame on the commander of the Russian squadron, but it sustains Great Britain's protest in the essential points. The commission recognizes that, under the circumstances and considering the warning that had been given to him by the commander of the transport Kamchatka, Admiral Rojestvensky was justified in ordering his men to keep a sharp lookout, and to be prepared for any torpedo attack that might be made upon the squadron. It is recognized, however, that the fishing fleet committed no hostile act, that there was no torpedo boat either among them or in their vicinity, and that the Russian squadron was not justified in firing upon the fishing fleet. In this last point the Russian member of the commission did not agree. It is further found that Admiral Rojestvensky personally did all that he could to prevent actual firing upon the trawlers, and that he is not to be blamed for ordering the squadron to continue on its route on account of the great uncertainty as to the presence of hostile vessels. The commissioners state that their finding does not "cast any disrespect upon the military valor or upon the sentiments of humanity of Admiral Rojestvensky and the personnel of his squadron." It was not within the province of the commission to suggest indemnity, since the Czar's government had already offered to pay the damages. The decision leaves the incident as a bad blunder by a good officer, for the results of which his government is responsible. This ought to come as near to satisfying both England and Russia as anything could. It does not take into account the condition of semi-panic which probably existed on the Russian vessels, but it is doubtless as close an approximation to the truth as could be arrived at.

War or Peace? With riots at a dozen points in the Caucasus, renewed strikes on a serious scale in St. Petersburg, portentous mass meetings of students openly denouncing the government in the very capital of the empire, another prince assassinated within the week, Poland apparently ripe for any kind of insurrection and Finland struggling again to get back some of the ancient prerogatives of her popular assembly, it would seem that the czar might more easily make peace with the Japanese than with the Russians. The air has been full of peace and rumors of peace—especially the latter—during the past week. One report, which gave some promise of probability, and which, although now denied, may still have something in it, said that representatives of Russia and Japan had been secretly considering terms of peace and had come to complete agreement except that Japan wanted indemnity which Russia would not grant. The points which Russia had conceded and Japan accepted as sufficient were: Japanese suzerainty over Korea; the cession of the Liao Tung peninsula, including Port Arthur, to Japan; Vladivostok a neutral port open to trade; neutral international administration of the Eastern Chinese railroad; the restoration of the portion of Manchuria south of Harbin to China. These terms include more than Japan demanded before the war, but not more than Russia ought in justice to yield even without the compulsion of defeat. Since this report began to gain currency, the diplomatic representatives of both powers have been busily denying it and asserting, in behalf of their respective governments, that nothing is wanted but more war. However, it is natural for a combatant who is trying to make the best possible terms of peace, to fill the air with threats of what dire things he is about to do if peace is not made. Ambassador Cassini says: "The recent disturbance in Russia, while annoying, cannot in the slightest affect the government's foreign policy. The war will go on to the end." Doubtless it will. Wars usually do. The question is whether the end will be now or after the sacrifice of a few more thousands of lives and millions of money. To characterize the profound upheaval which is now in progress in Russia as "annoying" is to belittle disingenuously a movement which everyone can see is of the gravest import.

The Dead Line. Preachers are not unfamiliar with the assertion that a man passes the dead line in the ministry at forty-five or fifty. Dr. Osler, of Johns Hopkins University, has stirred up the animals by a general assertion that practically nothing is accomplished for the advancement of the world by men over forty, and that men over sixty should be either retired or comfortably chloroformed. "As it can be maintained," he said, "that all the great advances have come from men under forty, so the history of the world shows that a very large proportion of the evils may be traced to the sexagenarians—nearly all the great mistakes, politically and socially, all of the worst poems, most of the bad pictures, a majority of the bad novels, not a few of the bad sermons and speeches." We have not seen any statements about Dr. Osler's age, but judging by his own theory that sixty is the point at which men begin to make those monumental mistakes which destroy their usefulness, we should surmise that he is considerably past that age. The chief trouble with the learned professor's theory is that it fails to recognize more than one kind of usefulness. He is a scientist, and to his mind the only useful man is the man who makes some new contribution to the world's store of knowledge. But there are certain human values which this view overlooks. There have been helpless and dependent invalids whose cheerfulness within their own small circle of acquaintance has contributed more to the sum of human happiness and well-being than the discovery of several previously unknown varieties of bugs would have done. There have been men over sixty, hopelessly incapable of leading any great advance movement in science, art or politics, whose faith and courage and industry and honor have strengthened even the men under forty. A man who can live honorably and manfully at any age is worth to the world more than he costs it, even if he never carries out a single piece of original investigation in the whole course of his life.

Three Doctors of Laws.

President Roosevelt, Kaiser Wilhelm and George Washington make a somewhat curiously assorted group for academic honors. The first two of these gentlemen have recently received the degree of Doctor of Laws from the University of Pennsylvania. The Kaiser's degree was conferred in absentia. George Washington received the same degree some years ago when it was possible for him to be present in propria persona. The names of the three distinguished honorary alumni were linked in the cablegram which was sent to the emperor by the provost of the university.

Indian Money for Catholic Schools.

The emphatic protests of the press and the general awakening of public sentiment in opposition to the policy of the Secretary of the Interior in appropriating Indian trust funds for the support of Catholic schools, have not been without their effect. The Indian appropriation bill, as reported in the House by the committee, contains the following clause: "That no portion of the funds appropriated by this act, nor the principal nor interest of any Indian trust or tribal funds held by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe, shall be available nor be expended for the support of any sectarian or denominational school." The effect of this, if adopted, will be to extend to the funds held in trust for the several tribes the same rule which has already been laid down by Congress in regard to public money—that appropriations should not be made for sectarian institutions.

Railroad Rate Regulation.

Tariff revision and railroad rate regulation are the two pieces of work which the people of the United States want Congress to take hold of. At least more people are interested in those than in any other subjects of congressional action. The first, Congress is utterly afraid to touch. The second, it is disinclined to deal with so long as any excuse can be found for delay. We can scarcely blame it. They are delicate and intricate questions, not to be settled by mere yielding to popular clamor or by blindly slashing at the trusts and the railroads. But they must be handled. By the time this paper reaches its readers, Congress will have adjourned with the tariff question unmentioned and the question of railroad rate regulation still in the hands of the Senate committee on interstate commerce, which will probably ask permission to continue its hearings on the Townsend-Esch bill during the long recess. There is a strong sentiment (outside of Congress) in favor of a special session either in April or in November, the former preferred, to take up rate regulation. Eight or ten state legislatures have passed resolutions asking the President to call a special session, but he has as yet given no indication of his intention in that regard. The absence of any mention of the tariff in his message to Congress led to the supposition that this topic was being saved for a special session.

The Simplon Tunnel.

In the heart of a mountain-chain and nearly six miles from daylight in either direction, the two boring parties who have been at work on the Simplon tunnel met on last Friday morning. The two parties started seven years ago, one from the north and the other from the south. The calculations were exact and the two ends of the bore met. This tunnel will supercede the St. Gothard as the longest tunnel in the world. Like the St. Gothard, its purpose is to facilitate transportation between Switzerland and Italy. The two governments backed the enterprise, at a cost of $150,000,000. In the building of the tunnel many unforeseen difficulties were encountered. Boiling hot springs flowed into the bore, but by an ingenious application of the homeopathic principle the power which they furnished was harnessed to the machinery used to drive the fans and cool the atmosphere. The fact has more than once been commented on that nearly every one of the predictions of the experts regarding the conditions which would be met in digging this tunnel was about as far wrong as it was possible for any statement on the subject to be. The geological formation, both as to kind of rock and direction of strata, the temperature, the inflow of water were all unexpected. Nevertheless the work will be finished about on time. May 15, 1905, is the date fixed in the contract for the opening to traffic, and the builders expect to have it ready by that date.

"Don Quixote."

For three hundred years the wonderful comedy of Cervantes has amused a world far larger than its writer ever dreamed would exist. Last month there was celebrated in Spain the tercentenary of the publication of this philosophic satire, and due honor was done in the land of his birth to the romantic personality of its author. As has been the case with so many writers of genius, Cervantes Saavedra had a hard life himself, while others reaped gold from his work. He fought valiantly against the Turks, and received a wound that crippled him for life; he was captured by Moors, and for four years was their slave. Later he married and turned to literature. Despite the fact that his Don Quixote was received with enthusiasm, its author lived and died in poverty. But he won an imperishable place, for he will always be known as one of the greatest of imaginative writers. The true spirit of poetry was in his work. He not merely gave the death-blow to the absurd and affected romances that followed the pseudo-chivalry and the old Spanish knight-errantry, but he had the distinct purpose to teach that the pure heart and the high soul obtain a triumph which misfortunes and blunders cannot tarnish.

Where the "Big Stick" is Needed.

If the United States Senate respects the wishes of the vast majority of the people of the United States it will hasten to give its approval to the arbitration treaties negotiated by our State Department with various countries. It is a little strange that the President of the United States, who has been charged with having too much of a war spirit, is compelled to urge the approval of these treaties by the Senate. He may have to use his "big stick" on that sedate body to secure action on his peace measures! These treaties look to the settlement of national misunderstandings by arbitration rather than by an appeal to arms. The moral sentiment of the nation, without regard to political or religious differences, approves this action, and the people will be disappointed if these treaties do not receive the favorable action of the Senate during the present session. Since the foregoing was written the Senate has so amended the treaty as, in the judgment of the President and of Secretary Hay, to make its ratification a step backward instead of forward. There is reason to fear that the Senate is influenced more by its jealous care for senatorial prerogative than by its desire to promote the cause of peace.

Missouri's Senatorial Muddle.

The senatorial deadlock in Missouri continues. If the people need any additional reasons for electing United States Senators by popular vote, the Republican legislature of Missouri is furnishing it. When a single man whose political ambition has been disappointed can defy the will of the people and block the wheels of legislation in order to take personal vengeance on those who failed to support him it is time for the people to ask themselves how long they can afford to tolerate that sort of thing. As for those legislators who lend themselves to this sort of a political game, there is perhaps a day of reckoning when their constituents can administer the only rebuke that is likely to prove effectual. Rather than continue this deadlock much longer it would be far more honorable for the Republicans to confess their inability to elect a United States Senator and turn over the task to the Democrats. They seem to know whom they want and they stand together in his support.

Our Symposium on Evangelism.

Perhaps most of those who desire to answer the questions which they were requested to answer concerning our methods of evangelism, have done so, and we may submit a few reflections on the subject in the light of these answers.

1. There is no disposition or tendency to yield one iota of our position, held from the beginning, that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the great evangelistic power to be relied upon in the conversion of men. We may learn to preach that gospel more fully, more wisely, and more lovingly, but we cannot preach any other gospel than that which Paul and Peter and John, and the other apostles preached in its essential facts, truths, commands, and promises. We are gratified to find unanimity on this subject.

2. The Holy Spirit is the divine Agent both in conversion and sanctification. This position, we should say, is almost universally admitted, though not so generally emphasized. The crude view which a few literalists and semi-rationalists have expressed from time to time in the past history of the church, which identifies the written word as the only Holy Spirit, or that the Holy Spirit, having once inspired men to write the Bible, has retired from the field of action, is now so generally discredited that it is useless to devote any time or space to its refutation. We are glad it has found no expression in this symposium.

3. What seems to be needed is a more distinct and emphatic recognition of the Holy Spirit's relation to all life and growth and fruitfulness, and the absolute necessity of our having the gift of the Holy Spirit, and being equipped with his power and wisdom in order to preach the gospel effectively or live a triumphant Christian life. Both New Testament history and the history of the church unite in teaching that only those who are "full of faith and of the Holy Spirit" have been preachers and teachers of power. No amount of natural ability nor of intellectual attainment will serve as a substitute for the Holy Spirit. How often is it that men of limited education and ability, but filled with the Spirit, accomplish vastly greater results than those who, without this equipment, possess much greater learning and talent! It is impossible to exaggerate the value of this truth in its relation to our evangelism.

4. If there be any lack of prayer in connection with our evangelistic work, or with all our great missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises, it probably springs from the failure to recognize the truth stated in the preceding paragraph. If we are profoundly impressed with the magnitude and value of the work of converting men to Christ, and realize our utter inability to do this work unaided of God, and without the plenitude of power which comes from the possession of His Spirit, we shall undoubtedly devote much time to prayer. Just in proportion as the Church is brought to realize the nature of this work, and its need of divine strength and guidance, will it go to God in prayer. Only a praying church can be an evangelistic church, and ultimately a triumphant church!

Democracy's Appeal to Culture.

If we were asked to name the two greatest preachers of the day we would be compelled to name Theodore Roosevelt and Wm. J. Bryan. They are certainly preaching to the largest audiences, including those whom they reach through the public press. Not only that, but their preaching is of a pre-eminently practical character. It steers clear of theological and ecclesiastical lines, and deals with the great fundamentals of religion and morality. They are preaching, too, substantially the same gospel—that of human brotherhood, honesty in private and public life, the sanctity of the domestic relations, the duties of good citizenship, fairness to all and a "square deal" for every man.

We have just read Mr. Bryan's able speech before the Alumni Association of Syracuse University in the Hotel Astor, New York. It is a timely address, and abounds in sentiments which will commend themselves to the best people of the nation, regardless of party, section or sect. He points out with great clearness that any scholarship or culture that omits moral training, love and service for humanity is a sham. Referring to some of our national sins he mentions the adulteration of foods, of drugs, the loss of human life through the failure of corporations to use safety appliances, employment of children in factories, putting swindling enterprises upon the market, etc. "It is a common thing nowadays," he says, "for those who control a corporation to pass dividends to run down the price of stocks in order to secure more stock at a lower price, and sometimes the officials make more money speculating in the stock of their concern than they make in legitimate dividends or out of their salaries. And who are the victims? Largely the mass of the people who trust the great names in finance and are ready to invest their savings in stocks that can thus be manipulated by those who can corner and control the market."

The following extract gives too true a picture of many so-called cultured men:

> The scholar must be something more than a mental machine; he must be something more than an expert calculator; he must be something more than a shrewd and successful business man. I think sometimes we are inclined to bestow upon a cultured man the admiration that we bestow upon a statue. The sculptor takes a flawless piece of marble, and after a while he makes it stand forth in human form. Sometimes it surpasses in grace any one in life; sometimes, in beauty, it goes beyond anything that we can expect to see, and yet it is but stone. The foot can run upon no errand of mercy, the hand can not be stretched forth to one in distress, and there is within it no conscience to direct. There is an infinite space between the most perfect statue and a human being, aflame with what the poet has described as "the passion of eternity."

The value of a child is thus strikingly set forth:

> Man is the miracle of miracles. What unfathomed possibilities are wrapped within the swaddling clothes that enfold an infant! Who can measure its influence for weal or woe? Before it can lisp a word, it has brought to one woman the sweet consciousness of motherhood, and it has given to one man that added strength that comes with a sense of responsibility. Before its tiny hands can lift a feather's weight, they have drawn two hearts closer together and its innocent prattle echoes through two lives. Every day that child in its growth touches and changes someone; not a year in all its history but that it leaves an impress upon the race. Its smiles, its tears, its joys, its sorrows—all are garnered up, and when that child reaches the age of 14 or 15 the parents send it to school; they entrust this priceless creature to the care of teachers. What do you do with it? How do you deal with it? Train it in the sciences? Train it in the languages? It is not sufficient that the child shall know how old the earth is, how far the stars are apart, or the forces that attract or repel each other. There is something more important to that child than any or all of these—it is to know how to live, and how can that child know how to live unless it knows that it is linked by indissoluble ties to every other human being? Great is the responsibility of the college!

That extract will bear reading in the family circle, on the college platform, and even from the pulpit. It is the very gospel which all the educators of the country need to hear and to heed. Mr. Bryan can not give us too many such sermons. The gospel of the divine fatherhood, of human brotherhood, and of the helping hand is the gospel which our age needs.

The Inheritance Tax Law.

A bill has been, or is about to be, introduced into the Missouri legislature amending what is known as the Collateral Inheritance Tax law. This law as it now stands provides that all property passing by will, or without will under the laws of the state, to any person or corporation other than to and for the use of one's legal heirs, except property conveyed for some educational, charitable or religious purpose exclusively, shall be subject to the payment of a collateral inheritance tax of five dollars for each and every one hundred dollars of the clear market value of such property, and provides for the collection of such tax by law. The amendment provides that the collateral inheritance tax herein provided for shall be reduced, and the persons required to pay the same shall be credited thereon, to the extent of and by an amount equal to the clear market value of any property devised, bequeathed, given, conveyed or transferred by law to or for the benefit of any educational institution incorporated, existing and operating under the laws of this state.

The amendment seems to us to be wise and in the interest of all our Christian colleges in the state. Anyone conveying property, in a will, and having any interest in religious education, would prefer that the amount of his inheritance tax should be given for the benefit of Christian education to the school which he might select rather than to let it go to the state, which he would be compelled to do under the law. Nor is this unjust to the state, because, indirectly, it gets the benefit of the moral and religious training of the colleges thus strengthened, in more intelligent and law-abiding citizens. We hope, therefore, that the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will stir up their members in the legislature to support this amendment, as it would be certain to stimulate bequests and donations to our colleges. The bill is not likely to receive opposition except from those who are opposed to religious institutions, and that number, we would like to believe, is not very large in the Missouri legislature. It will do no harm, however, for the citizens of this state to let their representatives in the legislature know how they feel toward this bill.

A minister has sent to the office these inquiries: "How did the St. Louis convention make the fearful blunder of locating the convention so far away from the brotherhood? And then the still greater and more inexcusable blunder of changing the time and putting it during the dog days of August?"

The matter of taking our national convention to the western coast has been under consideration for a number of years. There are several strong reasons why the convention determined to go there. It may be far from the center of the brotherhood, but it isn't "far from the brotherhood," as brethren live all through these coast states. Very few of them have the opportunity of attending one of our national conventions on account of the great distance. It was believed to be due to the faithful Disciples living in these coast states to take one of our conventions to a point that would be accessible to the bulk of their membership. It would serve to make them realize their unity with the general body, and keep them in closer touch with the general enterprises of the brotherhood. It would materially assist them in establishing the cause of primitive Christianity in these states. It would afford a number of the brethren and sisters living farther east, an occasion to cross the mountains and the plains, and see what a great country we have, and what a splendid brotherhood we have in California, Oregon, and Washington. There will be enough of the brethren go from the middle and eastern states to make the convention national in character, and it is believed that a sufficient number of the brethren in these coast states will attend to keep it well up to the average in numbers.

Having decided to go to the coast, it was wise to choose a month adapted to the coast states, when the climate there would be at its best. Accordingly August was chosen. No better time could have been chosen for the sightseer who wishes to see California, particularly, in its season of fruitage, for the month of September, following the convention, will be the season of grapes and fruits. We think it was a wise move, and only doing unto others as we would be done by—a very good rule to observe, even in Christian work.

Having decided to go there, let us spare no pains to make the convention to be held in San Francisco, Aug. 17-24, of great educational and inspirational value to all the people of the coast states.

Notes and Comments.

These words of the sage of Bethany, Alexander Campbell, are worthy of all acceptation, "The church of right is, and ought to be, a great missionary society. Her parish is the whole earth—from sea to sea, and from the Euphrates to the last domicile of man. A Christian community without missions and missionaries would be a solecism in creation, and a gross deviation from the order, the economy, and the government of the universe."

When Constantine was marking the boundaries of the new capital of the empire, some of his courtiers thought his plan was altogether too large. The emperor replied to all criticism, "I am following him who is leading me." In forming our missionary plans we should feel that Christ is our leader, and that we are acting in harmony with his thought and intention. We are in no danger of making our plans too large; the danger is all the other way.

In view of the announcement in our last issue that Mr. Carnegie has promised $20,000 to Bethany college it is of peculiar interest to note that he has now given about $40,000,000 for library purposes. Mr. Carnegie is not a professed Christian, we believe, and has given very little money for religious purposes, so far as is known, but he has set a noble example to rich men in the way of parting with big means, though many people will find objections to some of the methods by which he has accumulated his enormous fortune.

Mr. R. J. Campbell, as a result of long investigation and a recent visit to Rome, declares that Rome will not be defeated by Protestant frontal attacks, but by the inevitableness of the conditions of modern civilization. In a striking passage he says:

> "Newman had to accommodate himself to ritual and observance, for the sake of the intellectual inevitableness of her doctrine. My feeling was the precise opposite; Rome provides variety enough to enable my devotional instincts to receive complete satisfaction within her borders, but her claims appear to me intellectually impossible. The modern mind—certainly that of the Anglo-Saxon—is antipathetic to them."

Rome's power to make converts is practically nil. But the tireless working of her priestly machinery will continue to give Protestants ground for watchfulness. So far as there is any tendency to a reversion to ritualism it is more an esthetic movement than one of doctrinal conviction.

But the general feeling of the Roman Catholic laity in this country, if not abroad, may, we believe, be correctly gauged from a book just published. It is by a Chicago priest and its scope may be judged by its title: "The Parochial Schools; a Curse to the Church and a Menace to the Nation." Father Cowley, its author, declares these schools not only deficient as compared with the public schools, but breeders of disloyalty to the government. He says:

> "I am morally certain that not five per cent of the Catholic men of America endorse at heart the parochial school. They may send their children to the parochial school to keep peace in the family, and to avoid an open rupture with the parish rector; they may be inclined to pass resolutions of approval of the parochial school in their lodges and conventions; but if it ever becomes a matter of blood, not one per cent of them will be found outside of the ranks of the defenders of the American public schools. If a perfectly free ballot could be cast by the Catholic men of America for the perpetuity or suppression of the parochial school, it would be suppressed by an astounding majority. Prelates and priests work upon the fears and feelings of the women and children, and the fathers, to have peace in their families, yield and send their children to the parochial schools."

In this hour of evangelistic effort it may be well for us to ask whether we are giving God a chance to do for us what he would. There is a meaningful passage in Ralph Connor's new book. The practical common-sense prospector for souls says to the dissipated, weak doctor:

> "Listen, I am not going to preach, but you know as well as I do that when a man faces the right way God is ready to back him up. It is common-sense to bank on that, isn't it? Common-sense and nothing else. But I want to say this, you've got to be honest with God. You've not been fair. You've prayed and then you went into the same old places and with the same old companions, and so you find yourself where you are to-night. You cannot cure any man of disease, if he breaks every regulation you make when your back is turned. Give God a chance, that's all I ask. Be decently square with him. There's lots of mystery in religion, but it is not there."

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Jehovah!" It was a part of the minister's text on a recent Sunday night. What a well of consolation and comfort did he make that whole Song of Ascent to us! No man knows God truly who has not called upon him "out of the depths." Nor are we so apt to call on Jehovah at any other time as when we are in the depths—depths of conscious sin, whose burden we feel; depths of sorrow and trouble whose waves roll over us; depths of care and anxiety when our earthly hopes are blighted. Whoever, out of these depths has called upon Jehovah and has found strength for his weakness, comfort for his sorrow, and hope for his despair, knows God henceforth as he never knew him before. Who of us, in such a time of need, could not have exclaimed with the psalmist:

My soul waiteth for the Lord
More than watchmen wait for the morning;
Yea, more than watchmen for the morning.

How eagerly does the watchman of the night scan the eastern horizon to catch the first signs of the coming day! So does the guilt-laden or sorrow-burdened soul watch and wait for some token of divine favor. When we have found it and are rejoicing in it, then we can again sing with our psalmist:

O Israel, hope in Jehovah;
For with Jehovah there is loving kindness,
And with him is plenteous redemption.

The preacher took us out under the starlit sky: "plenteous stars!" And then down by the roaring seashore, whose sandy beach is echoing with the music of the waves: "plenteous sand!" He then took us out into the fields in the early summer morning, and showed us the millions of dew-drops, glistening like diamonds in the morning light: "plenteous dew-drops!" So there is "plenteous redemption" for all our sins, and for all our sorrows. How bountiful is our God!

The thaw which has been in progress for several days, melting away the snow, drawing the frost out of the frozen earth, is suggestive of a similar process through which the hard, cold heart of the unbeliever, or man of the world, must pass in order to citizenship in the Kingdom of Heaven. For this purpose the Sun of Righteousness has risen above the horizon of time, shedding the radiance and warmth of his truth and love over the hard and obdurate hearts of humanity. The world has been thawing out these nineteen centuries of Christian history. It is not the cold, hard and cheerless world it once was, before the Sun of our life had risen with healing in his beams; but there are large sections of the earth which have not yet felt its quickening and transforming power. This is because the Sun of Righteousness must shine through men for the salvation of men. A large part of the church is not sufficiently thawed out itself, and not sufficiently luminous with the light of heaven, to reflect any light upon the darkness and coldness of pagan lands. But the process is going on. Every year witnesses a larger number of believers who are willing to be light-bearers to the dark places of earth, either by going or sending, and so, slowly but surely, the frostline is being beaten back, and the earth is coming under the life-giving power of the Son of God, who rises steadily toward his zenith.

At last the war is really on between the government and the great trusts and monopolies which have been enriching themselves at the expense of the people. Let no one underestimate the magnitude of the conflict. Enriched by their unlawful and unrighteous methods, and having drawn into their meshes, judges, courts, and legislatures, they are prepared to make strong resistance to the efforts of the president and of congress to bring them within the limits of lawful trade. The whole world will watch with interest the developments of this war on these great trusts, which have hitherto ignored the rights of others and evaded the requirements of the law. The ultimate issue cannot be doubted. The people are aroused as never before, and they are led on by a courageous president, and by a congress which at last seems awakened to the demands of the hour. There may be haltings, delay over legal technicalities, but ultimately the will of the people must conquer, and unlawful combinations in restraint of trade will be put down, and the great corporations whose predatory habits have made them a menace to the public welfare, will be taught the lesson that they cannot do business in this country except they be subject to the laws of the country. The conflict will assume a more general form as the fight goes on, and the end of it will be a purer government, greater respect for the rights of the people, better law enforcement, and better laws, and a "square deal" for every man. This is only the awakening of the public conscience—one of the best fruits of our common Christianity.

The news of Dr. Harper's probably fatal illness has produced profound sorrow throughout the land. He is a man not only of wide culture, but of remarkable administrative ability. He has devoted his life, largely, to biblical study, and biblical teaching, and has manifested the deepest interest in a more general Bible study on the part of the people. Few men have been more misrepresented in the public press of the country than Dr. Harper. He has not infrequently been represented as making assaults on the integrity of the Bible, and seeking to overthrow confidence in it on the part of the students. We have recently read a volume of his "Talks to Students," the notice of which, appearing elsewhere, was written before we heard of his fatal illness. In that volume he appears in an altogether different light from that in which the readers of newspapers have seen him. Dr. Harper was a prime mover and one of the wisest counselors in the recent organization of the Religious Education Association, which has for its purpose a more effective presentation of religion, and of the Bible, in the Sunday-school, in the day school, in the church, in the home, in our colleges, in our religious journals, and everywhere else. He will be greatly missed, should his present disease prove fatal. But he has made for himself a large place in the history of religious thought and work, and he will live in the affectionate remembrance of those who have known him best and have been quickened to higher things by the influence of his life. That he has made no mistakes is more than can be said of any man; but that his heart has been true to God, and to the highest interests of humanity, we do not doubt. Our deepest sympathies are with him in his brave struggle with the last great enemy.

Passing through one of the rich coal fields of Illinois a few days since, where there was abundance of evidence above ground of the rich treasures of coal beneath, these words of the Master came to us: "I go to prepare a place for you." What was there in such a scene, the Easy Chair readers will ask, to suggest such a text? In imagination—the historic imagination—we saw a great primeval forest standing back yonder in the carboniferous age, millions of years before any human being appeared on this earth. Then came an upheaval, and this mighty forest was buried, and the process of carbonization went on through the ages until these vast coal beds were formed—for whom? For man. Here is evidence of divine prevision. It was God looking into the future and preparing a place for man. Scarcely otherwise could these rich Illinois prairies have been utilized by man, as they now are. This, then, was the connection: As God, looking down through the coming æons, prepared the earth for the abode of man, so he has made preparation for man's future abode. "I go to prepare a place for you," said Jesus to his disciples. No calamity can befall the earth which God has not foreseen and for which he has not provided. Some people get alarmed at what the scientists tell us about the sun's losing its heat, and the earth becoming a frozen mass; or about the sun's increasing its heat and consuming the earth and the other planets in a vast conflagration! These theories do not alarm us. He who has prepared the coal-beds for man's use, long ages before man appeared on the earth, knows how to prepare a place for his children, free from the danger of any "crash of matter or wreck of worlds" which the scientist can foresee. So we may say with our good Quaker poet,

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

The Missionary Spirit Personified

By Frank L. Jewett

Horace Tracy Pitkin was born in Philadelphia, October 28, 1869. It is said that in Boston social standing depends on education; in New York, on money; in Philadelphia on ancestry. Had the Pitkin family made social pretensions it could have boasted of such names as Thomas Yale, whose son held the honor of having one of the leading universities in the United States named after him; Oliver Wolcott, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and Roger Wolcott, governor of the commonwealth of Massachusetts. Suffice it to say that Horace's mother was a preacher's daughter and a woman with a lovely and beautiful character. His father was a devout Christian and given to charity. Horace had two sisters, one of whom died early in life; the other married a son of Charles W. Eliot, the present and greatest president of the greatest university on the North American continent.

Horace's education was begun in a Latin school in the "City of Brotherly Love," continued at Exeter academy, a boy's school in New Hampshire. His academic course was completed at Yale and his theological studies were begun and consummated at Union theological seminary in New York city. In addition to ancestry and education young Pitkin had money. Whether his income was as large during his Yale and Union days as it was when he went to China, I do not know. At the latter time it was $3,000 a year. In these big institutions men with plenty of money usually bought automobiles, had wine suppers in the large city hotels, lived sumptuously and in elaborate suites of rooms. In contrast to such men about the first thing Pitkin did when he reached Exeter was to unite with the church and identify himself with the Christian Fraternity —an organization which was unpopular. He was also a leading spirit in the societies of the church. When at Yale he became a great C. E. worker, was superintendent of a mission Sunday-school, and a member of the student volunteer band. A friend met him on the campus at Yale, when the days of his academic life were all but completed, with tears in his eyes—not because of leaving Yale, but because it was so hard for him to leave his Sunday-school boys in the mission school. Money spent, beyond the gratification of his own needs, was spent to help some poor fellow-student through school, or as on one occasion to send a poor fellow to Buffalo to see his mother, who so longed to see her boy during the Christmas holidays. Horace learned no bad habits and indulged in no vile language. He was not a brilliant scholar, but a devoted Christian worker. He was not a celebrated athlete, but poured out the beauties and sweetness of his soul sitting before his piano in song.

When in the seminary at Union he was all wrapped up in missions. He neglected his professional studies for two years in order to talk missions and to raise money for missions in the churches in near-by and even somewhat remote localities. He spent one year as traveling secretary among colleges in the west in the interest of missions. He was under appointment as a missionary to northern China for some time before he sailed for the Orient, in order that he might speak with authority and convince the students that he meant business in the matter of missions.

He was a missionary in China something like two and one-half years. He was one of the victims of the Boxer uprising. When one considers how long it requires a person to learn the oriental language and oriental fields of work and oriental customs one can easily see that Pitkin had very little time for actual service on the soil of one of the world's great mission fields. I have briefly outlined the history of a great man. I have not measured the value of his soul and no one this side of eternity can measure it accurately or even approximately; God alone can do that. Pitkin might have made a great business man, for he had both the intellectual ability and the financial backing. He might have made a successful teacher in some large institution or a renowned minister in some church in one of America's numerous large cities. But he was unselfish. He had the spirit of Christ. He had the missionary spirit. He had the missionary spirit first of all because he gave himself to Christ and that without reservation. I have read his letters recorded by Speer in his "Memorial to the Martyred Hero of the Cross" —letters written both by Pitkin and his friends, and if ever there was a man of prayer in Christ's sense in modern times Pitkin was that man. His consecration was apparently complete. His peace of soul was like the peace of God. Missionary after missionary had yielded up his life to God at the hands of the Boxers. Pitkin knew it was but a few days until he must do likewise, yet he possessed such calmness of mind that he dusted tables and chairs and watered gardens and flowers with regularity. He might have saved his life by fleeing, but he would not desert Christians in time of trouble. His consecration bore the ripened fruit of faith in missions, and from this faith he never departed, for, said he, in his message to Mrs. Pitkin, "Tell her I want little Horace, when he is 25 years old, to be a missionary in northern China."

In the second place, after he had given himself, body, soul, and mind, he gave his money to Christ. When traveling secretary in the middle west Pitkin bore his own expenses. When on the field he paid his own expenses and accepted a salary only in this way: The church at Cleveland undertook his support, $750, at Pitkin's own suggestion, not for his own advantage however, but only that this church might be a "living link" church. He turned around and gave the same amount of money from his own pocket to the American board for purposes which do not appeal to churches in America in a way that becoming "living links" appeals to them. How much more money than this he gave, I do not know.

The Master once said, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" We answer the Nazarene catechist—Nothing. But we ask—What shall it profit a man if he become insulated from the world and connected vitally, spiritually, unreservedly, with divinity? What shall it profit a man if he work and pray, preach and pay for missions in northern China and then have his head severed from his body? I answer, the reward which the Son of God offers to every one who does the will of God, whose will this same Son of God himself did.

What inspiration comes to men from such a life? I answer, a holy inspiration. Pitkin lived only a few years, but man's life is not measured so much by length of days as it is by the quality of heart and the direction of life. Though Pitkin's life was short, yet the quality was divine and he was approaching directly the throne of God through consecrated service.

We are told that the heart of the gospel is love, and I believe this. The heart of Christ and his work was love. God's motive in sending Christ was love. God's desire to redeem men from sin was born of love. Love is the first, middle, and last word of Christianity—hence of missions. Christ laid down his life for the world and he was the greatest missionary. Pitkin laid down his life for Christ and his friends in China. He could have no sweeter love; he could have no purer missionary spirit. The spirit of Pitkin was the missionary spirit.

How promote this spirit? Get it from Pitkin? Yes. Get it from the Person who gave it to him? That is better. Get the spirit of Christ, then you have the missionary spirit. You cannot get it without promoting it. If you do not promote it you do not have it. It is the nature of light to shine. It is the nature of Christ to do Christlike deeds. The problem of promotion is the problem of getting. Get Christ and you will promote his spirit. Get the spirit of Christ and you get the spirit of missions. Get the missionary spirit and you will promote it

"Foreign Missions Again?"

By James H. Wright

"What was that the preacher said about getting ready for the March offering?" asked Forgetful Hearer, of a little group of Disciples at the close of a morning service. "I guess my mind was on some business matters that have been bothering me of late. Anyway, I didn't quite understand. They are getting rather high-toned of late talking of these 'offerings.' I guess he meant one of those bothersome collections for something or other."

"The first Sunday in March," said Earnest Christian, "is the day set apart for taking the offering for Foreign Missions, and our pastor was telling us to plan to give liberally."

"Foreign Missions again!" shouted Nathan Narrow Mind. "Now do you know that I think there is plenty to do right here at home? And you all know that the Bible says, 'Charity begins at home.' Just think what we could accomplish right here if all this money could be turned over to us!"

"I am afraid," said Earnest Christian, "you didn't find that quotation in the Bible. At least it isn't in mine. And, by the way, how often did the apostles repeat the offer of pardon to the same people? Many of those you have in mind have heard the gospel over and over, and refused to accept the invitations pressed upon them. Is it fair for them to have a hundred chances while millions never once hear the word? Did not Paul plainly say to some, 'Seeing that you put the word of God from you and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles'? That meant Foreign Missions."

"But," suggested Charlie Cautious, "wouldn't it be better to leave the heathen alone? If you preach to them and they do not obey, they will surely be lost. Now, they will be judged only in the light of conscience and the book of nature. I really think that the more light they have the more their danger."

"Look here, Charlie," said Earnest Christian, "we must do our duty. Jesus said, 'Preach the gospel to every creature.' And surely the gospel motives are higher than 'the light of nature.' The degradation in pagan lands is simply appalling. Their needs appeal to us. Jesus said, 'Go.' The man of Macedonia cried, 'Come'; and Paul went. Let us be apostolic."

"What bothers me," said Peter Pessimist, "is the worthlessness of these pagans. Think of the degraded, opium smoking Chinaman; the obtuse, thick-skulled negro and the cannibals of the sea islands. What is the use of trying to save them? What good are they if they pretend to become Christians?"

"Do you know," inquired Earnest Christian, "that the opium traffic was forced upon China by British cannon? And that the gravest penalties, even to death, once hung over the Chinaman who might cultivate the poppy or use opium? And that Christian nations, so-called, oppressed the African and enslaved his children and that their traders and sailors robbed and spread loathsome diseases among the sea islanders? We owe something to them since white men have helped to drag them still lower. And were those only 'rice Christians' who died in the faith during the Boxer massacres? Have you heard of Africaner, once the ferocious but later the truly Christian African king? And have you read of Hawaii, the 'Gem of the Pacific,' whose island life the missionaries lifted from heathenism to Christian faith? These are some of the fruits."

"But it can't be done. You can't Christianize the world at large," said Francis Faint-Heart. "Yes, and see the failures in missions," cried Erastus Easily-Discouraged. "What of Dr. Barclay's work in Jerusalem? And our early work in Jamaica? And the meager results in Constantinople and Asia Minor? I tell you it is foolish to talk about it!"

"Difficulties do confront us and no mistake," said Earnest Christian, "and sometimes my heart grows sick. But then, I remember that sometimes farmers and bankers and colleges fail. Men do not stop for failure, nor should we. How would it have done, Francis, for you to have said, 'It can't be done,' to the Savior when he was giving the great commission? Would he have taken kindly to this impugning of his wisdom? Would he not have said, as he once did to Peter, 'Thou art an offence unto me: for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men'? And, Erastus, I commend to you the stern reply of Lord Wellington to the English clergyman who asked him if missions had hope of success. The old soldier's reply was, 'Sir, what are your marching orders?' "

"But, sir," interrupted Theodore Tightfist, "all this takes money. To waste money, sir, is sinful. Use it where it will do good, sir. That's my doctrine."

"Well, Theodore," said Earnest Christian, "your doctrine is somewhat better than your practice. I hate to belittle great things, but I will say that if you and your friends will hand over the money (or a like sum) for foreign missions that you spend on tobacco or similar wasteful indulgences, the work would progress rapidly. Never, sir, has the same amount been 'wasted' in missions that is worse than wasted in these forms of indulgence."

"But I object to your calling it a waste. Your boy, Tom, is in China, in business. He is not yet a Christian. He may die to-morrow. What is your estimate of the money value of hir soul? Just at how much would you value the difference between these two cablegrams?

Theodore Tightfist:—Tom killed to-day while gambling.

(Signed) John Swig.

Theodore Tightfist:—Tom died to-day. An earnest Christian.

(Signed) Meigs, missionary.

"I know you better than you do yourself. One soul, if it were your boy's, would repay the greatest expenditure."

Young Disciple. "I want to ask, on what authority do Foreign Missions rest? And would it be safe to neglect them?"

Earnest Christian. "Jesus commands us to 'Go, teach all nations,' and to 'Preach the gospel to every creature.' Would you disobey him?"

Young Disciple. "No. I shall try to give as I am able."

Mr. Faith-in-God. "Brethren, I am willing to do all I can and leave the result with God. I am too old to go, but I can send. And I will pray that those in charge of the funds at home and the workers in the foreign field may be divinely guided."

Widow Two-Mites. "I have but little to offer, but I have carefully saved that I might share in the blessedness of giving to this work. You know that I am lonely now and my heart yearns to see again on earth or in heaven the daughter that I have given to the foreign work."

Mr. Political Economist. "I am not, as you know, a member with you. But I am a practical business man and I have read some history. Savages buy nothing. As they become civilized they demand better surroundings, and this leads to commerce. The Anglo-Saxons were as degraded as the Hottentots before the gospel came. And I have read that 'When James Calvert arrived in the Fijis his first duty was to bury the hands, arms, feet and heads of eighty victims whose bodies had been roasted and eaten. And I know that the Fijis to-day welcome our trade. I wish I had the faith of these missionaries, but I will at least aid the good cause to the extent of my offering. Pray that I may see my way to a fuller faith."

At this unexpected speech, some of the Christians hung their heads in silent shame. Old brother Faith-in-God offered a tender petition in behalf of the one so near the kingdom and asked God to make them all more faithful. As he closed, young brother Ever-Ready sang with trembling earnestness,

"From China, where the martyrs fell; Japan, where lie our dead;
From India, where we've won to Christ and gospel blessings shed,
From sea-girt isles, from Afric's gloom, the cry of old is sped,
Preach Christ throughout the world.

"Glory, glory, Halleleujah;
Glory, glory, Halleleujah;
Tell the heathen of the Savior;
Preach Christ throughout the world."

Types of Evangelists

BY W. E. HARLOW

As this is my first contribution for some time to the most excellent Christian-Evangelist that I have not been asked to write, I have this apology for its appearance. My five minutes' speech on evangelism at the national convention had the tail and legs cut off by the chairman presiding, and when the speech appeared in the Christian-Evangelist it was without head, so that to some it went without tail to wag it, while to others it is destined to grope its way as a headless monstrosity.

Many very excellent things are appearing from time to time on evangelism, the old and the new, the higher and the lower, the wise and otherwise, so that we poor fellows on the firing line hardly know sometimes just where we are. It is not a very hard matter for some professor in a college, or pastor in his study, to sit down and formulate a beautiful theory on "types" of evangelists and principles of evangelism, as Brother Rudy's quotations from Professor Hinsdale and Brother McLean in a recent issue of this paper.

I can heartily endorse nearly all Brother Rudy says, as also Brother Janes' comment on it in a more recent issue, but I desire to say that the same conditions that confronted the apostles and early Christians do not exist to-day. If there had been churches and preachers then who had so tampered with the ordinances of Christ and made them a mere meaningless and empty form, as exists to-day, thinks there a man among us that the apostles would not have cried out against it? The prevailing religion of that day was Judaism in an apostate form, and for trying to exalt the Christ instead of Moses and the Gospel instead of the Law and the traditions of the fathers, the Apostles nearly, if not all, suffered not only persecutions but death. Brother Janes says, "A little bit less of Acts 2:38 and more of John 3:16-21." May I ask, of what does "our plea" consist? Is it not to restore that which is lacking in a return to the primitive faith and practice of the early church? While I am the least of the evangelists and am not meet to be called an evangelist, I can certify that, in over one hundred meetings conducted by me, not a single one that was a success but it was at the expense of sectarianism.

I have never preached a sermon in my life on either the action, subject or design of baptism. But if you invite a divided Christendom to come and stand on the sure foundation, Christ and the apostles, for the glory of God and the conversion of the world, and it is accepted by one of the sects, you are sure to find them cry, "proselyting, baptismal regeneration," etc. No doubt some few not representative men among us have made a "fetich" out of baptism, but I challenge the world to point to a single one of our present prominent evangelists that does. If we do not emphasize those things that distinguish us from the sects we are sure never to restore anything, and if we do emphasize them we are sure to incur their displeasure. I have the honor, so far as I know, of being the only evangelist among us who has been called and has held a union meeting with all the prominent churches uniting. Why have I not been called to conduct other union meetings? Because I preached the gospel. No man can ever expect to hold membership with our people and be a success as a union evangelist, if he has a conscience enlightened by the Word of God. If we bring additions in on simply the love of God and do not indoctrinate them in the Gospel, they are carried about with every wind of doctrine, and are incapable of giving a reason of the hope within them. Brother Rudy says, "Whenever God raises up men among us of the spiritual size and moral force of Moody, Chapman and Munhall and others, who to their spiritual power will add the New Testament method of evangelism, this reformation will move forward as never before."

That all sounds very well, but I believe we have plenty of such men, and in many things their superior. I do not look upon an ignorant zeal or worldly fame, or a cold intellectuality as spiritual power. When one of the above refused to let the inspired answer to an inquiring penitent be read without comment, or when another admitted he had never obeyed the Savior in baptism, and gave as his reason that it might hurt his influence with the Presbyterian church, or as the other who canceled an engagement this very month, that he might accept another which would mean a thousand dollars more money to him—when such, I say, are held up as men of spiritual size, I dissent. Theory and essays are beautiful, brethren; keep on, but with the evangelists an example or two, an ocular demonstration now and then, will have more weight. I am from Missouri.

My Duty to My Generation

BY ANSON G. CHESTER

My duty to my generation grows out of what, by means of the splendid accumulation of the ages, it is able to confer upon me and invests me with the sacred obligation of doing my best for it in return.

The best that I can do for my generation is to help it conform to the higher standard of life which has already been established. My duty lies in seeking to make my fellow men Christians. I am to catch the missionary spirit of the divine Master, inhale the missionary atmosphere of the divine word, and seek to impart to others the pronounced spiritual blessing I, myself, have received.

For the first missionary known to the world was the Man of Nazareth. The purpose which brought him hither was purely missionary, his temper, his teachings, his acts, his admonitions, his efforts, his life, all were missionary. The spirit of his gospel is the missionary spirit. The word which records his earthly history is thrilled with missionary sentiment and bristles with missionary incentives. Our one great, paramount, controlling, absorbing, and never-changing duty is to be missionary.

One of the paramount hindrances to the general spread and universal triumph of the gospel of Jesus Christ exists in the misapprehension and misapplication of certain pronouns. It is common among Christians to use we where they should employ I, and our where they should invariably use mine. This is due not so much to design or willfulness, as to conventionalism and habit.

It is just as much my duty to endeavor to enlighten the unenlightened and save the unsaved as it would be were I the only Christian in the world and if the substance now distributed among millions were concentrated in my coffers. Oh, for a lot of Andrew Carnegies in the world to-day to expend for Christ as he is doing for men! But my duty remains imperative, no matter how others may regard, discharge, or neglect their own. The fact that the gospel has been given me constitutes me as trustee, and I have no more right to seek to monopolize and conceal it than I would have to make an attempt to monopolize the atmosphere and sunshine, or to shut away from the gaze of others the inspiring majesty of the hills or the comforting beauty of the flowers. Every living man and woman is entitled to know the gospel. Every man who knows the gospel is solemnly bound to make it known to others.

My first duty to my generation is to be myself a consistent and consecrated Christian. I must cut loose from myself and strive for my fellows. After you have discovered a rayless star, or a rivulet that runs up a mountain you may begin to hunt for a selfish Christian. The more we give the more we have. Jesus gave himself for others; only through others can we give ourselves to him.

We are responsible only so far as we know. The masses of China, Japan, India and Africa do not know, and, therefore, are not responsible. We do know, and our very knowledge constitutes our responsibility toward the ignorant and irresponsible.

Having become a Christian my first duty is to impart to others of the spiritual knowledge I myself have received. Christ's curt but unrestricted, imperative, "Go" was specifically addressed to me. Therein is condensed my single, controlling obligation; therefore therein is compressed my peculiar and paramount duty, and there is no shirking the responsibility which it imposes, or the work to which it is the emphatic summons. It is not a suggestion to be acted upon if we happen to feel in a genial mood, but an actual, absolute, unavoidable command to be obeyed.

If we cannot ourselves actually become missionaries, it is incumbent upon us to become missionaries by proxy. This we can do through the means which God has given us. Grace can never make any sort of compromise with greed. We must loosen our purse strings and empty out the contents:

Robert E. Speer says that "we cannot serve God and mammon, but we can serve God with mammon." Wilbur Chapman admonishes Christians to "give until it hurts, and then keep on giving until it does not hurt." Paul calls giving a grace and bids us "abound in it," and he who best knew what is best for us declares that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

Torrey as a Target

By William Durban

The excitement in London at this moment is very great. Torrey and Alexander have returned to the metropolis after their great provincial campaigns. In Cardiff and in Liverpool their success was immense. Torrey and Alexander were previously heard in London during their meetings at Mildmay, over a year ago, but they then made no sensation whatever. The reason was that they had not then made a reputation in the Provinces. Also, it was felt at the time that Mildmay was too far out from the center of the city. London is always curious to see and hear any men or women who have moved the rest of the nation, but it seldom gives the keynote. Moody and Sankey held meetings in York, Birmingham, Dublin and other cities before they burst on the capital which had been listening to the echoes of their provincial campaigns and had begun to clamour for them and had prepared a mighty reception. So it is now with regard to these two latest evangelists. As they have achieved huge success elsewhere London claims their presence and is paying a big price for their meetings. The expenses of the halls to be used being enormous great sums have been collected.

The Most Dangerous of Religious Parties.

I have never known the daily secular papers to give space so freely to religious news as they are doing now, in connection with the Welsh Revival and the Torrey-Alexander movement. The press is making quite a new departure, and in many cases editorials appear which the writers would never have dreamed a few years since of issuing. It seems as though Revivalism had actually performed the wonderful feat of capturing our dignified and unimpassioned British press. That is a conquest indeed. I never expected to live to see it. I must here dwell on one of the other altogether unexpected phases of the revivalist agitation. It has upset the High church clergy in a painful degree. The noted aristocratic Father Adderley, formerly known as the Hon. and Rev. James G. Adderley, has in a curious "Open Letter" to Dr. Torrey, through the columns of the Daily News of London, made a bitterly ironical attack on the American evangelist. Father Adderley belongs to a small, peculiar, and exceedingly insidious class of the Anglican clergy. It is very supercilious, very pretentious, very ostentatious, very critical of other people, and very fashionable. It is the extraordinary ecclesiastical conglomerate coming to be known as the High-Broad-Socialist section. There is a kind of rock known to geologists as conglomerate. It is a formidable mixture of different hard stones which have been flung together by volcanic action and welded into a picturesque mass. The convulsions in Anglicanism have for one result produced this little theological analgam of a number of fragments from the High church and Broad church parties. The real leader is Bishop Gore, lately transferred from Worcester to the new see of Birmingham. In London the foremost member is Canon Scott Holland. Father Adderley is the patrician in the clique. Now, one of the most cherished hopes of these gentlemen is to coax the lapsed masses into the bosom of the church by sugaring the ceremonial bait with socialistic sugar. So they set up brotherhoods and leagues of many types. They write essays and articles in which ritualism and higher criticism kiss each other, as in the famous volume edited by Dr. Gore, "Lux Mundi." Canon Holland runs a little monthly called The Commonwealth, which is the organ of this sacerdotal socialism. And Father Adderley's attack on Dr. Torrey is a challenge to the evangelist from the platform of the most dangerous of all the many parties now fighting for paramount influence on the part of the church amongst the masses of the nation. This is the party whose action wants watching the most carefully. It would not for a moment occur to Father Adderley that he might offer to co-operate with Dr. Torrey for the sake of winning souls to righteousness, as Prebendary Webb-Peploe and many of the most influential of the Anglican clergy are heartily doing. But it does occur to him that here is a chance to strike a discordant note, and he does not fail to act his part.

The Challenge.

In his open letter Father Adderley wants to know if Torrey has come to London to declaim against "real sins," as well as against smoking, cards, and theatres; whether he is as vehemently opposed to hypocrisy amongst church members and in society as to these other offences; whether he will be as hard on unscrupulous landlords and sweating employers as he is on actors; and whether he is going in the West End of London to tell the truth about their lives of sinful pleasure to the idle and luxurious rich. Then come many sneers in the finest style of high clerical arrogance. Says the refined and aristocratic Father to the American democratic visitor, "When you get the ground landlords of London into your inquiry room, I entreat you not to ask them if they smoke cigars. When the doctors of divinity come trembling to your study, do not ask them if they believe that Solomon wrote Ecclesiastes or that Balaam's donkey spoke, but ask them if they pay their debts or sweat their curate. And will you ask Mr. Alexander to add an appendix to his hymn book to teach those who rejoice in the knowledge of Christ to be merry and to glory in the foundation of a free and happy kingdom here on earth, where rich and poor may live as brethren?" These sentences are fair samples of the style of this astonishing manifesto.

Torrey Answers.

The rejoinder came promptly. It appeared in the columns of the same morning journal. The superfine clericalist had met his match. The Cavalier had somewhat too recklessly rushed at a Puritan of the Ironside type. Multitudes of Londoners are laughing at Adderley and cheering Torrey after reading the reply of the latter. This is one of the most masterly bits of literary English that ever appeared in the newspaper columns. I must give a few sentences from it just to show Torrey in the new light in which he has been compelled to shine. He certainly is a magnificent polemic if put on his mettle. "I must thank you," said Torrey to Adderley, "for this pointer about the higher critical doctors of divinity in London not paying their debts, and I will try and keep my weather eye open about this, but I hope and believe your judgment against them about this is as baseless as your judgment against me. Let me add that I don't remember ever asking any brother minister who has come to me in distress of soul whether he believed Solomon wrote Ecclesiastes. I don't so much care whether he believes it or not, for our Lord never says that he did. I fear you are not any more up on the problems of the higher criticism than you are upon the methods of missions conducted by us. It may interest you to learn that I have never asked any inquiring landlord or any other inquirer whether he smoked. I don't think I have ever mentioned smoking to any inquirer unless he asked my opinion about it, and even then I have not dwelt upon it. You seem to have smoke on the brain. I haven't. I have said some pretty stern things about the people who quote 1 John 3:14 as belonging to them, and then squeeze their tenants. For lack of space I must pass over the advice you give me as to how to deal with shareholders in breweries, but any one who has been through one of our missions must have had a merry laugh at your expense when they read it." Then Dr. Torrey invites the father to study certain of the lively and exhilarating hymns abounding in Alexander's book, in which he will find in abundance the joyous style of lyrics of the kingdom which he seems to desiderate, and he winds up with the confident assurance that Adderley is sincere, but tells him he has made what we all make at times—a mistake. And he says, "Come and see for yourself, my brother. Come and hear."

Torrey is well accustomed to bitter attacks, and they generally come not from infidels, secularists, or worldlings, but from ministers. Adderley is not by any means the first assailant. In front of me lies a little volume of essays by Free church ministers, chiefly Broad School Congregationalists, entirely devoted to the topic of the mischief and the failure of Torreyism. The editor is a well known Yorkshire minister. He and his coadjutors collaborate painfully in their efforts to show how undesirable in any town is a campaign by such men as Torrey and Alexander, and others of their Puritan order. Two of the articles are by a very young man who amuses himself by deriding Torrey's pretensions to scholarship. The young gentleman himself never saw the inside of any university, but he carefully analyzes the amount and value of Torrey's attainments in Hebrew, Latin and Greek. As I happen personally to know this young critic, I have felt amusement mingled with amazement and sorrow on reading his performance, for if he himself has even any elementary knowledge of the three languages, he must have acquired it for the special purpose of examining Torrey. The book is intended to open the eyes of people to the folly of allowing the evangelists to enter any city under organized local auspices. It has ignominiously failed, but Torrey has magnificently succeeded. As for London, it is too mighty, too wicked, and too deeply steeped in floods of carnal luxury to be easily touched. But one thing it needs is a strong dose of the old Puritanism which saved England and made America the land and home of freedom and bravery. My own purpose is not to emulate those critics who love the cheap and easy task of sneering at the defects in the theology or the methods of these evangelists, but to join with all who cheer and encourage them. I know the west end of London, for I was born there. And I know that it is the triple metropolis of devilry, fleshliness and worldliness.

The Faith of Tennyson.

By W. J. Lhamon.

Principal John Tulloch of the University of St. Andrews in an able work entitled "Religious Thought in Great Britain During the Nineteenth Century" ranks Tennyson with Maurice and Kingsley and Frederick Robertson as one of the great religious teachers "of a generation in danger of forgetting religion altogether." "Tennyson himself," says Dr. Tulloch, "in the whole spirit of his poetry is the sufficient evidence of this powerful wave of religious tendency, and its ascendency over the higher minds of the time." Then quoting that noble verse, the opening one of "In Memoriam," namely,

"Strong Son of God, immortal Love,"

he says this might be taken as the keynote of the movement; and the closing verse of "In Memoriam" as the summary of its thought,

"That God which ever lives and loves,
One God, one law, one element—
And one far-off Divine event,
To which the whole creation moves."

The poem "In Memoriam" is ranked by many as one of the most profoundly religious and philosophical productions of the nineteenth century. Tennyson himself used to say of it when people inquired of his attitude toward Christ, "Go to 'In Memoriam,' you'll find it all there." The very first line of it as already quoted is, therefore, Tennyson's confession of faith in Christ. There are in the poem many other expressions of the same faith equally ardent and emphatic. Take the following, evidently suggested by the 14th verse of the 1st chapter of John's gospel:

"And so the Word had breath, and wrought with human hands
The creed of creeds, in loveliness of perfect deeds."

This is his admirable statement of the incarnation.

He accepts the resurrection of Lazarus as a fact standing out from a background of mystery, and in the presence both of the fact and the mystery he is wholly reverent.

"Behold a man raised up by Christ!
The rest remaineth unrevealed;
He told it not, or something sealed
The lips of that Evangelist."

He refuses to accept the materialistic suggestion that we are "——— only cunning casts in clay:

Let science prove we are, and then
What matters science unto men,
At least to me? I would not stay.

"Let him, the wiser man who springs
Hereafter up from childhood shape
His actions like the greater ape,
But I was born to greater things."

Equally positive is his rejection of the suggestion of pantheism. He clings to the personality and will and love and freedom both of God and man. And with all this he teaches positively the continuance of the soul beyond the grave, and expresses the glad belief that he will know his dead friend when they two meet.

"That each, who seems a separate whole,
Should move his rounds, and fusing all
The skirts of self again, should fall,
Remerging in the general Soul,

"Is faith as vague as all unsweet:
Eternal form shall still divide
The eternal soul from all beside;
And I shall know him when we meet."

It seems evident that Tennyson fought his way to faith in the personal God as revealed in Christ through the realm of the mysterious and the unfathomable. In many a reverent passage he acknowledges this. He speaks of "believing where he cannot prove." He says, "Our wills are ours, we know not how," yet he immediately affirms, "Our wills are ours, to make them thine," speaking still to the "Strong Son of God." He says, "Behold, we know not anything," but he adds at once,

"We can but trust that good shall fall,
At last—far off—at last to all,
And every winter change to spring."

Tennyson cannot therefore be classed as an agnostic in the common, crude sense of the term. He simply recognized and humbly acknowledged, as all thoughtful Christians do, the infinite, the immeasurable, and the mysterious. We may fairly suggest that he would have been an agnostic of the hopeless sort, or perhaps a pantheist, had not his ardent faith in Christ saved him from it. In confirmation of the above it would be easy to multiply quotations from many another of his poems, but these must suffice.

As a Christian I love Tennyson. He has given noble expression to some phases of the faith that are dearest to me, and I continually look up to him as a great and reverent and Christly teacher and poet.

For a very suggestive treatment of Tennyson's part and place in "the Christ literature" of his time, "the literature that feels him, the literature bearing at the heart of it a great dream, a great passion, and a great hope," I refer your readers to George Hamilton Combs' excellent work, "The Christ in Modern English Literature." This work of Brother Combs has brought me help and insight and delight, and I take pleasure in making this public acknowledgment to the author.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

"The islands of the sea" is a Bible expression for the most distant regions. "The Lord reigneth: let the earth rejoice, let the multitude of the isles be glad!" "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off." "The isles shall wait for his law." Distant nations, islands standing alone, far away from great continents where the influences of civilization do not soon come, have received the word of the Lord. When the Scotch sailor was asked if he thought missionaries had done any good in the South Sea islands, he replied: "I will tell you a fact which speaks for itself. Last year I was wrecked on one of those islands where I knew that eight years before a ship was wrecked and the crew murdered, and you may judge how I felt at the prospect before us, either to be dashed to pieces on the rocks or survive only for a more cruel death. When day broke we saw a number of canoes pulling for our ship and we prepared for the worst. Think of our joy and wonder when we saw the natives in English dress and heard some of them speak in the English language. On that very island the next Sunday we heard the gospel preached. I do not know what you think of missions, but I know what I think." So Robert Louis Stevenson in Samoa testifies: "I had received a great prejudice against missions in the South Seas, but I had no sooner come here than that prejudice was at once reduced and at last annihilated. Those who deblaterate against missions have only to come and see them on the spot."

Two examples are enough, Hawaii and Madagascar. When Captain Cook discovered the Sandwich islands in 1778 he found them peopled by degraded savages, worshiping hideous idols and offering human sacrifices in their temples. People lived in huts and wore no clothing. Men had many wives and wives many husbands. The aged and crippled were buried alive or exposed in the wilderness to die. Mothers would dig holes in their huts, stuff the baby's mouth with something to suppress its cries and bury it alive to get rid of it. Two-thirds of the children were strangled or buried alive. Most abominable superstitions prevailed. One word in our language tells the story. We speak of certain things as "tabooed." When anything was under taboo the penalty was death to touch it. If a chief was tabooed none dared to touch his food or enter his house. It was tabooed for a woman to eat with a man. Special seasons of taboo were ordained by the priests when all work stopped and all sounds were prohibited, dogs' mouths were shut and chickens' heads tied up. Any violation of the law meant terrible vengeance from God. October, 1819, a party of seventeen sailed from Boston to these islands, rounding Cape Horn and reaching their destination the March following. At first regarded with suspicion, they were allowed after thirteen days to land, and began work under great difficulties. After six years' work schools were opened in every district with 400 teachers and 25,000 pupils and a greater proportion of the population could read and write than in New England, and great audiences attended the preaching of the gospel, often 10,000 in a single congregation. Titus Coan tells how they came and built huts near his residence and he preached daily to three or four thousand. Members of the royal family were among the first converts, one, the Princess Kapiolani, a depraved, intemperate savage with several husbands, who became one of the most intelligent Christians on the islands, and broke the power of taboo and led many to worship the true God. In 1860 R. H. Dana wrote in the New York Tribune: "I found no hut without its Bible and hymn book and practice of family worship and grace before meat. In 1870, at the great jubilee celebrating 50 years' work in the islands, the American board withdrew from the field. Fifty years' work and one million dollars had transformed a race of ignorant, degraded savages into a nation of intelligent, civilized, God-fearing men and women which is now a territory of the United States. We ask for a miracle. Is not this a miracle? Is it not worth every dollar it cost? Is it nothing to see thousands who have eaten the flesh and drunk the blood of their enemies sitting clothed and in their right minds, eating and drinking the emblems of the body and blood of Christ?

Take Madagascar. Men, women and children were treated like cattle, bought and sold. Women were so degraded even the king's wife licked his feet. Wooden deities were worshiped. Magicians held the people in bondage. Warring tribes constantly fought and plundered each other. From three to four thousand natives were sold every year and "the weeping place of the Hovas" was the spot where they first saw the sea that was to bear them from home into hopeless exile. Burning in slow fires, drowning in boiling water, beating, starving, hurling over precipices, crucifixion—were some of the cruelties practiced. No homes. Virtue unknown. Men and women slain, roasted and eaten. Gods who were monsters of lies and lusts. "You might as well try to convert sheep, oxen or asses, as to make the Malagasy Christians," said the French governor of the Isle of Bourbon.

Missionaries came, reduced the language to writing, opened schools, set up a printing press in 1826. Then the king, who was favorable, died, and a Bloody Mary came to the throne, and the infant church was stricken down, preaching prohibited, schools closed, but seed had been sown and in 1831, twenty were baptized. In 1834 a royal proclamation was made against the new faith and converts branded as criminals. The queen demanded that all books should be given up, but the converts stood together, cherished the scraps, the single leaves, of the Bible. Persecution only increased the power of the church, twenty-four hundred of the queen's officers were among the converts, thirty thousand Hovas could read the word of God, and large congregations met at the capital, and great numbers embraced the faith. But for twenty-five years the persecution bared its red right arm and held it a crime to confess Jesus Christ and thousands were tortured and put to death. Not a foreign missionary remained to teach and encourage the native disciples. There were four eras of persecution from 1835 to 1860, but God used the rage of this modern Jezebel to develop the faith and love of the disciples and when the terrible war on them ceased the Christian population was five fold greater than before the work of extermination began. The name Christian had become a symbol, pledge and promise of truth, purity, fidelity, integrity, heroism. The miracle had been wrought. In 1868 a Christian queen was crowned. Symbols of pagan faith were no longer to be seen. A Bible lay beside the laws of Madagascar. "Glory to God," "Peace on earth," "Good will to men," "God with us," were the mottoes about the throne. Idols were cast out, the Lord's day observed, religious services held in the palace courts, and the queen declared: "I have brought my kingdom to lean upon God, and I expect you, one and all, to be wise and just, and to walk in his ways." In 1895 there were 2,000 congregations, 95,000 members, 120,000 children in the schools, 375,000 adherents. The nation stands for the Bible, the Lord's day and Christian temperance. The prophecy about the isles is fulfilled.

So of Fiji, the darkest place on earth, where the people cooked and ate each other by thousands; where there was no literature, no morals. Now of a population of 120,000, there are 103,000 regular worshipers. Christ is King. So of the New Hebrides. On Geddie's tombstone, of one island, it is written: "When he came among us there were no Christians; when he left us there were no heathen." Tahiti waited sixteen years for one convert, but eight years later began a foreign mission, and that first convert of the South Seas now leads a host of one million. Truly the "gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Shall we heed the command "Go"? Shall we make March 5 the great high day in our history? God help us.

Impressions of City Campaigns

BY WORKERS ENGAGED

By Chas. Reign Scoville.

While the results of the simultaneons evangelistic meetings in Chicago would be counted rather meager for many fields, for us in this great city it is a mighty victory in many ways.

The church of Christ in Chicago moved as a unit, and that, too, in the very greatest of good works. That means much for our future efforts. Then the heroic pastors who so nobly left their own fields (many without compensation) to assist us, have met with and understand now the many problems and mighty difficulties of the work in a great city, and their sympathy and testimony of these things will mean much for us and their own fields and churches. I feel that the assistance and sympathy of these churches enlisted in taking the great centers for Christ means much. A Concord and Lexington has been fought on that part of the battlefield hitherto largely neglected by our people. Let us hope it will revolutionize our efforts and focus our energies on these great centers, until we take them in the King's name. Thus will we follow our apostolic leaders in taking Jerusalem, Samaria, etc., for they wrought righteously through the great cities, on to Antioch and Rome. The fact that the churches in Cleveland, Ohio, were in simultaneous meetings during January also, and that the Pittsburg brethren are preparing for a similar movement next January throughout western Pennsylvania, including Pittsburg and Allegheny City, and sent their secretary to learn of our plans, etc., proves that some of our brethren are beginning to lift up their eyes unto these great city fields white unto the harvest, and let us hope that the whole brotherhood "will send forth laborers into his harvest."

As chairman of the downtown meetings, which were held in the heart of the city every day for just one hour at noon, I wish to say that no one will ever be able to estimate the value of these united services to our churches in the city. Many members who had moved into the city and had been lost to our cause for years, were discovered at these services, and located with the church nearest them. On account of having the grippe, I was shut out of my own meeting ten days and only heard Dr. Willett give his last address, but if it was a sample of his previous addresses, I do not wonder that the crowds grew daily and that he had his largest audience at the last day. He spoke with no uncertain sound on the meaning of "belief" in John 3:16, and those present could have no doubt as to what to do to be saved.

I never heard the Savior exalted by more masterly sermons than by those of Dr. H. O. Breeden the second week. The committee urged him to return for the third week, but as this was impossible, the visiting evangelists supplied and the work moved right on to a climax in a general rally by all the forces on the last day. Dr. Breeden spoke one night for me at the Metropolitan church, and this address from the heart of a great general of many victorious battles, was a treat indeed to our church and an uplift to our meeting.

Three of us held our own meetings, and the final visible results were as follows: Austin, 47; First church, 42; Irving park, 14; Englewood, 26; Douglas park, 14; South side (colored), 26; Hyde park, 8; Jackson boulevard, 6; Ashland avenue, 12; Metropolitan, 108; Garfield boulevard, 11; Kirkland mission (colored), 6; and three added to the Logan square mission from the Douglas park meeting, total, 340. We closed our meeting Sunday at the Metropolitan church with 22 added the last day, of whom 20 were confessions. When we consider the weakness rather than the strength of our cause in this great city, and think of the buildings in which these meetings were held, then we feel that all Chicago's missions and churches have reason to say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Chicago, Ill.

By J. J. Taylor.

Your favor in which you ask that I give you for publication in your great paper some suggestions that have come to me out of my experience in the recent revival campaign in Chicago, is at hand. This being the first campaign of the kind ever undertaken in this country by our people, doubtless some of the methods may be improved upon. However, I do not believe any committee could, without previous experience in so great a movement, have done better than the campaign committee of Chicago. To any city contemplating a similar movement, I would suggest the following:

1. The committee in charge should, if possible, make sure that each and every evangelist is upon the ground at the beginning of the battle. A greater victory will be won when the generals are all at the front.
2. The campaign should be planned at least six months in advance, so that pastors and evangelists can exchange ideas and submit plans before the meetings begin.
3. Each individual church should resolve itself into a committee of the whole with subcommittees and have stated times for committee meetings to discuss plans and organize field forces. The chairman of the lookout committee should have a complete list of every available person within a reasonable radius of the church, so that he can give name and address, upon a moment's notice, to the pastor or evangelist.
4. The campaign should last not less than four weeks—five or even six would be better. Our campaign was just getting under headway in Chicago when we closed.

Connersville, Ind.

By Geo. B. Stewart.

In the main the same things which enter into a local evangelistic meeting to make it successful are required in a united evangelistic effort. Plain gospel preaching, good music and thorough advertising all play important parts.

The Chicago campaign was a success in every way. The noonday meetings were well attended, and interest grew as they continued. The several churches were brought into closer fellowship.

I submit a few general suggestions as per request:

1. Begin agitation soon enough to enlist all or as many of the churches in the city as possible.
2. An auditorium or hall might perhaps be in some respects better than a church in drawing the crowds.
3. Noonday meetings should begin promptly at noon and close within an hour. This was closely adhered to in the Chicago campaign.
4. Daily reports from churches.
5. Many rather than one speaker for noonday meetings.
6. Support of public press.

In this as in all of the Lord's work, prayer and pains will accomplish wonders. Furthermore hope is the mother of success in evangelism.

Chicago, Ill.

By I. W. Lowman.

The meetings were successful in winning souls to Christ. The Disciples were greatly encouraged. The noon meeting feature was effective in that it brought together all the workers and led to the discovery of a large number of people living in the city who had belonged to the Christian church before going to the city. These were directed to the churches nearest to them.

The campaign should not be made too short. The greatest difficulty in the Chicago meeting was to get a hearing. In the meeting we held at Garfield boulevard church we did not speak to more than eight non-professors at any one time. There were eight additions—four by baptism and four by letter and statement. The meeting was a great success in many ways. Our work called us away when the meetings were just beginning to attract the attention of the people.

The campaign was a success in creating a great religious power and awakening among all the churches. The inspiration of the noon meeting was something like pentecost.

De Land, Ill.

By P. J. Rice.

In my judgment the revival campaign recently conducted in Chicago, was in the main wisely planned and successfully prosecuted. It would be well, however, for cities in this latitude to choose some other season of the year. The Chicago campaign was seriously handicapped by very severe weather during the first week. January and February are so likely to be cold and stormy months that committees run great risks in selecting them as the time for evangelistic services. Almost any month, save the midsummer months, would be better. The down town noon meetings were decidedly helpful. They gave unity and strength to the campaign as a whole. It seems to me, however, that these should be emphatically evangelistic. It would be well to have one man engaged for the entire series of noon meetings. Let it be a tried and true evangelist who is accustomed to awakening immediate response from his audience. Let these meetings be preceded by a period of prayer where the workers, pastors, evangelists and a few others may get together for the purpose of waiting upon the Lord for his presence and spirit. Such a meeting would be of great value to the service immediately to follow and to the several evening services also. So far as possible in such a campaign every church should fall into line, make ample preparation and be ready to lend its encouragement and strength to all the others. By all means make the movement unanimous. Overcome local hindrances; push aside individual preferences as to time, etc., and act with all the others. This was very nearly true of the Chicago churches but it was not absolutely true as it should have been, and the failure on the part of even one church to cooperate in some way in such a movement is always noticeable.

Personally I believe in the campaign idea. I am profoundly convinced that cities where we have a number of churches could profitably undertake such an enterprise and should do so. My reasons for thus believing are many, too many to mention here.

South Bend, Ind.

By J. H. O. Smith.

The campaign in Chicago was only a preliminary skirmish. The greatest benefit was in committing the churches to an evangelistic policy.

The noonday meetings might be a strong feature if evangelistic. If a canvass of the territory contiguous to the churches could be made and definite information obtained of the religious affiliations of residents and of those who are non-church goers, it would aid in more definite work. The Chicago churches have been working obsolete methods rather than businesslike, up-to-date plans.

The simple gospel will win the masses and the classes in the city as in the smaller places, for human nature does not change when moved to the city. Too much preaching is an appeal to the Greeks, who seek after wisdom, and the Greeks do not attend revivals.

When we demonstrate that the nonsectarian church of Christ can save more men than sectarianism, they will hear us when we speak. The cities want to know what we can do. The down town meeting should have preaching that makes plain the fundamental principles.

I think we can say that our Cleveland campaign was a victory. Besides the three hundred added to the churches, our forces were invigorated and unified. I note three results of the experiment worthy of special mention.

1. The concerted effort brought the Disciples quite prominently before the public. People knew pretty generally that such a campaign for souls was on. Frequent mention of the movement was made in the daily press. One issue carried a group picture of the evangelists and pastors together with a "story" of the enterprise. The mass meeting at the Lyceum theater, with Dr. Willett as speaker, and reports from the churches as to the progress of the campaign, was of great moment to us.

2. The informal meetings of the ministers, during which results were reported and plans discussed, were very helpful and encouraging.

3. The bulletins read nightly in the churches, reporting the number of accessions of the previous night to the various congregations, and giving the total number added, were inspiring. They gave verve and vigor to the general movement and imparted unction to the services.

Two weaknesses of our campaign were apparent:

1. Insufficient preparation. We failed of large results principally through this: Several hindrances that came up as the meetings progressed were traceable to this source. Personally I do not believe any city can get ready for a really great campaign under a year's preparation.

2. Lack of co-operation on the part of all our churches. Two of our leading congregations were not actively engaged in the movement. Circumstances were such that it was not practicable for them to enter into it just at that time. Unless such a campaign is entirely representative, it can not succeed in a large way.

Finally. This experiment has increased our faith in the simultaneous plan, so much so, that our ministerial association voted unanimously to conduct a similar movement next fall, in which every church of Christ in Cuyahoga county as well as Cleveland is to have a part.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Chicago Evangelistic Campaign.

At the final meeting of the evangelistic campaign committee of the Christian churches of Chicago, at the Christian Century office, 358 Dearborn street, the work of the campaign was reviewed and reports submitted. The number of accessions gained in the various churches is shown below:

Metropolitan, 108; Austin, 47; First, 43; Englewood, 26; South Side (colored), 27; Irving Park, 14; Douglas Park, 14; Ashland avenue, 12; Garfield boulevard, 11; Hyde Park, 8; Jackson boulevard, 6; Kirkland, 6; Logan square, 3; South Chicago, 2. Total, 316.

The down town noonday meetings were successful beyond our most sanguine expectations considering the attempt of a much larger religious body in undertaking similar meetings. The meetings grew in interest and attendance to the very last, the largest single service being that of the closing day. The committee voted unanimously to recommend to the organizations that had co-operated in it the holding of a similar campaign next year to begin about November 1. GUY HOOVER,

A Great Day for Old Bethany.

It had been rumored about the village for two days that the president had good news to tell, so on Tuesday morning early, Feb. 20, students and their friends were seen hurrying across the campus from all directions to be on time at chapel. Every seat was promptly taken, a number of visitors filling up the rear benches. Among these visitors were Mr. Dinker, of Pittsburg, a member of the board of trustees, and Mr. Gardner, of Pittsburg, both of whom had come down to make the president a visit and be present at chapel exercises.

After the customary scriptural reading, prayer and singing, President Cramblett stepped to the front of the platform and drew a letter from his pocket saying he thought its contents would be interesting to all present. He then read the following brief letter:

PRESIDENT BETHANY COLLEGE, Bethany, W. Va.

DEAR SIR:—Mr. Carnegie having considered your appeal in behalf of Bethany college, has instructed me to say to you that he will be glad to pay for the erection of a library building for the above institution, same to cost $20,000. This gift is on condition that you raise $20,000 additional endowment for the college within a reasonable length of time.

Very truly,
(Signed) JAMES BERTRAM,
Secretary to Mr. Carnegie.

Scarcely had he finished the last word when a great shout as of one voice, such as college boys alone know how to give, filled the hall and mingled with the tumultuous applause of the entire student body. The president paused for silence to add some comments, but just as he began to speak, a clear manly voice near the center of the room struck up the old college song, "My father sent me to Old Bethany," and immediately the walls and ceilings were resounding with the old melody so dear to Bethany's sons. When the chorus was reached, every student—yes, every one present, it seemed—was throwing his soul into the refrain:

"On the banks of the old Buffalo, my boy,
Where old Bethany ever more shall stand;
For, has she not stood since the time of the flood,
On the banks of the old Buffalo."

On they went from stanza to stanza of the old song, gathering impulse with each repetition of the chorus until the hills and the banks of the old Buffalo themselves seemed to re-echo the strain. The song ended, the customary "college toasting" began by a deep voice in the rear calling out vociferously—

"What's the matter with Carnegie?"

At once came the response from the entire student body—

"He's all right."

"Who's all right?" rejoined the leader.

"CARNEGIE!!" came the tumultuous answer.

To one interested in the old mother of our colleges, it was a season of rejoicing. The enthusiastic body of students filling the hall, backed by a long line of visitors, and the faculty ranged on the platform, a broad smile pervading all, was a sight long to be remembered.

One could almost fancy a smile playing over the marble features of the distinguished founder of old Bethany, looking down serenely from his pedestal there on the platform, while just above him beamed the scholarly face of W. K. Pendleton, both apparently taking part in the pleasures abroad at the returning prosperity of the old college, the child of their hopes and prayers.

But among all whose hearts were made glad by the gift there was one whose joys came from the deeper depths of a loving soul. One brave little woman sat there whose hair has grown gray in the service of the old college. She has watched through sunshine and shadow its varying fortunes. The has passed through the valley of its humiliation, bearing its burdens, hoping ever and praying, yes, expecting brighter times to come. Many of us rejoiced because of the gift, but more because of the deep pleasure it brought to the courageous heart of Miss "Cammie" Pendleton, than whom Bethany has never had in all the years of her history a truer friend, a more loyal devotee.

Out upon the "old corridor" the students went that morning two and two, their songs ringing again from arch to arch along its classic way, where they walked, talked and sang by permission of the president for an hour by the college clock.

The day was appropriately closed by a reception at the Heights where President and Mrs. Cramblett gave a hearty greeting to the faculty, students and friends of the college. It being the eve of one of our national days, February 22, the halls and parlors were draped with the national colors, the stars and stripes dropped from every "coign of vantage" in the spacious parlors, while myriads of tiny flags almost covered the walls. On the mantel in the front parlor rested the portrait of Andrew Carnegie and over it fell the folds of the national ensign of his adopted country. Every one paused before this to look into the sturdy, genial face of this large-hearted son of old Scotland, who by sheer force of character has become one of the great captains of industry in this new age and by a kindly interest in his fellow man has scattered blessings far and wide from his munificent hand. Falling in soft folds from the great archway between the two parlors hung Old Glory—a mammoth flag, the gift of Mr. Dinker of Pittsburg. In the back parlor, facing the archway, was a large portrait of Washington looking down benignly on this exuberant assemblage of his countrymen. Now and then a spirited strain from the college orchestra floated in from the alcove in the rear while the happy hearted lads and lassies sped the time in converse and laughter. Thus closed a bright day in the annals of our college, an earnest of brighter days in the future, we hope and, as we bade good-night to the president and his estimable wife, all of us looked a good-night to the genial old Scotchman on the mantel and silently thanked him for the brimming pleasures of this "great day at old Bethany." —We are asked by Bro. C. H. Hilton, pastor of the church at Ellensburg, Wash., to state that there is a good opening for a Christian lawyer and also for a barber at that place.

—The Disciples' congress at Columbia, on Mar. 21 will, according to the Christian Union, give a "chance to be an honored congressman without the confusion and worry of politics."

—J. B. White will continue with the church at North Bend, Neb. The church is in fine condition and has increased the pastor's salary. Brother White was formerly identified with the Free Baptists.

—W. Ezra Sutherland has resigned at Lone Ridge, Ky. He reports that there is prospect of a church building being erected at Old Fairmount. Some of the good women of that neighborhood have raised enough money for this purpose.

—The spirit of Christian union was manifested by the Methodists at Hastings, Neb., when they put their building at the disposal of our brethren for a meeting, and the Presbyterians, who did the same thing for Amos K. Clarke at Matthews, Ind., where we have no church.

—We welcome the South Dakota Oracle, a new monthly paper to be devoted to the interest of our church work in that border state. The difficulties of issuing local papers are often very great, and we trust that Bro. G. W. Elliott, the editor, will have a goodly band of Disciples to rally to his support.

—Miss Newcomer, the Iowa state C. W. B. M. secretary, reports that Saml. Gregg and wife, of Farlin, and F. W. Mutchler and wife, of Bayard, have organized new auxiliaries in their congregations without her help, and desires to say to many other preachers, "Go ye and do likewise."

—The new building of the Fourth avenue congregation at Columbus, Ohio, was dedicated Feb. 19, F. M. Rains being master of ceremonies. The house, valued at $20,000, was dedicated free from debt, $5,000 being asked and $6,300 raised in twenty minutes. We congratulate Bro. S. H. Forrer and his congregation.

—C. H. Strawn, of Prairie City, Ia., boarding a train to go to a sick daughter in St. Louis, in response to a telegram, found Sister Newcomer returning home because she could not get through the snow to her appointment. He quickly arranged with her to stop and fill his place over Sunday, including the care of his sick wife. "It is an ill wind that blows no one good."

—The brethren at Canton, Kan., are contemplating building an addition to their house in the near future. The work at Galva, Bro. R. A. Adamson's other charge, is progressing nicely. There is a full house at almost every service. The ladies' aid society will probably build an addition to the church building this spring to accommodate the overcrowded Sunday-school, and also to be used for ladies' aid society meetings, etc.

—Brother Powell's congregation at Louisville, Ky., will not only not sell their church property for the $160,000 offered, but will expend some $12,000 in remodeling their church home. There were 30 additions on Lord's day.

—Wallace Tharp gives this advice in a pastoral letter to the First church at Allegheny, Pa.: "Let every work of the church have some claim upon you, and do your best to meet that claim. Cultivate the highest and holiest congregational pride."

—We published last week some impressions from Brother Richardson upon the union evangelistic meeting in Kansas City. This week we publish impressions from some of the pastors and evangelists who have been engaged in other city campaigns.

—C. L. Thurgood, of the Central church, Pittsburg, has for some time been troubled with a "dry baptistery" and the steps gave way when making use of it on a recent Lord's day evening. The pastor's comment is, "Brethren, let us all vote for wet baptisteries, and dry towns!"

—C. R. Neel, of St. Paul, has been proving himself possessed of fine evangelistic qualifications. Brother Neel is a man of true devotional spirit, and well equipped both by education and temperament for reaching people. Within the last seven months his church membership has more than doubled.

—The work on the wall around the mission property at Monterey, Mexico, is progressing rapidly. It will add greatly, when completed, to the appearance of the property. Plans have been drawn for mission residences to be built on the west end of the lot, and await the approval of the Board at Indianapolis.

—"In the Jan. 26 number I felt so encouraged to find such articles as those of Aylsworth on "Some Things About Christian Union," and "An After Thought" by Frank Janes. They have the breadth and depth that I feel we need. They give me greater respect for the brotherhood." FAY FINKLE.

—The first news of the foreign missionary offering reaches us by telegram from L. E. Sellers. It announces that his church at Terre Haute, Ind., where Allen Wilson has just held a great meeting, gave over $700 on Lord's day for foreign missions. This is one week in advance of the regular day, and we trust it will be the harbinger of a great outpouring.

—J. S. Hughes read a paper before the Methodist preachers of Detroit on Feb. 6, meeting a most enthusiastic reception. The Baptist preachers requested the same paper to be read to their association and received the same on Feb. 20, twice suspending their time of closing to hear the paper to the final end. Thanks were heartily tendered as in the former case.

—In the report of a meeting held by Dr. W. E. Hatcher, at Enon, Va., in the Religious Herald (Baptist), the writer says: "At the morning service, again in the afternoon, and again at night, sinners came forward to confess and accept Christ." That sounds very familiar, and it indicates progress. We rejoice at that kind of work, by whomsoever it is done.

—Dean Sanders, of the Yale divinity school, has heard of our work at Columbia, and sends the following pleasing note to Brother Lhamon: "I saw not long ago a most attractive picture of the Bible college just erected at Columbia, Mo. I have been at the state university in the city of Columbia, and can imagine how delightfully his new enterprise is situated and what a constituency you have to appeal to. I beg to offer my heartiest congratulations upon the work so auspiciously begun. Yours very sincerely,

"FRANK K. SANDERS."

New Haven, Jan. 30, 1905.

—We have read with interest an able address by Rev. C. F. Winbigler, pastor First Baptist church, Washington, D. C., entitled "This Age, and the Young People For It." It is a strong and vigorous presentation of the characteristics and needs of the age, and of the qualities of character which help young men and young women to perform worthily their part in life.

—Last week the Board of Church Extension received an annuity gift of $1,000 from Wm. Amos, of California. This is the 132nd gift on the annuity plan. Since the board began to take annuity money in March, 1898, eleven annuitants have died, releasing the board from paying interest on $11,133 All inquiries concerning the annuity fund should be addressed to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—We regret to learn of the death of Dr. A. A. Johnson, one of the most prominent among the Disciples of Christ in Texas. It was his wife who organized what is now known as the Elizabeth Johnson missionary society, and Brother Johnson himself was a pioneer in giving to missionary effort. He retired from his large medical practice after the death of his wife in 1897, but his interest in Christian work never abated.

—The health of Sister W. A. Fite is still precarious. The church at Amarillo, Texas, to which they went when they found the climate at Dallas not the thing, has granted Brother and Sister Fite a vacation of two months to be spent at Tucson, Ariz. The church will pay Brother Fite's salary, and make liberal provision for the trip. There is already a perceptible improvement in Mrs. Fite's condition, though she has been at Tucson but a few days.

—James N. Crutcher reports that W. C. Adams, a member of the Christian church at Chillicothe, Mo., and a man of limited means, gave $1,000 to missions and benevolences last week. It was divided as follows: Special work in Japan, $250; Church Extension, $200; Mothers' and Babies' Home, St. Louis, $100; F. C. M. S., $170; A. C. M. S., $100; Ashley S. Johnson (School of the Evangelists), $100, and $80 to other enterprises. All honor to Brother Adams.

—The work at the Central church, Uniontown, Pa., is prospering under the pastorate of Herbert Yeuell. Discussing the four great needs of the modern church he has just pointed out that all churches need a better conception of the thing called consecration, a better understanding of the relationship between pastor and people, more thorough organization of the whole church, and complete touch with spiritual forces. At the recent anniversary of the local Christian Endeavor society—the thirteenth —a large offering was made, each member giving 13 cents, one cent for each year of the society's age.

—I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., who has been holding a meeting for the church at Akron, O., says that the most remarkable thing about this congregation is the work it is doing for foreign missions. Brother Slayter thinks, however, it should do much more than it is doing, and says he hopes the time will come when instead of supporting a few missionaries it will sustain a whole station at a cost of $10,000 a year. The congregation is not wealthy. It raises no money at any time by means of suppers, bazars, candy pullings or other entertainments. The result of depending upon the church to pay cheerfully, systematically and religiously into the Lord's treasury enough to carry on the work, both local and missionary, has been very gratifying. The church has its drawbacks, but is one of the best in Ohio. There are three other congregations of Disciples in the city but this is the most efficient.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, and a book that tells all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure to mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

—We regret to hear that J. H. Bicknell has resigned his position as state evangelist of Minnesota, but we can understand that one who has been in his own home during the last year only eight days may long for some less arduous field of work. During the past three years Brother Bicknell has had but little home life, and this is the reason for his retiring from a field where he has done a most successful work. As soon as the right man can be found to take up Brother Bicknell's position he will be employed.

—Benj. L. Smith, the corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, O., reports the receipt of another annuity fund of $1,000, with the added information that this is the first payment of what is planned to be a $5,000 named memorial fund, in the name of which the home board will keep a missionary preaching the gospel through all the years. This plan of carrying on the Lord's work is one of the most economical and profitable of all the schemes through which we are operating as a people. The annuitant receives the income of his money as long as he lives, and yet it is devoted to doing the work of advancing the kingdom even during his lifetime.

—In a late issue of the Religious Herald, is a paragraph referring to a union meeting in Baltimore, as follows: "Dr. C. F. Winbigler, of the First church, Washington, read to the conference a very clear, pointed and strong paper relative to the uniting of the Baptists and Disciples. The paper dealt especially with the fundamental and incidental agreements and disagreements of these bodies. Many of the Christian brethren of the city were present and a lively discussion, marked by splendid fellowship, followed." In a personal letter to the editor of this paper, Dr. Winbigler, referring to this Baltimore meeting, expressed himself as delighted with the spirit of the meeting. He thinks that our ministers whom he met in that city belong to the "advanced wing" of the Disciples. We have written the Doctor that he would be astonished, if he should travel extensively among our churches, to find how many of our preachers belong to what he calls the "advanced wing." The tact is, both Baptists and Disciples have been advancing to such a degree that neither of them quite understands where the other is to-day, and when they do come in contact with each other, they are surprised to find how former mountains of difference have shrunk into mole hills!

—William H. Drummit has resigned at Mineral Wells, Texas, and will go to Houston.

—Z T. Sweeney has just dedicated the church at Owensboro, Ky., of which R. H. Crossfield is minister. The occasion was a real Kentucky feast.

—E. B. Bagby, of Washington City, is going to assist Walter S. Priest at Columbus, Ohio, in a meeting and in turn Brother Priest will assist Brother Bagby at Washington.

—The Soniat avenue church in New Orleans, itself less than a year old and assisted by the American Christian Missionary Society, is looking for a new field in another part of the city in which to plant a mission.

—E. E. Crawford, Albuquerque, New Mexico, reports that his health has been much improved since he went to Albuquerque and he thinks that he will attain still better health by remaining in that climate.

—Miss Helen Newcomer, sister of the well known William Newcomer, Beaver Creek, Maryland, has entered into rest in the full assurance of her faith. She was one of the annuitants of the American Christian Missionary Society.

—The Editor's work on "The Holy Spirit," announced last week, concerning which he has already received inquiries indicating deep interest in the subject, has been growing in his hands. It is now about half in tyoe, and will embrace about ten chapters, covering the various phases of the subject.

—A note from Sister Carey E. Morgan informs us that Brother Morgan is gaining rapidly, and that his physicians think he will be able to go to Florida in a short time. Our readers will be delighted to learn of this improvement in Brother Morgan's health, and will join us in the sincere wish that his trip south may result in still greater improvement.

—We have supposed that Bro. D. D. Boyle would continue with the church at Phoenix, Ariz., so successful has his stay there been. But Brother Boyle writes that he is now ready to take up his evangelistic work on the coast again. He says: "My four months' stay with this good church has been greatly blessed, and unusually pleasant. Their membership has been increased over 50, and all departments greatly enlarged and strengthened. We have a prosperous young church at Tempe, as the result of the writer's extra labors, seconded by these good people. A permanent pastor will be at work soon."

—Our National Benevolent Association has just received $645.17 by the will of the late Linda R. Haines, of Topeka, Kan. Let similar bequests be worded: "I give and bequeath to the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church," etc. Geo. L. Snively, Gen. Sec., of St. Louis, will visit friends of this ministry wishing to make bequests to it, and draw their wills free of charge.

—J. C. Reynolds, of Bluefield, W. Va. writes us that on Feb. 5 at five o'clock in the morning, a fire destroyed everything he owned. He was away from home, and his wife and children saved themselves by jumping from a second story window. "Not a thread saved!" His $500 library in ashes. Brother Reynolds has our sincere sympathy in this loss, and we shall be glad to assist him in replenishing his library. We should bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

—"One of the few good church papers that come to this office is the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST of St. Louis. This paper should have a large circulation in Columbia, because of its general excellence, and because its editors and publishers are so well and favorably known here. J. H. Garrison is the editor; Paul Moore, assistant editor, and G. A. Hoffmann business manager. The business, in spite of many adverse circumstances, has gotten so large that it is now moving into new and larger quarters. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ought to go into the home of every member of the Christian church in Missouri."

The above is taken from the editorial columns of the Missouri Statesman, the oldest paper in this state. We thank Brethren Burkhart and Rice for their kindly notice of our efforts to make a first-class paper useful to the churches.

—Prof. Ernest P. Wiles, who was for three years the assistant of Prof. G. B. Coler, Dean of the Ann Arbor Bible Chairs, and who for several years has been a careful student of literary interpretation, making a special study of the Bible in order to portray its literary excellencies, purposes devoting his time during the coming summer to delivering lectures of this character. His work is commended very highly by some of our ablest men, and his work in connection with many of our churches where he has lectured is spoken of in the highest terms. He is lecturing under the management of the Echo Bureau of Institute Instructors, 358 Dearborn St., Chicago, where he may be addressed by churches or societies desiring to secure his services.

—At the annual business meeting of the First Christian church, Riverside, Cal., the reports showed the most prosperous year in the history of this work. A new house of worship on a choice corner lot and the acquisition of a mission property at Arlington place increased the value of the church property from $5,500 to $20,000. In addition to this the church gave $475 for missions and benevolences. The record shows 79 additions for this year with a net gain of 53 and a present enrollment of 408; 48 active members in the Endeavor society, 51 in the C. W. B. M., 68 in the ladies' aid, and 220 in the Sunday-school will indicate the strength of these departments. During Brother Ringo's three years' pastorate 225 persons have been received into the membership—a net gain of 158, while the number of working, co-operating members has been more than doubled. A Christmas gift in cash from the officers of the church and an increase of salary in the amount of $200 a year, are tokens of appreciation that cheer the minister's heart.

—Bro. Geo. Munro, pastor of the Christian church at Galveston, whose article we recently published in the Forum with comments, writes: "I think it a fact to be deplored that many young Christian men who are able to pay their own way do not study for the ministry. I think Christian parents of bright boys who have means should encourage them to become preachers, and should more cheerfully bear the expense of educating them for that calling than for some other." We can heartily endorse that sentiment, and we believe the time is at hand when a larger number of young men of means will prepare themselves for the ministry of the word, and when well-to do parents will encourage their sons to enter the work of the ministry. After all, that is only expressing the conviction that the church is waking up to a sense of its supreme obligation to the world, and its high office as the divine agent for extending the kingdom of God.

—We have received, with the compliments of T. J. Arnold, a report of the sixteenth annual convention of the Central China Christian Mission, held in Kuling, August 14-19, 1904. The officers of this convention were: president, Elliott I. Osgood; vice-president, Mrs. Nellie B. Butchart; secretary, Edna P. Dale. In the front part of the report there is a group picture of our missionaries, twenty one in number. It is a splendid group of splendid missionaries. Concerning the outlook of the field, this paragraph from the president's address will be interesting: "How great has been the change in China in these two decades! God truly hath broken her gates of brass, and cut her bars of iron in sunder. The longing souls of his embassadors hath he satisfied, and the hungry soul hath he filled with good. The hated and despised messenger of the cross is now run after, and men, on bended knee, plead his help. With the advent of the Russian-Japanese war, even the barriers erected by the most conservative are being broken down, and this year all China seems sitting at the feet of the nations, learning. They want to know, and are willing to be taught." We learn from the report that the school work has taken rapid strides, that the native church has grown in spiritual power, that the spirit of Christian fellowship prevails among the different stations, and that the missionaries are drawing nearer to God, in preparation for a greater work. Among other good things in the president's address is the poem, "What We Stand For," by the editor of this paper, and a number of wise recommendations concerning their work and their personal preparation for it. A table of statistics of the Central China Christian Mission for 1904 shows 8 stations, 14 outstations, 9 ordained missionaries, 3 physicians, 12 wives, 6 single women, 30 missionaries. Of native workers there are 16 evangelists, 18 teachers, 39 other helpers, making a total of 73. There are 7 organized churches, with a present membership of 745, and 7 Sunday schools with a membership of 510. There are 13 students for the ministry, 11 day schools, with 230 pupils. The missionary contributions for the year amounted to $140.94; contributions for self-support $496.83, making the total native contribution $637.77. The reports from the different missions and schools give an encouraging outlook for the work, and indicate how great is the need for it.

CHURCH MONEY EASILY RAISED

—We are under obligations to the editor, Rev. W. W. Dowling of the Christian Publishing House, of St. Louis, for a copy of the Commentary on the Sunday-school lessons for 1905. It is one of the most exhaustive works of the kind we have ever seen, and gives the student a deep insight into each lesson, bringing out the points contained in each in an attractive and forcible manner. While the Commentary is doctrinal, yet it is very modestly but firmly so, and is in no wise offensive. It is vastly the superior of any nondoctrinal work we have seen, for, in common with almost every one else, we like that which has a belief and stands out for it. Indeed it is impossible to declare the whole counsel of God and leave doctrine alone.—The Flashlight (Eureka Springs, Ark.).

Ministerial Exchange.

H. L Graff, who is clerk of the church at Murphysboro, Ill., sends us the following notice: "The church regrets its inability to retain Bro. Philip Evans as its pastor. Any church needing a minister will do well to correspond with him. We commend him to the brotherhood as an honest and earnest worker."

The official board of the church at Murray, Ia., sends us a high recommendation of Bro. C. E. Pomeroy, who has been serving the church as pastor for about two years. Inability to secure the proper financial support is the cause for his departure. They say, "His Christian deportment, and his pulpit ability have greatly endeared him to the church and to the community at large."

H. A. Easton has some open dates, and will assist pastors or evangelists. Permanent address, 6430 Parnell Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The church at Greensburg, Pa., would like to hear from preachers desiring a new field of labor in the Master's service. Address Jas. E. Atha, or John S. Patterson, elders.

Bro. S. J. Vance, Eldon, Mo., can give one-fourth of his time to some church within a reasonable distance of that place.

Ernest Holmes Williamson, A. B., pastor of Budd Park Christian church, Kansas City, may be secured to conduct two or three revival meetings in western Missouri or eastern Kansas.

Sister Franc Elley, a singing evangelist appointed by the state board of Iowa, may be had for meetings. Her permanent address is Nora Springs, Iowa. It may be of interest to some to know that she is a granddaughter of that princely pioneer preacher of Kentucky, George W. Elley, who was a co-laborer with Stone, Johnson, Smith and others, during the early part of the past century.

David Millar, of Jonesburg, Mo., is available for service with some church for one-fourth of his time during this year, on the second Lord's day in each month.

C. H. Altheide, Bloomfield, Ia., is open for engagements as singing evangelist in April.

F. H. Cappa, 1111 W. Jefferson St., Louisville, Ky., is again open for engagement as singer with pastor or evangelist.

Any church in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma or Missouri, wanting a minister may address E. J. Church, Jennings, La.

From a minister's library placed in my hands for disposal by his widow, there yet remains a full set of the "Preachers' Homiletic Commentary." It is in as good condition as though direct from the publishers, and may be had for $35 cash, purchaser paying half the freight charges. Address E. F. Daugherty, 10 E. Maple St., Wabash, Ind.

J. E. Masters, Dorchester, Ill., during the past year has labored in Madison and Bond counties. He is available for work with church or churches anywhere in the fifth district for this year.

H. S. Saxton and wife at Dallas, Texas, general delivery, will correspond with churches and evangelists desiring the services of first-class song evangelists and general workers.

The congregation at Ripley, Okla., would like to have a good physician and active member of the Christian church locate with them. It is a good field. Address their pastor, H. A. Reynolds.

How to Send the March Offering.

The March offering for foreign missions should be sent promptly Monday morning, March 6, if it is all ready, to F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, O. Send by bank draft, post office order, express order or registered letter. Please be careful to give the local name of the church when different from the post office, and be careful also to state whether the offering is from a church, a Sunday-school, an Endeavor society, or an individual.

Pittsburg to Have a Campaign.

Special arrangements are being made for a simultaneous evangelistic effort in about 20 of our churches beginning Oct. 22, 1905. W. R. Warren, member of the committee on arrangement, made a visit to Chicago to get as many points from the meetings there as we could assimilate. The two things he emphasized in his report were co-operation and thorough preparation. The churches of Allegheny county have learned the value of co-operative work and are planning for thorough preparation for this evangelistic movement. At least a month before these meetings begin rallies will be held in all the churches, these rallies to be conducted by singers and speakers who are especially adapted for this work and are acquainted with the needs of each church. The pastor of each church will organize and conduct a class in his own district for personal work during these meetings.

J. D. Dabney.

Dedication at Squirrel Hill, Pittsburg.

On Lord's day, Feb. 12, the new church building of the Squirrel Hill congregation in Pittsburg, Pa., was dedicated with appropriate services. This is one of the newer congregations of the city, but its growth and present promise warrant the belief that it must stand in the front in all good works. In July of last year Bro. Geo. W. Watson, soon after graduating from Bethany college, became the minister of the congregation. The matter of building a new house soon engaged the thought of the pastor and people. The building dedicated Feb. 12, is of brick and pressed stone. It has all the modern furnishings of a city church, including baptistery, oak pews, dressing rooms, Sunday-school rooms, parlor, study, dining room and kitchen. The building complete, exclusive of lot, cost $8,000; $4,000 of this had been provided for before the dedication. It was the writer's privilege to assist in the dedication services, preaching three times and giving opportunity to those present to participate in providing for the remaining indebtedness; $4,000 was wanted and in the evening when the cash and pledges were counted it was found to the great delight of the workers that $6,138 had been pledged, an excess of $2,138. Amidst great rejoicing the church was appropriately set apart to the worship of God. The success of this enterprise is largely due to the zeal, tact and untiring energy of the pastor. We were assisted on dedication day by John A. Joyce, W. R. Warren, C. L. Thurgood, L. N. D. Wells and other Pittsburg pastors.

Accept no Substitute

To the Missouri Bible-Schools.

I desire to call attention to the continuous successful field work of our corresponding secretary and treasurer, W. A. Moore, as well as to that of his assistants of the Bible-school force. Brother Moore, while conducting the correspondence, has scarcely lost a day from the field since the Carrollton convention. His attendance upon the numerous county conventions; his great meetings at St. Joe, Nevada, Bloomfield and now just concluding at South Joplin, each of a month's duration and longer, bear truth to the above statement. The board is negotiating with a new man for southeast Missouri, one held in high esteem by the brotherhood of the entire state, and it will doubtless also grant a short, but deserved vacation to Brother Moore ere long. I am writing this, however, to urge the schools to send in their dues and pledges, at once, lessening his clerical work, and thereby enabling him to remain in the field, that our reports and rejoicings may be the greater at the Marshall convention. In behalf of the board,

A. W. Kokendoffer, president.

Disciples of Christ at Harvard University.

The Disciples' club of Harvard gave a banquet, Feb. 15, in Phillips Brooks house. The guest of honor was Dr. H. L. Willett, of the divinity school of the University of Chicago. Though the time was a little inauspicious about 30 Disciples met. Near the close of the banquet President Peabody of Harvard honored us with his presence and gave us a most beautiful speech in answer to the call of our toastmaster.

Bro. W. C. Morro presided, and with a few happily chosen words introduced the speakers of the evening. In response A. L. Ward, pastor of the St. James street church, Boston, spoke of the difficulty for a prophet of God to sing the songs of Israel in a strange land. President Peabody spoke kindly of the Disciples of Christ, rejoicing in their rapid growth, and in the increasing number at Harvard. Dr. Willett closed the evening with one of his gracious and inimitable addresses. This is the beginning of larger things at Harvard university for the Disciples of Christ.

This increase of the student body at the university will greatly help the New England work. It brings to us an increasing number of able young preachers who do fine work in the churches. These men are recognized as men of strength. The writer has heard this remark more than once from persons who know little of our movement. The presence of these students calls attention of the professors to this religious body, and these are thus led to inquire about the church. We need in New England a wise presentation of the plea of the Disciples of Christ. No fault can be found with the present work, or workers, only it is not sufficient to meet the demands.

Boston. A. L. Ward.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois.

The church at Mt. Zion, three miles from Eureka, where many of our boys made their first effort in the pulpit, is in good order and prosperous. It is ministered to by college men, perhaps more by Prof. B. J. Radford than anyone else. It has the distinction, I believe, of having a larger proportion of its membership in the Christian education association than any church in the state. It observes all days with liberal offerings for our great enterprises. It is not wealthy, and numbers, perhaps, but little more than 50 members. But it puts its money into Christian work and the Lord honors its devotion and its sons and daughters grow up to be polished pillars in the temple of our God. This is what a weak church can do if the Lord's business is first.

Pekin has one of the growing churches, in the midst of great difficulties. It was organized by W. F. Richardson, in '76, when a student in Eureka college. He doubtless builded better than he knew, as does every man who builds for God. It now numbers about 200 members, in the midst of a large foreign population and in a city largely given to drink and worldly pleasures. It maintains all the usual departments of church activity, made extensive improvements on its building and paid off old debts, and enters 1905 with better opportunities and prospects than for many years. J. A. Bennett, who graduated in Eureka college last June, is the enthusiastic minister. The Tazewell county co-operation deserves much credit for the success made possible in Pekin.

The church in Kansas, Ill., organized in '56 by A. D. Fillmore, the sweet singer of Israel, numbers 200 members. H. M. Brooks is entering his eighth year of ministry, and justly has the love and honor of the people. In this community Z. T. Sweeney, N. S. Haynes, S. W. and D. W. Nay and Ross Kern began their ministry. Some of the past pastors were, William Young, S. C. Humphrey, B. B. Tyler, Father Sweeney, N. S. Payne, S. M. Thomas and W. W. Jacobs. The latter still lives in Kansas and preaches regularly for contiguous churches. He has baptized almost 1,500 people and is kept busy all the time. The Kansas Sunday-school is the banner school of the county, and the other activities are well maintained. During the last year it has devoted some $1,800 to improvements of the house of worship. Two young men from there are in Eureka college, with a view of entering the ministry. Many of the churches are considering the value of their young people's spiritual life, and are concluding to give them the best environment and conditions in moral and spiritual matters, as well as intellectual, and their wisdom is amply rewarded by the results.

The church at Ashley is the only band of Disciples in Williamson county. They number all told about 65, have a small Sunday-school, and Bro. Elijah Collins preaches for them one Saturday night in each month. This ought not to be satisfactory, long. In this congregation Bro. F. M. Morgan, one of our good preachers of Pike county, obeyed the gospel; also C. R. Gains, just beginning to preach, living at Butler, Mo. If our small, feeble churches knew how much their faithful services really mean, they would have few reasons for discouragement and would be happy in the larger sacrifices they need to make, to have the gospel faithfully preached as much as possible.

The religious interest in Tamaroa, which resulted in the organization of a church some two years ago, was started by C. G. Kindred, of Englewood, and completed by A. H. Robertson. It numbers 130 members and has an average in Sunday-school of 150. T. F. Hall is the energetic and successful minister and is well into his second year. Although educated in Kentucky university, he seems to have adopted Illinois heart and soul, with all its interests and enterprises, as his field of labor and support. This is the only honorable thing to do. Success is already crowning his work.

E. W. Sears began his pastorate in Elkville Jan. 1, 1905. Already there have been nine additions. The Sunday-school, C. W. B. M. and Christian Endeavor are doing well. H. J. Reynolds preached here some three years and J. N. Thomas a short time. This is a good church, well united and willing to work. Its prospect is bright.

At De Soto we have an adequate building and the church has had years of usefulness. Dissension has been sown among the members of late by some one who little understands the responsibility and terrible sin of sowing discord among his brethren, so the church has suspended operations for a time. We hope to hear soon that the church has resumed business, supporting the gospel and saving the people.

Du Quoin has one of the most active, up-to-date, enthusiastic churches in all southern Illinois. It was organized in '57. Its real greatness dates from '63, when O. A. Burgess held them a great meeting. It has one of the largest and most orderly Sunday-schools in the state. Its present superintendent, F. E. Pope, was elected to his office soon after graduating in Eureka college in '93, and has held his position ever since. The stormy Sunday I was there, there were at least six former Eureka students and graduates in the audience, and many more have attended college from DuQuoin, but are now scattered abroad. The public spirit that pushes its young people out to college and development, and the wisdom that puts them under Christian influences, not only makes towers of strength of the young people, but brings back to the church most valuable resources. Are we ready to learn these facts, and to enter a more thorough patronage of our own schools, which can do immeasurably more, all things considered, for our young people than any other schools can do for them.

Education day puts the following churches and their pastors on the roll of honor, having observed the day: Mt. Zion, $4.25; Mackinaw, $28.25; Eureka, $36.40 (after just contributing $1,582, counting $285 given by students); Bethel, $8.75; Toluca, $1.89; Pittsfield, $26.40; Lynnville, $5; Kansas, $35.97; Pleasant Plains, $2.30; Homer, $5; Clinton, $5; Athens, $9; Canton, $.75; Pekin, $18.25; Heyworth, $5.50; Du Quoin, $10.10; Mattoon, $10; Arcola, Sterling, Polo, $2.65. Total churches reported, 21; amount, $214.67; average about $10. If all our 800 churches had done as well it would mean $8,000. How easy if all would co-operate. J. G. Waggoner.

BETTER THAN SPANKING.

Spanking does not cure children of urine difficulties. If it did there would be few children that would do it. There is a constitutional cause for this. Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind., will send her home treatment to any mother. She asks no money. Write her to-day if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child. The chances are it can't help it.

Nebraska.

The meeting at Liberty church (Kingston), in Custer county, held for the state board by F. S. White, lasted 25 days and resulted in 13 baptisms, four from the M. E. church and two otherwise. A new organ was purchased and paid for. A Christian Endeavor society was planned to be organized, but this was prevented by a very stormy night. It will be done later. The church is greatly built up. People came long distances in spite of storm and cold.

J. Cronenberger, of Athens, Ga., has accepted a call to the Falls City church, and will begin his work April 1.

J. W. Johnson, of Iowa, was at Kearney looking over the work. He may have been called there by the time this is read. The final report of the meeting held there by our state evangelist will be made next week. Eddyville is next in his itinerary, and will be begun Feb. 19.

The church at Liberty has repaired its building to the extent of about $200. Wm. Sumpter supplies for them every other Lord's day.

Simpson Ely is now in a meeting at Clay Center, having begun Feb. 8. A. G. Smith is the pastor there. Brother Smith expects to hold a missionary meeting at Norman in March. His church has voted to allow him to do this, and continue his salary.

Geo. M. Reed is now in a meeting at Shubert—one from Free Baptists.

R. A. Schell has been at Strang a week in a short series of meetings.

As an indication of the shifting nature of our Nebraska Disciple population, the following is related: The board had an urgent call from two places in the summer and autumn of 1904, asking that something be done to establish the work in two separate fields in the north and west—one of them quite a little city and the other a country point. The board at its first meeting decided to take up the city work as soon as a suitable arrangement could be made. When this came about, the secretary wrote to the correspondent setting a day to visit them. No reply. That was in November. On Feb. 14 a letter came from another old-time member there, reporting that the first correspondent had moved to Washington, and the letter had finally arrived at his place. In the other case the correspondent had moved to Missouri, and after all arrangements were made, with the evangelist ready to start any day, the letter so announcing it was sent, and it followed her and after some weeks is heard from in the hands of another. It is not alone the preachers that move!

The stormy weather has prevented this secretary from getting out to his Sunday work for two weeks. Trains were never so badly stalled and abandoned in the history of my work in this office. Very little could be done if one did get out.

Can you see the bottom of your coal bin?

When this 18 inch blanket of snow begins to melt under the ardent smiles of the sun, the people living in the valleys of the little and big rivers in Nebraska will need to hunt the high places. It is a good time now to get the hay under cover, and the loose fences piled up on the hills. Buy a boat.

It is not too early to plan to attend the ministerial institute at Cotner the last two weeks of July. Clinton Lockhart, Chancellor Aylsworth and Professor Sutton will be lecturers. The church that has a good, bright, active preacher should see to it that he attends th school of religious thought, in order that he may keep up with the very best. If you think your preacher is not doing quite what he might, send him to the institute that he may catch some of the spirit of progress and of best methods. It pays both preacher and church.

Texas Christian University.

During the past few days the board of trustees has been planning for the work of the coming year. Not much change was made in the personnel of the faculty. At this date, the total enrollment for the year is 460, with prospects for 500 before commencement. Last year it was 428. Considering the fact that certain financial conditions in the state have been unfavorable to a large increase, this gain is encouraging.

The state missionary convention will be held at Waco in May, and one day has been set apart for Christian education. The citizens of Waco have agreed to expend about $5,000 for finishing the exterior of the main building, in the way of towers, stone verandas, etc. This work will be done at once, and the May convention will formally dedicate the finished structure.

An important move recently was the alliance of the college at Hereford, Texas, with T. C. U. The property at Hereford has been placed under the control of the trustees of our university board, and will be owned and operated as an integral part of this institution. The main building is worth $25,000, it is built largely of stone. A good ladies' home is near the college, and will, by some business arrangement, be run in the interest of the institution. T. E. Shirley, president of board of trustees, recently visited Hereford with a committee, and all are enthusiastic over the future of the college and the country. At present the forces there are held together by Jesse B. Haston, acting president. Next September a strong faculty will be employed, and efforts will be made to build up a large school. The action of the trustees has been heartily approved by the brethren throughout the state. The school is needed. It is farther from Waco than Drake university is from Butler. Texas now stands the fifth state in population, and will soon be fourth. Our brotherhood is also growing rapidly. The school will furnish advanced students for Texas Christian university.

The outlook for Christian education in Texas was never so bright as at present. The college classes are growing larger. The Bible department is gaining steadily, and indications point to a large increase in the number of students for the ministry next year.

President Zollars is happy in his work, and is much encouraged over the outlook. He frequently lectures in our large churches in the interest of the institution, and receives everywhere a hearty welcome. He is a tower of strength to the cause in Texas.

New Century Hymnal
Edited by Will L. Thompson

Was received from the printers December 15, 1904, and in less than 30 days the first edition was exhausted. Before the second edition of 10,000 copies could be rushed through by the printers we were out of books, disappointing many customers, but we are now filling orders promptly.

The demand for this book is unprecedented, orders pouring in from all parts of the United States. This is gratifying to us, and assures us that our book meets with public approval. Bound in full cloth (vellum de luxe), 35 cents per copy; $25.00 per hundred.

Dr. E. A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia, will deliver the principal address at the commencement in June. Prof. C. W. Kent, also of the University of Virginia, and at the head of the literary department, will deliver a series of lectures to the Kentucky university students some time in March.

Dr. Irene T. Myers, dean of women, delivered an address before the women's club of this city, a few days ago, on "The Education of the Negro." The address was very favorably commented upon in the Lexington papers.

Mrs. Robert Milligan, wife of the late Robert Milligan and mother of Prof. C. R. Milligan, celebrated her ninetieth birthday a few days ago. Mrs. Milligan is still well and active. She received many congratulations on that day.

Jno. T. Brown, editor of the Christian Companion, delivered his lecture on "Sam Houston and the Alamo," in Morrison chapel, Friday evening, Feb. 3. A large crowd greeted the speaker and all were delighted with his lecture.

Mr. Warren B. Davis, of Nicholasville, representing the Periclean society, won the primary declamatory contest, Monday evening, Jan. 30, from Mr. O. E. Hurst, of the Cecropian society. Mr. Davis represented Kentucky university in the intercollegiate declamatory contest, held at Georgetown, Ky., Friday evening, Feb. 10.

Angel Rossy, of Porto Rico, has entered college. He came to Lexington last fall expecting to enter Kentucky university, but he could not speak English at all. Since then he has been under the private instruction of Professor McCartney and has acquired English so rapidly that he is now able to enter classes. Mr. Rossy likes Lexington and says he will get some of his friends to enter Kentucky university.

A. P. Finley, who is working for his A. M. this year and preaching for the Southside church, had his hands badly burned last week. A celluloid comb in Mrs. Finley's hair ignited while she was stooping before the fire, and in extinguishing it Brother Finley burned his hands. Mrs. Finley was not burned.

Prof. Wm. B. Smith of Tulane university has just written a book dealing with the negro problem, entitled, "The Color Line." Professor Smith is an old Kentucky university man, having been here in college when James Lane Allen was.

Mr. Edwin Davis Schoonmaker, a former Lexington boy and Kentucky university student, has just published, at Chicago, a poetical work, entitled, "The Saxons." It is a drama and is said to possess unusual merit. Mr. Davis's wife, formerly Miss Nancy Hall Musselman, who graduated in Kentucky university in 1902, also has unusual literary ability.

Mr. Claude L. Garth, curator of Kentucky university and a prosperous farmer of Scott county, died Friday, Feb. 3, and was buried at Georgetown, Sunday, Feb. 5. President McGarvey and President Jenkins conducted the funeral and the board of curators attended in a body. Mr. Garth was a very devoted Christian and very benevolent, having given $20,000 about a year ago to the educational fund of the College of the Bible, besides having established one or more scholarships in the college of arts.

There were no classes in the College of the Bible on Wednesday, Feb. 8, on account of the missionary rally which was held at the Central church that day. F. M. Rains conducted the rally and, despite the bad weather, it was well attended and a success. E. B. B.

Dedication of Central Church, New Castle, Pa.

The Central church at New Castle, Pa, better known as the Long avenue church, was dedicated Lord's day, Jan. 8. This new church building, the second dedication conducted by the writer in New Castle within a year, is a handsome structure, worth in the neighborhood of $25,000. It has almost a score of class rooms, a large auditorium with gallery and in all respects is a most complete house of worship. On dedication day, there remained $4,200 of indebtedness against the property; $4,500 was subscribed to meet this indebtedness. F. M. Biddle, the pastor of the church, began his work with the congregation on the day of dedication. The building enterprise was inaugurated by W. D. Trumble, now pastor at Meadville, Pa. John A. Joyce, evangelist for the state of Pennsylvania, filled the time between the departure of Brother Trumble and the coming of Brother Biddle. Bro. Thos. W. Phillips, known to our entire brotherhood for his generous benefactions, was present at all the services and to him is largely due the growth and prosperity of this congregation. Brother Phillips is a member of the First church, but no enterprise of our people in New Castle is foreign to him. The First church with its pastor, Bro. W. L. Fisher, and the Seventh church with its pastor, Brother Stiffler, were present and participated in the services of the day. The fellowship of the New Castle churches is a very great delight.

Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

J. A. Joyce, the efficient corresponding secretary of the western Pennsylvania missionary society, has just put out a statistical report showing our resources for the Master. His report is from 17 counties, giving 120 churches, 16 013 members, 11,822 in the Bible-schools, 1,708 in Christian Endeavor, 1,131 in Juniors, and 1,277 in the C. W. B. M. The value of property is $955,300. The total amount given for missions was $17,903.20, making an average per capita of $1.11. It is the ambition of the brotherhood to double these figures by the time the convention comes to Pittsburg, in 1909.

R. S. Latimer is president of the western Pennsylvania missionary society and has filled that position for 16 consecutive years. He sees the work from every angle and keeps a watchful eye upon the business side of it. The secret of the marvelous success of this missionary board is in the assurance they give every contributor that his money will be used for preaching the gospel. Brother Latimer guards this point well, till some may think he is obstinate, but it is one of his strong points. Another point where he shows his genius is that where others might scold or show their authority in some way he laughs till all coincide with his rulings and all goes well. One fact more than any other that accounts for the board of western Pennsylvania missions moving forward so harmoniously is that everybody's claim is kindly and courteously heard and discussed, and all points pro and con are understood. These claims are brought up at a meeting held every month, where all the ministers or any member of the church may attend and be heard on any claim for the good of the Master's cause in western Pennsylvania, and everyone has an equal voice with any other. This is the most democratic organization I have ever met.

The weekly evangelistic report at our ministerial meeting Feb. 6, showed additions to the different churches in the county of 30—23 by confession and baptism and seven by letter or statement.

Incorporated.

It is well known to most of our people in Missouri that our mission work was not in any way incorporated, hence could not hold title to property of any kind. At the last state convention the recommendation was passed unanimously, asking that incorporation be secured. The whole matter, therefore, was placed in the hands of Brother Ralph F. Lozier, of Carrollton, one of the leading attorneys in the state, and by his superb management the "State Board of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society" has just received its articles of incorporation. It was not possible, or wise, to incorporate the society as such, but the incorporation of the state board serves every purpose.

We are certainly under the largest obligation to Brother Lozier for his effective efforts in this important matter, and all the more so, that he not only would not receive any remuneration for his services, but actually paid out of his own pocket all the costs in the case as his own personal contribution to state missions. We are sure the entire brotherhood is indebted to him for this generosity on his part.

This removes the last objection that has sometimes been offered against leaving our state mission work any property, especially real estate. We hope to find many brethren, if they cannot help otherwise, remembering the state work in their wills. We fully believe that our people in Missouri are just as loyal as those in any other state and, had the opportunity been presented, they would have followed the example their brethren in other states have set them in this important interest. The state work in Indiana, Ohio, Illinois and Kentucky especially has been made beneficiary from bequests and legacies. Remember the State Board of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society is an incorporated body and can receive and hold property in whatever form it is given.

Missouri Christian Lectureship.

In view of the fact that the Disciples' congress was to be the guest of the Missouri Disciples this year, it was decided at Fulton last spring that the Missouri lectureship should unite with the congress and have one great meeting, rather than to have two meetings with fewer in attendance.

It was decided that the lectureship should have an address on Monday evening preceding the opening of the congress and a business session on Tuesday morning from 8 till 10 o'clock. The lecture will be given by Prof. J. B. Jones, of Fulton. His subject is "The Codes of Moses and Hamurabi Compared."

Brethren, take note and all go to Columbia on Monday, March 25, and hear the lecture and attend the only business session of the lectureship this year on Tuesday morning.

Pray for the Offering.

I desire to send to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the heartfelt request that they will immediately join with a number of us in fervent prayer that the March offering for world-wide missions may be according to the will of God. We know that he desires not the death of any human beings but that all may be brought to repentance and life eternal. He desires also that his children shall have fellowship in making known his gospel to "every creature," "His saving health among all the nations." Our Lord taught us to say earnestly, humbly and sincerely in our closets: "Thy will be done on earth," and promised to reward us openly. "If we ask anything according to his will he heareth us" (1 Jno. 5:14).

Thomas E. Bondurant.

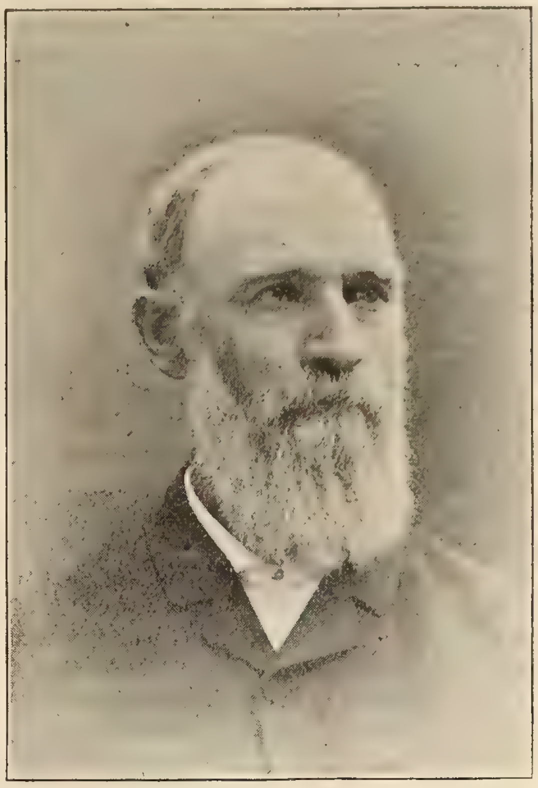
Among the pioneer settlers of Illinois were Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bondurant, who came from northern Kentucky in 1828 and entered a tract of land six miles east of Mechanicsburg, Sangamon county. It was here that Thomas E. Bondurant was born Dec. 29, 1831. He was the fifth in a family of eleven children.

He came to Piatt county April 9, 1856, and settled on the 290 acre farm northwest of and near where the town of DeLand now is. He had entered this land two years before under the graduation act of Congress, at 50 cents an acre. Here he drove his stakes and prepared a home for himself and loved ones. Joseph Bondurant, the father, died in 1864. In 1871 Brother Bondurant's mother and sister came to make their home with him. This good mother passed to her eternal reward Oct. 15, 1892. Brother Bondurant laid out the town of De Land in 1872 and always felt and took an active interest in its welfare. In his young manhood he had a great desire for an education. But there were many hindrances in those days. However, in the fall of 1855, at the age of 24, he entered Eureka college as a student, and continued through the school year.

Upon his return to college the following session, he was taken sick, and was compelled to return home. Cares multipled upon him and he gradually fell into the line of work which he followed from that time on. He set a very high value on education, promoted the cause where and when he could, and always regretted that he did not have in early life the opportunities of education now so universally enjoyed. He became a member of the church of Christ when he was about twenty years of age, and for fifty three useful years he served the Master. Until a congregation could be organized near his home he placed his membership with the church at Farmer City which he regarded with affection, and often aided financially.

He was largely instrumental in the establishment and maintenance of the Christian church at DeLand, of which he was at death an honored and beloved member. For many years he served as elder, treasurer and clerk, and was always ready to bear any responsibility the brethren laid upon him.

There was a time when by night or by day, in cold or in heat, he could go anywhere that duty or business called him In every hour of the twenty-four he had times without number gone over these prairies. He could go through darkness and rain, ford swollen streams and overcome difficulties on every hand without fear or complaint. He could take long, tedious, rough rides to Albany, N. Y., and other cities in the east, to dispose of his stock, or go with corn to Bement when it was but ten cents per bushel, or ride a whole night to meet an appointment and keep his credit good. Much of his success in business was due to the confidence that people learned to have in his indomitable will to meet his promises.



But the time came when his physical powers began to fail. For a number of years it was only this same indomitable will power, his love of life and business, and the love and care he had in his home that kept him on his feet and in the arena of work and business. We may not dwell upon these later years of mingled pain and pleasure the brave struggle to overcome difficulties, to live on to serve God and help men. He loved life and work, and asked no furlough from service He did it all in much bodily weakness during these later years, but he did it in a kingly way, and when he fell his sceptre was in his hand.

Since the accident of falling, on the 27th of October last, he had been confined to his bed. His long-time lung trouble was the immediate cause of his death Thursday, January 12, will always be sacred in the hearts of those who gathered around his bedside upon that day. He talked with the family—which, in addition to his sister Mary, included Mr. and Mrs. Trenchard—and others present, taking them one by one. By his desire his sister Mary read to him the twenty-third Psalm, which he seemed greatly to enjoy. In these last words of parting he did not forget some who had been in his employ. He spoke to them collectively, telling them that while he would like to live with them longer, he was not afraid to die. He counseled them to always do right, and urged them to do what they could to preserve and carry forward the good cause of the Lord. He then kissed them all good-by.

On Monday, Jan. 16, at the close of the day, in his old home and in the presence of his loved ones, this courageous soul laid aside its mortal tenement and went away, as we believe, to the house and home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

CALIFORNIA.

Imperial.—Two more by confession and baptism. All departments of church work are looking up.—J. F. Sloan.

CANADA.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, Feb. 21.—Two baptisms since last report. Evening audiences steadily increasing in size till now our house is nearly filled sometimes.—Alex McMillan.

COLORADO.

Colorado Springs, Feb. 20.—Ten added yesterday morning. One hundred and thirty-three since our revival began.—Crayton S. Brooks.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Feb. 20.—At the ministers' meeting to-day the following additions were reported: Whitney avenue (Walter F. Smith), 1 by statement; 15th street (J. E. Stuart), 7 by statement and 7 confessions; H street (J. Murray Taylor, pastor, and J. J. Taylor, evangelist), 9 by statement or letter and 5 confessions; Vermont avenue (F. D. Power), four baptisms; 34th street (Claude C. Jones), one baptism. Total, 34; 17 by letter or statement and 17 by confession and baptism. Meeting at H street continues.—Claude C. Jones, secretary.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Feb. 18.—The union of eleven churches in this city, in evangelistic services under Munhall the evangelist, is resulting in many conversions—about six hundred having made a public profession of their faith in Christ to date. The Church street Christian church intended to have held a meeting this month with Bro. E. L. Frazier and H. H. Saunders as evangelist and singer, but the continuation of the Munhall meeting over six weeks, and to the 1st of March, has cut out our meeting for the present. We have not been able to have special meetings since the fire, owing to the limited seating capacity of our temporary building, and what development we have made has been made through regular services only. We had additions last Lord's day and will have others to-morrow. While we may differ in some matters with Munhall, he has been preaching some excellent sermons and the spiritual influence of the meeting has been of a high order. Prof. J. Lowe and wife have had the music in charge, and it has been excellent. The meetings continue two weeks longer.—T. H. Blenus.

ILLINOIS.

Pekin, Feb. 20.—Our meeting going well here; 23 additions to date, 20 being confessions. We have a splendid chorus assisted by pianist, organist and two cornet players. Our audiences are becoming larger all the time. J. A. Barnett, the pastor, is doing the preaching. I sing for C. A. Burton at Franklin, Ill., in March. Open for meetings after that.—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist.

Mount Pulaski, Feb. 23.—In third week of meeting here with nine additions. The devil is strong, working through 11 saloons and as many gambling houses; but the Lord is blessing our efforts. This is the home of old Brother Robinson, one of our retired ministers, and his support is a great blessing to the church. Guy B. Williamson and wife are the singers.—D. A. Lindsey.

Neoga, Feb. 20.—Meeting here two weeks old; 28 added to date, 18 by baptism among this number. We have received one Lutheran, one Catholic, one Adventist, one Baptist, one M. E. preacher who has served as pastor and evangelist for 11 years. The town is stirred by the old gospel. Churches needing my services as minister or evangelist write me at Fithian, Ill.—W. H. Anderson.

Saunemin, Feb. 23.—We are now in the third week of an interesting meeting, the forces being led by Brothers De Voe and Shields, of Indiana. Sixteen confessions to date. Will continue over next Lord's day.—W. P. Carrithers.

Winchester, Feb. 21.—Closed at Terre Haute, Ind., with 273. Crowded here and go to large skating-rink Thursday night.—Allen Wilson.

Pleasant Plains, Feb. 25.—Just closed a meeting of 13 days with Percy T. Carnes, of Maroa, in charge. Russell E. Booker, of Scottville, conducted the singing. The meeting resulted in 11 baptisms.—J. H. Henderson.

Havana, Feb. 25.—We closed three weeks of special services Feb. 20. E. A. Gilliland, of Clinton, did the preaching, and his sermons greatly strengthened our cause in this city. The sickness of Brother Easton, who began as leader of song, and that of the pastor, which continued during the entire meeting, greatly hindered the work. Five were added as the immediate result.—Louis O. Lehman.

Danville, Feb. 25.—January 8-13 Marion Stevenson, of Chicago, delivered a series of Bible lectures in the Third church of Christ here. There were six additions, and the church was prepared for the meeting that followed. January 15 J. M. Elam, of Rensselaer, Mo., began the meeting and continued 29 days. There were 74 additions; 40 baptisms and 34 by letter and statement, eight of the latter were from the denominations, and five of the former.—S. S. Jones.

Galesburg.—The meeting was a signal success. The city is largely dominated by universalism, which seems to be about the most useless ism there is. Brother Brown has accomplished a great work there, especially considering the location of their church building. The meeting resulted in 51 added, and but for the stormy weather it might have reached 100. We go to Milwaukee, Wis., and will be open for engagements after that.—J. E. Powell and Mrs. J. E. Powell, evangelists.

Bloomington, Feb. 19.—The best meeting ever held at the Second Christian church has just closed its fifth week. J. H. Gilliland, the pastor, did the preaching, with H. H. Saunders, of Noblesville, Ind., as the leader of the singing during the earlier part of the meeting. The additions up to date are 97, of which more than half are adults. Brother Gilliland is unflagging in his zeal and energy, and the fact that all the seating room has been occupied nearly every night, despite the severe weather, attests his power to hold an audience. The congregation now numbers 550, is three years old, has a new church building costing $27,000, and is out of debt, an enthusiastic and undivided body. Meeting still continues. —E. C. F.

Washburn, Feb. 20.—Three added, 2 by immersion and one by statement. Feb. 19 was a great spiritual feast.—T. M. Burgess, clerk.

Lawrenceville, Feb. 20.—I closed a meeting with my church in Lawrenceville, Feb. 1, having spoken daily from Jan. 1. The visible results were 72 accessions to the church, the majority of whom were men and boys. These additions came from the ranks of the foremost social and business and financial and professional life of the community; and they contained the elements of strength for a vigorous church of themselves. Mr. J. E. Lemmons, a business man of the church, led a chorus of 35 voices, which stood faithfully by the interests of the meeting, and sang the people into the kingdom.—L. H. Stine.

VERY FEW PEOPLE

Are Free From Some Form of Indigestion.

Very few people are free from some form of indigestion, but scarcely two will have the same symptoms.

Some suffer most directly after eating, bloating from gas in stomach and bowels, others have heartburn or sour risings, still others have palpitation of heart, headaches, sleeplessness, pains in chest and under shoulder blades, some have extreme nervousness, as in nervous dyspepsia.

But whatever the symptoms may be, the cause in all cases of indigestion is the same, that is the stomach for some reason fails to properly and promptly digest what is eaten.

This is the whole story of stomach troubles in a nutshell. The stomach must have rest and assistance and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets give it both by supplying those natural digestives which every weak stomach lacks, owing to the failure of the peptic glands in the stomach to secrete sufficient acid and pepsin to thoroughly digest and assimilate the food eaten.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or other wholesome food, and this claim has been proven by actual experiment, which any one can perform for himself in the following manner: Cut a hard boiled egg into very small pieces, as it would be if masticated; place the egg and two or three of the tablets in a bottle or jar containing warm water heated to 98 degrees (the temperature of the body) and keep it at this temperature for three and one-half hours, at the end of which time the egg will be as completely digested as it would have been in the healthy stomach of a hungry boy.

The point of this experiment is that what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do to the egg in the bottle they will do to the egg or meat in the stomach and nothing else will rest and invigorate the stomach so safely and effectually. Even a little child can take Stuart's Tablets with safety and benefit if its digestion is weak and the thousands of cures accomplished by their regular daily use are easily explained when it is understood that they are composed of vegetable essences, aseptic, pepsin, diastase and Golden Seal, which mingle with the food and digest it thoroughly, giving the over-worked stomach a chance to recuperate.

Dieting never cures Dyspepsia, neither do pills and cathartic medicines, which simply irritate and inflame the intestines.

When enough food is eaten and promptly digested there will be no constipation, nor in fact will there be disease of any kind because good digestion means good health in every organ.

The merit and success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are world-wide and they are sold at the moderate price of 50 cents for full sized package in every drug store in the United States and Canada, as well as in Europe.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis.—The 17 days' meeting with M. V. Grisso at Michigantown, Ind., resulted in seven baptisms. On Feb. 25 we began with V. W. Blair at La Fontaine.—E. L. Frazier, H. H. Saunders.

Summitville, Feb. 20.—Two more at regular services yesterday—one from the Baptists and one reclaimed.—Chas. E. Underwood.

New Albany, Feb. 24.—S. M. Martin is now engaged with the Central church in a meeting that no doubt will surpass anything in the history of the Christian church in this city. As many as 500 people have been turned away from a single service; 27 have been added thus far.—B. F. Cato.

Butler, Feb. 22.—Closed a meeting at Whitehouse, O., Sunday, Feb. 19, with 20 additions—three by letter, two by statement, two from the Methodists, one from the Baptists and 14 baptisms. A Christian Endeavor organized, also the completion of the church organization. A minister is wanted at once for half time; write J. J. Bruhelman (elder), Whitehouse, O.—D. F. Harris.

Huntington. — Twelve additions to the church Feb. 12 and 19 at the regular services, all by confession and obedience; 65 grown persons were received into the membership of the church on these two Sundays, making a total of 235 as the result of the Brooks brothers' meeting—165 baptisms. Our building is not adequate to our needs. Yesterday we turned away numbers of people; this means that we must have a new building.—Cephas Shelburne.

Matthews, Feb. 20.—We closed a few days ago at Oakford with the church much strengthened, a strong, influential board ordained, 11 confessions, 93 reclaimed, and the church now in fine condition for good work for the Master. We began here at Matthews with no congregation and no church. The Presbyterian brethren were kind to us and gave us their church for the meeting. We have preached each evening for 10 days, despite the cold weather. Night before last 36 came forward; yesterday morning, Lord's day, two more and last night one came forward. We will organize a good church here. Meetings will continue this week. We commence meetings at Medaryville, March 1, 1905, the Clarke family, evangelists.—Amos K. Clarke.

IOWA.

Cherokee, Feb. 20.—Had a great meeting yesterday. Three young ladies made the good confession. Church in fine shape. Will take the March offering.—S. R. Reynolds.

Davenport, Feb. 24.—We closed our meeting in this city last night; there were 38 additions by confession and baptism and eight otherwise. The congregation is not large, but a splendid class of people. The church is free from debt; it is a real pleasure to find such a church. Our meeting added much strength to the church. Under the wise management of their pastor, Bro. A. Martin, I am sure there is a bright future for this church. I expect to begin a meeting in Independence, Kansas, tonight.—H. A. Northcutt.

Humeston, Feb. 23.—H. C. Patterson has been with us in a meeting now in the third week. The church would not hold half the people so we are in the opera house and immense audiences nightly gather. Other churches have had no meetings since he began and the members all attend and are delighted. Brother Patterson holds his audiences for over an hour each night. He often speaks one and a half hours and not even the children become restless. Men whom no one else could reach hear him gladly. We have had a few confessions but he is preparing the harvest for someone to reap if we can't reap it now.—E. B. Cross, pastor.

Burlington, Feb. 21.—We closed our meeting here with 43 additions for three weeks. Percy Leach, of Iowa City, did the preaching. The church has been greatly strengthened by the work done. Carl R. Houghton, our own consecrated leader of song, had charge of the music. The last night of the meeting our church was packed to the doors, many stood up and others went away unable to get inside the building. Of the new members 35 were by confession and baptism, one by letter, six by statement and re-consecration and one from the M. E.'s. We are expecting many others in the regular services.—Arthur Long, pastor.

Iowa Falls, Feb. 23.—Our meeting of nearly six weeks' duration closed last night with a fellowship and social meeting for welcoming the new members. But a brief service was held and five responded to the invitation. There were 25 confessions, 11 from other religious bodies, and four by letter and statement: 40 in all. This was a great meeting, considering that we only had 40 active members; and considering that the meeting ran through the intense cold and great snowstorms of this region without missing a night. Chas. G. Stout, state evangelist, did us good service. A beautiful porcelain clock was presented to him as a token of regard. The subscription was started and is being pushed, to keep the writer full time, with good prospects of success. This will be a necessity to hold what we have gained. We acknowledge our obligations to our state board for the timely aid given us. Without this we could not possibly have undertaken this work. This meeting is only a slight indication of the splendid opportunity Iowa Falls presents to us as a people, to "take the land." We are well able to do it, so far as our plea is concerned. We hope in the summer to erect a tabernacle and continue this meeting, where we can have a place to hold the people.—C. C. Davis.

JAPAN.

Tokyo, Feb. 2.—I baptized 11 last month, including three who were prepared for baptism by Miss Wirick. Work is growing.—W. D. Cunningham.

KANSAS.

Cunningham, Feb. 21.—Our meeting here is progressing very finely for the weather. In 16 days 28 have been added. Double service last evening, a men's and a ladies' mass-meeting. Crowded houses at both places. Baptismal services yesterday afternoon.—C. C. Atwood, general evangelist, Nelson Gardner, singing evangelist.

Fall River, Feb. 20.—Meeting here goes nicely. Brother Butler is a fine worker, and greatly beloved. We have been disappointed in one meeting. Those desiring our services write us here. M. E.'s dismissed and attended our meeting Sunday evening.—Jas. S. Beem and wife, evangelists.

Downs, Feb. 16.—There were seven additions—three by primary obedience and four by letter—to the church here last month and two by confession and obedience so far this month, all at our regular services. J. T. H. Stewart, from Ohio, is holding a meeting for our brethren at Osborne. Brother Stewart baptized me 18 years ago at Hamilton. W. W. Blanchard is the efficient pastor at Stockton and the church is doing nicely under his labors.—J. N. Aldrich, pastor.

McCune, Feb. 24.—Thirteen additions today in a meeting conducted by David Lyon.

Salina, Feb. 23.—Two young men were baptized last Sunday, and one two weeks ago. —David H. Shields.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, Feb. 20.—We are having a great wave of revival in Louisville just now. There were 44 additions to our churches in the city yesterday (Sunday), six at the church I minister to at Parkland—five confessions and one by letter. We feel there is a fine prospect before our people in the city.—G. W. Nutter.

MISSISSIPPI.

Aberdeen.—A recent meeting conducted by O. P. Spiegel closed betore the reaping time, but he and W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, are to return there in July, and push the meeting to success.

MISSOURI.

Vandalia, Feb. 22.—Our pastor, Brother Harbord, is doing good work here. He and Brother G. W. Kitchen are in a protracted meeting with 48 additions to date.—Mrs. T. W. Hughlett, secretary.

Lamar, Feb. 21.—Two confessions last Sunday morning at our regular service; our church is in a healthy condition.—S. W. Crutcher.

St. Louis, Feb. 20.—Closed meeting at Alton, Ill., Feb. 17, with 50 additions. Organized with 65 members.—E. T. McFarland.

Canton, Feb. 25.—The revival services conducted by W. A. Morrison, of McPherson, are continuing with unabated interest, three accessions by baptism are the visible results so far. The weather has militated somewhat against the attendance. The meetings will continue through next week. The writer will fill Brother Morrison's pulpit at McPherson next Lord's day morning and evening. The M. W. A. purchased the Presbyterian church building at Galva and the L. A. S. of Canton bought the pews and installed them in the Christian church at Canton, which adds to the looks of the interior of the building as well as to the comfort of the members.—R. A. Adamson, pastor.

Queen City, Feb. 25.—Meeting closed last night. Three weeks, 35 added—30 confessions, five by statement. Church in good shape. J. E. Cresmer, the evangelist, has accepted a call to Manhattan, Kan.—P. M. Lind.

Carthage, Feb. 25.—Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Kentucky, has just closed a meeting with us in which, despite the dreadful weather, there were sixty additions, of whom thirty-eight came by confession. Brother McLellan made an excellent impression upon the public. The congregation also was greatly strengthened.—J. T. McGARVEY.

Maplewood, Feb. 25.—Brother A. Munyon, state evangelist, aided the Christian church of Maplewood, St. Louis, in a three weeks' meeting. It was during the coldest weather ever experienced in this latitude during February and the audiences were consequently small. There were 10 confessions and five others added to our fellowship, making 15. The church was delighted with Brother Munyon's work and we shall long remember him as a most earnest and capable minister of the gospel of Christ —G. A. HOFFMANN.

Troy, Feb. 9.—I had one added at Louisiana the second Lord's day in January. Preached at Old Monroe at 7:30 P. M. where Brother Gary recently organized a small church and raised $1,000 towards a new house.—E. J. LAMPTON.

NEBRASKA.

Clay Center, Feb. 21 —We are in a good meeting here with 16 additions to date. Still there's more to follow.—SIMPSON ELY, Joplin, Missouri.

Hastings, Feb 20.—Evangelist B. B. Burton opened a meeting here a week ago. From the first our church was not large enough to accommodate the crowds. The Methodist church board generously and of their own free will offered us their church, saying we could have the use of it and preach what we pleased. We have accepted their kind offer and begin to-night in their building. We are looking forward to a great meeting.—LUCILE MAY PARK, singing evangelist.

NEW YORK.

North Tonawanda, Feb. 25 —Meeting here is three weeks old to-day; 68 added; nine yesterday; will close to-morrow.—H. H. MONINGER.

OHIO.

Van Wert, Feb. 20.—One by obedience Jan. 19, one by letter from the M. E.'s Feb. 12, and one by baptism Feb. 16, one confession Feb. 19.—N. E. STEVENS.

Akron.—The meeting at the First church of Christ here, in which the minister, J. G. Slayter, was assisted by I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., closed with 46 additions, nearly all of whom united by confession and baptism. The weather was remarkably cold and led Mr. Slayter to say he wanted the next protracted meeting in the milder month of October. Still the attendance and interest were remarkably good. The interest increased daily, and although the streets were particularly icy on the last night of the meeting, the auditorium was not large enough to hold the people. If the meeting could have continued five or six weeks, it would no doubt have added many more to the saved. There are in almost every city in which the people are familiar with the gospel, many who could be moved to obedience to Christ only by an unusual religious awakening.

Bowling Green.—On Feb. 8 I commenced a meeting with the church here, which Bro. Clyde Darsie serves. We were greeted with a full house the first night, and at the close of the week we found it necessary to go to the opera house. This we filled and turned some from the door. We at times turned hundreds from the door. At the end of the second week we had the whole town aroused; people would fill the house long before the service. At the end of three weeks 90 had come forward, and 86 were received into the church. At a reception tendered the new members, five others came forward and were received into the church, making a total of 91 as a result of three weeks' meeting. I want to say that the victory was won by perfect harmony and united effort of pastor, people, singing evangelist, and evangelist. I want to make special mention of our singing evangelist, Raynard of Hiram college. He purposes to do this kind of work; he is a clean, competent singer and personal worker.—J. O. SHELBURNE, Cleveland, Ohio.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Newark, Feb. 25.—Meeting three weeks old and 56 additions. Grant W. Speer, of Hicksville, is doing the preaching. The singing is conducted by home forces. We expect a great day Sunday.—H. NEWTON MILLER.

Columbus.—Eight additions at regular services this year at the 4th Avenue church. E. J Meacham, of Wilmington, O., is assisting the pastor in revival services.—S. H. FARRER.

OKLAHOMA.

Newkirk, Feb. 23.—Fine audience last Sunday. Baptized four. There were also two accessions by letter.—F. D. WHARTON, pastor.

OREGON.

Dallas, Feb. 22.—Three confessions and two added to the church by letter last Lord's day.—G. L. LOBDELL.

The Dalles, Feb. 16.—Meeting 10 days old, 19 additions.—T. S. HANDSAKER AND WIFE, evangelists.

La Grande, Feb. 20.—Meeting six days old with 19 confessions, three otherwise; of these 21 came yesterday.—J. V. COOMBS, evangelist; O. H. KING, pastor.

TEXAS.

Weatherford.—With the assistance of Evangelist Richard S. Martin, we have struggled against the angry elements in an endeavor to hold a series of meetings. Each afternoon and evening we have continued until the balmy sunshine has given us great audiences. Fourteen have been baptized, and many others are seriously contemplating the great stand for Christ and primitive Christianity. The Christian spirit among the denominations is highly commendable. Some of the ministers have attended and participated in nearly every service. Friday evening after the sermon, Brother Martin asked four ministers to state briefly "how a person could be saved," and they responded promptly with practically the same conditions. The future of the Central church is unmistakably bright. Dr. Martin will deliver his lecture, "America: Its Dangers, Delusions and Delights," before a great union mass meeting at the court house Sunday afternoon.—ERNEST MOBLEY.

WASHINGTON.

Walla Walla, Feb. 20.—Three additions by confession this week.—MORTON GREGORY.

Elma, Feb. 22.—One from the Baptists. All lines working nicely. Expect to be in a meeting soon.—J. W. RATCLIFFE.

Waverly, Feb. 13 —The revival services which are in progress at this place, are meeting with marked success. The people of Waverly and vicinity have seemingly sat entranced under the gospel teachings, and without deference to rain, snow or cold weather each night the house is filled, often to overflowing. Morton H. Wood, of Spokane, is conducting the services. The number of additions reached the hundred mark last night, and interest is still at its height. Many young men are doing active work in our short prayer services which are held at different homes by the young people each evening before services. Plans are definitely laid for a new church building, and we are anxiously desiring a pastor.—LILLA COBB clerk.

WISCONSIN.

Ladysmith, Feb 23.—We began a meeting here Feb. 14 with G. W. Wise of Rochester, Minn., doing the preaching. There have been nine confessions to date and the prospects are good for a large ingathering.—H. F. BARSTOW.

A FORTUNE IN EGGS.

I get so many letters from my old home about preserving eggs, that I will answer them through your paper. I started 1888 with $36, bought eggs at 8 to 10 cents in summer, preserved them, and sold in winter at from 25 to 30 cents a dozen. I preserved eggs 12 years and made $30,000. My niece started in 1894, with $10, which she reinvested each year, with the profits and now she has $16,346, all made from $10, reinvested for eight years. You can buy eggs very cheap now and sell them from 25 to 30 cents; figure the profits yourself. To preserve them costs a cent a dozen. I can't answer letters as I travel, but any person can get desired information by addressing the PEOPLE'S SUPPLY CO., No. 9 Moore Block, New Concord, Ohio; they started me. This is a good business for city and country. C. GREEN.

A Free Baptist Reader.

I should have acknowledged the kindness that has permitted me to enjoy the reading of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, before this, but have been too busy. I wish to say I have enjoyed your paper very much, and am very glad of the opportunity it has given me, together with the Christian Standard, of learning more about your people. I have read your paper with deep interest both because of the views expressed by the paper, and also on account of the discussion relative to the matter of union between our denomination and your people. May the Lord's will be done in all things, and glory come to his great name. I shall always have an interest in your people from henceforth that I never have had. G. L. LOWELL,

Kind of Evangelists Needed.

I feel the time has arrived for a great evangelistic move all along the line. The field is ripe as never before for the harvest. We need men not money for this gospel; faith evangelists and not commercial evangelists. Our great evangelists to-day are men of faith. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands in the front rank, and we should do more to give it an audience. To me it is not so much a voice as a still small voice, a spirit, an inspiration. I always feel broader, stronger, more hopeful and loving after I have read it.

May its light rays ever shine to dispel the darkness of the mind and heat rays ever fall to soften and warm the heart, that its chemical rays may fill many lives with the rainbow of Christian hope. M. F. REDLIEN.

RELIGION AND THE HIGHER LIFE. TALKS TO STUDENTS, by William Rainey Harper, Pres. University of Chicago. (The University of Chicago Press, 1904. Price $1.00 net.)

We are glad that Dr. Harper has seen proper to gather up and publish these talks to his students. They present him in a light which will be new to many people who have gathered their impressions of him from newspaper criticisms. These lectures to young people present him as deeply concerned for the religious welfare of the young, wise in counsel as to the problems which confront them, giving supreme place to Christianity as a molding force in character, and to Bible study as the best means of forming the religious life. We should be glad if our space permitted to quote extensively from the book to show the author's reverent spirit, and the high estimate he places upon the word of God, and the emphasis which he gives to Bible study.

We believe it due to the colleges, however, to give the author's answer to the question, "Does college education lead men into infidelity?" Answering the question negatively, he adds: "If we mean to define infidelity as a general distrust of the existence of a divine being, a downright denial of immortality and of the truth of the gospel, and a refusal to bring one's life under the teaching of Jesus, I maintain that infidelity so far from increasing is rapidly decreasing. A comparison of the religious condition of the older colleges to-day with that of the same institutions fifty years ago will show indubitably that there is in them to-day a far more sturdy belief in the fundamentals of the Christian religion. Further than this, there is to be found to-day religious interest in our colleges which is absolutely unparalelled. It is not only that Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations are more prosperous and more influential than ever before, but the colleges themselves are awakening to their responsibility for the religious life of their students Everywhere we see the establishment of chairs for biblical instruction; the formation of Bible departments; the institution of preacherships especially adapted to the needs of the college mind; the outgoing of the earnest life of the students in college settlements; great conventions of college men and women under the direction of religious leaders."

We should regard any class of young people as highly favored in being permitted to hear such lectures, and we trust that in the form in which they are now presented they may have a wide reading among young people and teachers of the young. Personally, we thank Dr. Harper for giving us these lectures in their present form, and we have no hesitation in commending them to our readers as sane, healthful, and helpful; mentally and spiritually invigorating, and likely to induce greater attention to Bible study, and to the cultivation of the religious spirit.

[Since the foregoing notice was written we have learned with profound regret of Dr. Harper's serious illness and of the improbability of his recovery. This fact lends additional interest to this volume.—EDITOR.]

THE SLAVERY OF SIN.—John 8:31-40.

Memory Verses, 31, 32.

Golden Text.—Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.—John 8:34.

While he was in Jerusalem at this Feast of Tabernacles, Jesus uttered some remarkable discourses. This feast was a time of great rejoicing over the mercies of Jehovah to Israel, a time of exultation over the special glories of the chosen people and of the celebration of the liberation of Israel. Jesus chose this time, when the nation was prone to be more than usually well satisfied with itself, to proclaim sentiments in striking contrast to this attitude.

They were celebrating the journey through the wilderness to Canaan, in the course of which they were miraculously given food and drink. Jesus cries: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink" (7:37). They were remembering the days when the pillar of cloud and fire was the light of their path and the oriflamme leading them into a larger and freer life. Jesus said: "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (8:12). Into the midst of a feast in honor of national freedom—as fervent and patriotic as a Fourth of July celebration—he came with a virtual declaration that they were still in bondage and could become free only by knowing the truth (8:32) and by being liberated by the Son (8:36).

Thus did Jesus strike at the barren conceit of freedom which was cherished by the Jews of his time and by the sinners of every time. In truth, mere freedom from external control is the smallest part of liberty. The Jews did not even have that, though they boasted of it. "We are Abraham's seed and were never in bondage to any man." How about the Egyptian bondage then? and the Babylonian captivity? and the conquest by Alexander? and the cruel oppression by the Syrians? and the strong arm of the Romans?

But Jesus did not make this easy answer to their boast. It would only have angered them and would have drawn the argument away from the point which he wanted to reach. "Every one that committeth sin is the slave of sin." That was the main point. That was their real bondage. The yoke of Rome was as nothing compared with this.

The lesson teaches three points about freedom:

1. Knowledge is necessary to freedom. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Ignorance is slavery. Everything which a man needs to know and does not know is a shackle to him. In nature, we are in bondage to the unknown. Every new discovery breaks off one of our chains. Ignorance is the soil in which superstition flourishes, and superstition is slavery. Ignorance of moral and spiritual truth shuts man in the dungeon of the merely material. The knowledge of God's truth gives wings to the soul and opens the door of the cage.

2. Righteousness is necessary to freedom. "Whosoever committeth sin is the slave of sin." No chain upon the limbs is half so tight a shackle as the paralysis within the limbs which checks all movement before it is even attempted. Sin paralyzes.

3. Freedom must come through Christ. "If the Son shall make you free, you shall be free indeed. Because he is the great Teacher who can give us the most necessary truths, and because he is the great enemy of sin who can free us from its creeping paralysis.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

A STUDY OF ACTS II.

(Read Entire Chapter.)

This chapter holds a pivotal place in the unfolding of the divine plan. It marks the completion of God's self-revelation to men in that it records the coming of the Holy Spirit to enter into a new relation with humanity. Here we have a record of the first discourse preached under the new dispensation—the dispensation of the Spirit. The chief speaker on this occasion was the apostle Peter, to whom had been committed by our Lord, the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whose prerogative it was to announce authoritatively the conditions of remission of sins, and of church membership in the Christian dispensation.

The preparation. It should be noted that the ten days which had elapsed between the ascension of our Lord and the descent of the Spirit had been spent by his disciples who were gathered at Jerusalem, in a prayer meeting (Acts 2:1-14). Note also that the day of Pentecost, that is, the fiftieth day after the Passover, in Jewish history, and now the fiftieth day after the crucifixion of Christ, who was our Passover, found them "all together in one place" (Acts 2:1). If we would receive the Spirit to-day, we should prepare ourselves for such reception.

The coming of the Holy Spirit. Notice the extraordinary phenomena associated with his coming, such as "the sound of the rushing of a mighty wind" and the parted tongues "like as of fire," but do not confuse these with the Spirit himself, with whom "they were all filled" (Acts 2:4), "and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

Opinion of the men on the street. The noise soon attracted a great crowd of people, who were confounded by what they saw and heard, and the only explanation they could offer was that these people were "filled with new wine" (v. 13); in other words that they were drunk. That there was exhilaration is evident, and these men of the street attributed it to wine.

Peter's explanation. No, Peter said, this is not drunkenness, but it is the fulfilment of the old prophecy recorded from Joel (Read prophecy) (Acts 2:17, 18). It is the Holy Spirit, not wine.

Preaching Jesus. Peter then presents Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ of God, who being crucified and buried, had risen from the dead, had ascended to the right hand of God, and had sent forth this which they saw and heard. He appealed to his audience for the truth of the signs and wonders which he did right in their midst, and he charged them with having crucified the Lord of glory.

Effect of sermon. "They were pricked in their hearts, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do?" These were the very men who had known Christ in the flesh, and had been instrumental in his crucifixion. Convinced now of his divine character and mission through the facts stated by Peter, which they could not deny, they realized their undone condition, and asked what they should do.

The way of salvation. "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 2:38). Faith had already been produced by the Holy Spirit through the preaching of Peter, and they were exhorted to repentance and baptism, and were promised the gift of the Holy Spirit. This was not the way of salvation for the Jews alone, but for all people of all time. "For to you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto him" (Acts 2:39).

Obedience. Three thousand souls obeyed the Lord in baptism and continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching (Acts 2:41, 42).

How the church prospered. (Read verses 43-47.) Religious awe and enthusiasm, unity, sharing their goods, steadfastness in worship, joy in Christian service, enjoying favor with the people, and daily additions—these were the characteristics of the first church of Christ ever planted on this earth—a good example to follow.

Prayer. Our Father in heaven, we thank thee for the gift of thy Son and for the gift of thy Holy Spirit, who came on Pentecost to give us a further revelation of Christ, and to convict men of sin, of righteousness and of judgment. We thank thee that the Holy Spirit came to abide in the church forever, and that we may claim and enjoy his gracious influence to-day in carrying forward thy work in ourselves, and in the world. Help us to return to the simplicity and purity and power of this gospel, and of this first church, that the world may be converted, and Thy name glorified, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

CHRIST THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.—Luke 4:16-19; 5:27:32; 1 Pet. 2-24.

For the Leader.

Jesus is many things to us. He has done for us what no one else could have done. He gave himself a ransom for us. He died for our sins according to the scriptures. The influence of his teaching, and of his life as an embodiment of what he taught, has done more to make the modern world what it should be than the total of all other influences. We are the gainers by this. He draws men more than all the world's great teachers. There is something about that superb life that holds us as if by spell. He did things for the poor of his day. He showed them the true light of life. But one part of his earthly ministry has held a charm for the modern world as well as for the day in which he lived: he was a physician. He healed men. He did this as no one else had ever done. He was the Great Physician.

For the Members.

1. Jesus announced his program from the reading stand of the synagogue of his home town. He announced it upon the day when as a Jew he had been accustomed to enter the place of devotions and Bible study. The greatness of Jesus in all other respects is coupled with the most wonderful living any one had been able to accomplish. If we desire to be great in any one particular, not to speak of many particulars, may we not get a clue to its secret in this holy living?

2. In that program of Jesus, as Drummond styles it, healing in body and spirit is almost the whole of his efforts. He fulfilled an outline that had been dictated by one sick of sin and suffering under the yoke of a wicked world. But if there is the unity of one great work in his plan, so is there unity of one great agency, qualification, power—the Spirit of the Lord. That same Spirit was to come upon his disciples before they were to start upon their mission to the ends of the earth. May we not be far better followers of Jesus if the same Spirit is upon us?

3. He was to heal the broken-hearted. Ah, how sweet is that gospel that proclaims healing to the hearts that sin has broken. There is so much suffering of heart in the world to-day, and no more than of old, that one would despair were it not for the promises and power of the Great Healer of hearts. We may come to him with the worst cases. In fleshly healing we say it is a good time to come early to the physician. He can more easily and more surely heal then. Even under these circumstances it is a question sometimes whether the art of healing is not guesswork. But not so with our Great Physician. We can come to him broken in heart and spirit and ruined, so far as the world can see, and he will heal us.

4. The greatest art of healing, from the standpoint of the people afflicted in his day, was that of restoring sight. There were so many blind in and around Jerusalem. There are to-day in all these oriental countries. Both sin and ignorance were and are at the bottom of this affliction in most instances. How they flocked the way of the Savior, for they had heard of his power. Was he able to heal them? Had any one the great power credited to Jesus? Could it be so? At any rate they were going to give him a trial. They never came in vain. He healed them. One said, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, I now see." Jesus was the Great Physician who could heal the blindness of the natural eye.

5. But was that the worst blindness of the day of Jesus? And was his restoring of physical sight the greatest restoring of sight possible to him? Not by any means. The worst blindness of Jesus' time, and the saddest affliction of that land, was blindness to the worth of his character and life. It was that kind of blindness that led them on to his crucifixion. Blindness to the truth. Blindness which comes from a bad heart. That was the worst blindness in Jesus' day. He healed many from it. He undertakes, through his apostles, to heal all the blindness of heart in the world. Has he healed me? If I have asked him. If I have sought him out in the lone watches of prayer, he has healed me. He alone is able to heal this wicked heart.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Oh, Lord, help me to know if I am poor and blind, and heal me from my infirmities.

HOYT.

Stephen A. Hoyt was born in Saugerties, N. Y., July 27, '34. He came to Eureka, Ill., in '58. In '61 he enlisted in the army under Capt. O. A. Burgess. He fought in the battles of Fort Donelson and Pittsburg Landing, being wounded in the latter. He served as second sergeant in the signal corps and as clerk in provost marshal general's office. At the end of three years he returned to Eureka and on Oct. 3, '65, was married to Miss Rutilia Gillum, who survives to mourn her great loss after near 40 years of most devoted companionship. He obeyed the gospel about 38 years ago. Although isolated most of the time from any congregation, yet he took our papers, kept well informed about all our great enterprises, all of which felt the blessing of his benevolent spirit. For many years he was a valuable and helpful trustee of Eureka college and contributed to its treasury. He died Feb. 11, '05, of heart failure, induced by grippe. His memory is precious and his works follow him.

LESLIE.

James Leslie, one of the oldest, as well as one of the most faithful, members of the Christian church, died at his home in Cincinnati, O., Feb. 8. Born in Edinburgh in 1819, he came to New York with his parents in 1834 and completed his apprenticeship in the gold beaters' trade. Starting a manufacturing branch of his trade in Cincinnati, he subsequently withdrew and entered Bethany college. Later he returned to Cincinnati, which was his home until his death. He helped in the progress of dental science and was the first to discover the adaptability for the purposes of the profession of the cohesion of gold. His work was crowned with medals and honors. He took a prominent part in economic and political movements, but never held any office other than that of president of the Ohio Mechanics' institute – for he was devoted to young men and boys – and elder of the Christian church. It was in 1839 that he joined this and he never missed attendance upon its services when it was possible for him to be present. He had been feeble ever since his return from the St. Louis convention. He made a great effort and attended the new year's service at the Central Christian church. But the pneumonia had told on his strength and later congestion of the lungs carried him off. He was twice married and leaves one daughter, Lillie, a grandson and three nieces. His second wife was one of those who organized the C. W. B. M. Brother Leslie was a man of God, who lived on the mountain heights and could bring spiritual refreshment to those who had not got out of the valleys. His life should be an incentive to the men who have to take up his work. Full of faith, inspirational in his optimism, devoted in his attachment to the good, right and truth, he was one whom the church can ill afford to spare from her work.

McFARLAND.

Elder Martin McFarland was born in Loydsville, Belmont county, O., June 14, 1854, and died Feb. 6, 1905. He was married Nov. 21, 1873, to Miss Mary C. Sallee, near Independence, Mo. Of this union eight children were born, seven of whom, together with his wife, survive him. At the age of 15 years he gave his heart to the Savior. When only 16 he entered the profession of teaching in the public schools. Two years later he aspired to the ministry and for several years he combined preaching and school teaching. Later he devoted his time exclusively to the ministry of the word and held pastorates in many of our best churches in Missouri and Kansas, Rockport, Me., Savannah, Oreg., Barnard, Mo., Medicine Lodge and Columbus, Kan. He was pastor of the Second church in St. Louis at the time of his death. He was an evangelistic pastor, holding meetings for his own and other congregations. It was his joy to organize new congregations in the schoolhouse near his congregation. Never a Lord's day did he miss preaching three sermons. During his labors more than 1,200 souls were brought into the kingdom of God's dear Son. He was held in high esteem, both in and out of the church, in the communities where he labored. The sympathy of a large circle of friends is extended to the family in their sorrow.

Mrs. Smock, wife of Ed. Smock, at Maud, Mo., died Jan. 15, 1905, a victim of typhoid fever. She was among the best of mothers, exerting a most positive Christian influence in the home, where there were six sons and one daughter. She was a most valuable member of the Maud church. She was born Jan. 31, 1855. The funeral sermon was preached by the pastor, J. B. Weldon, at Spencer chapel, Jan. 16.

Do You Suffer with Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery.

Mr. R. Johnson, Sr., a prominent citizen of Grand Forks, N Dak., writes, I tried twenty physicians and changes of climate without relief, but was completely cured by the Kola Compound after fifty years suffering. Dr. W. H. Vail, an eminent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes that he tried Himalya on several different cases of Asthma with satisfactory results in every case. Mrs. Millie Borchers, Amanda, Ohio, writes, I suffered with Asthma twelve years until the Kola Compound cured me. Mrs. W. E. Murgittroyd, North Chatham, N. Y., writes, I suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief until I used the Kola Compound which cured me. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the importers, copies of which they will be pleased to send you.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it

Theological Battle of the Poets.

A REJOINDER TO "RATHER BE A BAPTIST," IN BAPTIST ADVANCE; AND "ANSWER," BY T. R. BURNETT, IN BURNETT'S BUDGET.

I'd like to be a Baptist true,
And—tho' I'd oft backslide,
I'm sure I'd not forever fall,
With Jesus as my guide.

I'd like to be a Methodist,
And—into heaven glide;
My freewill choosing this for me,
With Jesus as my guide.

I'd be a Presbyterian
(John Calvin by my side),
Nor could a single babe be damned,
With Jesus as my guide.

I could Episcopalian be,
Perhaps with trust and pride;
What could prevent me "feel the power,"
With Jesus as my guide?

I'd just as soon be "Campbellite"
(This name they can't abide);
I could not speak unchristianly,
With Jesus as my guide.

I'd ever be a Catholic
(Please do not me deride);
I'd live that life religiously,
With Jesus as my guide.

I think I find in God's own Book,
All creeds—the good and tried,
Which land a soul in heaven at last,
If Jesus be the guide.

The water question is the bane,
How it shall be applied;
I pray you, churches, cease this war,
Take Jesus as your guide!

Now, each great church is orthodox,
In this world—old and wide—
Which fights for God, and not for self,
With Jesus as its guide.

For water does not save the soul,
Howe'er it be applied;
Man worketh out his own life's plan;
God saves, if Jesus guide.

—Harmonizer.

[The only trouble about the theology of this poem is that it assumes that Jesus would "guide" anybody into being a "Baptist," "Methodist," "Campbellite," etc,, or anything else except a follower of Himself. No doubt there are many of Christ's people wearing these names and accepting these traditions, but it is hardly allowable to say that Christ guides them into these opposing doctrines. LLOYD BAXENDALE.

By G. P. RUTLEDGE.

Author of "Pledge in Sermon."

CHAPTER XXII.

ANOTHER WINTER.

"The Poplar Square Heresy" continued to claim the attention of the religious press and the "orthodox clergy"—especially that of the ——— church in Providence. But Mr. Baxendale remained a fixture in the estimation of the public, while marvelous prosperity attended his work.

He continued to be "the most popular and yet the most unpopular preacher in Providence."

He treated his critics courteously and kindly, whenever he met them, but did not take formal notice of their criticisms—he was never known to reply to anything that was said or written against him, not even the inferred reports that involved his Christian character.

He permitted the Lyceum Bureau to make only a few engagements for popular lectures, and gave almost his undivided attention to the church. The audiences steadily increased until the capacity of the house was taxed at every service—frequently scores and hundreds were turned away. All of the preaching services were evangelistic. No matter what the subject, it held out a message to the unconverted, and each sermon was concluded with an invitation. Accessions to the church were constant—many of them from other churches in the city. Neither the church nor its pastors solicited the members of other communions. Nevertheless, some of the most influential people of the various denominations studied the "new doctrine" and embraced it.

Mr. Baxendale and the gospel he preached were kept before the public in a special way by Major Burns, who established "The Poplar Square Pulpit" and made himself responsible for its expenses. The little paper, published every Thursday, contained the sermon of the previous Sunday, announcements for the next week, and such other news as pertained to the local work. A copy was mailed, free of charge, to each member of the church, and thousands were distributed throughout the city. They were regularly and systematically placed in the hotels, barber shops and other public places. And, occasionally, when the sermon was especially conducive to thought upon doctrinal themes, boys were paid to put the paper under doors and distribute it upon the streets. The Major's name, in bold type as publisher, gave "The Poplar Square Pulpit" a prestige that would have been a boon to any local sheet.

"If the Major would only lend his name and give his money to a worthy cause, he could accomplish a wonderful amount of good," is a sample of the references made to him and his paper by Mr. Baxendale's opponents.

During the winter, both "Grandfather" Peterson and Ralph Cunningham passed away.

"Grandfather" Peterson's funeral was another great occasion. For years he had led a retired, quiet life and was considered extremely childish; yet, in his day, he had been a substantial business man of the city and a conspicuous member of the Poplar Square church. Although the service was held on Thursday, the church was filled. Many of the oldest business houses were closed for the hour, while the heads of numerous firms, that did not "close doors," stole away long enough to pay the tribute of respect they felt for the worthy citizen whose honored career had come to an end.

Standing before the large, intelligent audience, Mr. Baxendale delivered a short sermon on "An Eloquent Old Age." He referred to his own fifteen years' association with the deceased, and was, at times, so affected that tears trickled over his cheeks. At the close of the service, several who had never before heard the Poplar Square pastor said that if a heretic could preach like that, they did not think heresy could be such a bad thing, after all!

Ralph's was a secluded funeral at the palatial Cunningham residence. Only the family and relatives were present. Warren Williams offered to take the "unimportant funeral" off his hands, but Mr. Baxendale insisted that he should conduct it. Upon entering the bereaved home, a strange solemnity took possession of the preacher. He began reading, in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, with a trembling voice. Those of the company who knew him well were surprised, for never before had they seen him the least embarrassed. And when, before the lesson was finished, he broke completely down and cried like a child—unable to go further with the service—their astonishment was complete. Fortunately, Warren Williams, who, while calling in the neighborhood, had dropped in, took charge and concluded the service.

Returning from the cemetery he said to his companion in the carriage: "Lloyd, what was the matter with you to-day? I never knew or heard of your going to pieces before."

Mr. Baxendale again gave vent to his feelings and, applying his handkerchief to his eyes, sobbed piteously until they were nearly at their destination. Then, regaining control of himself, he said: "I cannot give the explanation, Warren. And, hoping you will not think me rude or insane, I want to request that this matter be kept perfectly quiet, and also that you will never speak of it to me again."

Mr. Baxendale and Alma met often, but neither suspected the heart yearnings of the other. And, as is usually the case when love is misunderstood, each tried to affect a distant air in the other's presence. In his soberest moments, Mr. Baxendale rebuked himself for thinking of Alma so much.

"Why should a young lady of her wealth and prospects tie herself down to the prosy existence of a preacher's wife? Then, why should I be wondering if she could love me?" he would ask himself.

Alma, likewise, had her alternate seasons of sentiment and self-rebuke. Looking at her pastor from the pew and listening to his manly sermons, she sometimes permitted her thoughts to dip their wings in the deep well of her affections and then to soar in the delightful heavens of reciprocated love.

But when he shook hands with her hastily, gave her an indifferent word, or—as was frequently the case—passed her in the aisle without even recognizing her existence, she would return home, reproaching herself for having entertained such foolish visions.

"He does not love anyone—he is too busy. And if he were so inclined, I would be the last girl in the church he would think of. Why should I keep thinking of him in this way? I must stop it."

Thus she repeatedly chided herself. But Alma was no more successful in commanding her feelings than was her preacher lover.

Time and again, when alone with her, in her home, for a few minutes—he was always her father's guest—Mr. Baxendale endeavored to say something that would lead up to the one theme of his heart, when with or thinking of her, but the words always refused to be uttered. This eloquent man—always ready and at his ease in conversation and before vast audiences—was powerless, yea speechless, when the desire to tell the woman he loved what was in his heart commanded him to speak!

Sometimes, too, he would write a letter, telling her of his love—once he asked her in a matter-of-fact way to become his wife—but each missive met the fate of the one he had written in Burlington. Had the waste-basket told the maid who cared for Mr. Baxendale's rooms about the love with which it had been intrusted, Madam Rumor might have embarrassed both the preacher and his church. But, fortunately, it maintained a loyal silence.

Four Anecdotes

THE EMPEROR AND THE MANDARIN.

During the Taiping rebellion there lived at Nanking a man who, occupying an official position, had to do with the purchase of arms and ammunition for the forces defending the Manchu dynasty. He purchased wooden arms and a lot of ammunition absolutely worthless and pocketed most of the nimble funds allowed for the purchase. His treasonable rascality became known at the Court, and high officials were despatched from Peking to remove his head and carve him up. Being a man of great wealth, he sent the approaching representatives of the emperor valuable presents, and later on received the functionaries into his own residence, elegantly and lavishly entertained them, and made such an equitable division of his wealth that the would-be executioners were diverted from their purpose. But an emperor's edict cannot be openly trifled with, so a very shrewd scheme was laid and hatched. On a certain day the executioners with their attendants gathered together with a great fuss. The streets were lined with troops, and it was given out that the offender had been beheaded. To prove the fact, the defaulting warrior was carried out in a large wooden coffin, and with befitting ceremony removed to the country, there to await the decision of the geomancers as to a propitious site for burial. The man is still living in Nanking, enjoying the funds contributed by the emperor for the purpose of bona fide cannon.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF BAMBOO.

On the crowded streets of this bustling emporium of Szechuen, one sees many things made of bamboo. Indeed, in this province a man can sit in a bamboo house under a bamboo roof, on a bamboo chair at a bamboo table, with his feet resting on a bamboo footstool, with a bamboo hat on his head and bamboo sandals on his feet. He can at the same time hold in one hand a bamboo bowl, in the other bamboo chop-sticks, and eat bamboo sprouts. When through with his meal, which has been cooked over a bamboo fire, the table may be washed with a bamboo cloth, and he can fan himself with a bamboo fan and take a siesta on a bamboo bed, lying on a bamboo mat with his head resting on a bamboo pillow. On rising he could smoke his bamboo pipe, and, taking a bamboo pen, write a letter on bamboo paper, or carry his articles in bamboo baskets suspended from a bamboo pole, with a bamboo umbrella over his head. He might then walk over a bamboo suspension bridge and drink water out of a bamboo ladle. The bamboo ingenuity and persistency have produced (bamboo) joint results which exhibit the potentialities and possibilities of the Chinese people.

THE CHINAMAN'S WORLD OF UNREALITIES.

It has been said that the Chinese are unimaginative, materialistic and matter-of-fact, that they live in a narrow, circumscribed sphere. But the fact is that the Chinese live in a world of unrealities. They worship demons whom they have never seen. Innumerable religious institutions for the sole purpose of locating devils are established all over China. The religious devotee spends time and money in attempts to rid himself of the influence of the demon world. He is haunted by spirits who follow him in his office, in his carriage or his palanquin, into the privacy of his home, and even behind the curtains of his unfeathered bed. There are good spirits also, besides the spirits of his ancestors, whom he worships more often and perhaps more sincerely than high heaven. You cannot call a Chinese a spiritual man nor a demonized man, but he lives in constant dread of the spirits of the upper and nether world. The country which possesses the largest coal deposits in the world has never mined coal for fear of disturbing the Great Dragon who is supposed to govern the air and the earth. "Shall we drive shafts into his back," they ask, "when it is sure to arouse him from his slumber, and the serrated hills around us will be immediately transformed into fierce dragon beasts?"

CHINESE EXAMINATIONS.

One marvel in Nanking, in every respect the greatest—the Examination Hall. The tiers of cells into which the students pass for the real work of the great examination, are built of brick in single rows and roofed in with tiles, each stall measuring in front forty-four inches deep, thirty-seven inches wide and five feet eight inches high. In the rear wall of each is a small niche where the occupant places his candle. In one row of these diminutive study-rooms I found ninety-six of these, and in another row more than one hundred. There must, then, be accommodation here for at least fifteen thousand students, and I can readily believe the official who gave this large number as the estimate. It sometimes happens that even these are inadequate.

There are many very remarkable features connected with these celebrated Examinations or Literary Competitions. One of the most extraordinary is the difference in the ages of the students. I was told of one boy who took his middle, or M. A., degree at eleven years of age, but he had a very short life. Old men of seventy and even eighty years of age who have perchance tried many years and failed, still come up, hoping to gain the tablet and the flag, that their families may enjoy the exalted honor.

Russia and Japan as Educators.

Remarkable contrasts between the attention devoted to education in Japan and in Russia are shown by Mr. George Kennan in his letters now appearing in The Outlook. Under the caption, "Which is the Civilized Power?" Mr. Kennan, among other important facts bearing on the comparative morality and enlightenment of the two countries, gives the comparative educational statistics of the two powers. The official figures, he says, show that "Russia has at school only 4,484,595 pupils, or about 25 per cent of her children of school age, while Japan has under instruction 5,351,502 pupils, or 92 per cent of her children of school age. Russia, with a yearly national revenue of about $1,000,000,000 spends for primary education something less than $12,000,000, or 8 cents per capita of her whole population; while Japan, with only one-eighth of Russia's revenue, spends for the same purpose nearly $16,000,000, or 34 cents per capita of her whole population. Russia's military expenditure bears to her primary school expenditure the ratio of nearly 18 to 1, while Japan's disbursements for military purposes bear to her primary school expenditure the ratio of less than 4 to 1." Mr. Kennan also notes the great thirst for reading in the Japanese cities. In Tokyo, for instance, "there is a bookstore on almost every block, not only in the parts of the city inhabited by the higher social classes, but in the quarters and districts tenanted almost exclusively by poor shopkeepers, artisans, and day laborers." The English language is taught Japanese students in the higher primary schools. These facts explain why there is such a demand for high-class American works in Japan, and why the Funk & Wagnalls Company is continually making large shipments of the Standard Dictionary and its abridgments to that country, while these same works have practically no sale in the unhappy domain of the Czar.

How the Senator Turned Out the Colonel.

Van Buren returned from New York on the legislative express, which carried few passengers who had not a pass. By chance an Albany merchant, Van Buren's old friend Colonel G. Humphrey Ring, took seat No. 17 in the senatorial parlor-car, and settled himself to enjoy the river view when the train should reach the Hudson. State Senator Brown had been watching the man who goes around to hammer the car wheels and see that they are sound, and heard him remark to the assistant depot-master that one of the wheels on this particular car was cracked and that another car would have to be substituted. Going on into the car, Senator Brown walked up and down the aisle examining the numbers on the seats. Stopping at seat No. 17, he turned to Colonel Ring and said:

"Pardon me, sir, but I am Senator Brown, and that is my accustomed seat. I should be glad to furnish you with another seat. Porter, show the gentleman another seat."

Colonel Ring fumed.

"Why should I give you my seat? What presumption! I might say, what impudence!"

Senator Brown calmly turned to the porter.

"Johnson, tell the gentleman who I am."

"That's Senatah Brown, sah. The senatah always comes up on this train."

"Find him another seat then. Here is a Wagner ticket for my chair, and I'll give it up to nobody."

"I regret exceedingly, sir," placidly continued Senator Brown, "the manner in which you choose to take my polite request. I made it not on my personal behalf, but in the interest of the people of the Empire state. I am accustomed to occupy seat No. 17, and, basking in the afternoon sunshine, to view the Palisades, the Catskills, and the noble Hudson. A few hours so spent fill me with a serene tranquillity, and enable me to approach my legislative duties in a proper spirit, which redounds solely to the benefit of the people of the state, whose servant and representative I am. I regret the necessity to take other measures. Conductor, this gentleman has a ticket for seat No. 17, car Pocahontas, and insists on it. Kindly have this car taken off and some other car substituted on which this gentleman's ticket to seat No. 17 will not be good. Provide him, however, with equally good accommodations."

Turning to the other passengers, almost all of whom knew him personally, Senator Brown went on: "It is with regret, gentlemen, that I see you put to this inconvenience, but the good of the people is the supreme law. You can say it in Latin, if you prefer. I am going upstairs to see my friend Chauncey and have the change made."

Senator Brown went out on the platform to watch the fun. Colonel Ring was storming, and passengers who knew Senator Brown were wondering what would happen next, when the assistant depot-master came in, and shouted: "All out. This car is not going."

"Why isn't it going?" screeched Colonel Ring. "Do you allow this gang of impudent politicians to run this road? I am a stockholder, and my firm and my father before me. I'll bring this to the attention of the directors and the president and the stockholders. This is an outrage!"

The innocent assistant depot-master, who knew Colonel Ring, was astonished. "Why, colonel, you don't want to ride in a car with a cracked wheel, it's dangerous. Our car-tester just found a crack. Another parlor car will be put on at once, and this one will be sent to Mott Haven for a new wheel."

"That's your way of letting yourself out of it. You don't appease me. I don't blame you. I suppose you do what you're told. But I'll see whether this road is run by this gang of pass-riding politicians or by the stockholders and the public."

The crowd filed out of the car and onto the platform, all but two assemblymen who knew what a practical joker Senator Brown was and kept their seats, thinking it was all a bluff. They were carried up to the Mott Haven yards by a switching-engine. Another parlor-car was put on. Senator Brown solemnly stalked in while all the other passengers stood until he took seat No. 17. The train started.

"Porter, bring a case of champagne," said the senator. "My dear Colonel Ring, I trust you will join us."

Self-Supporting Students.

Statistics just compiled at the University of Missouri show that fully fifty per cent of the students are dependent upon their own resources, and twenty-five per cent are now working daily to pay their own expenses.

Blanks containing this question: "Are you dependent upon your own resources?" were sent to all of the 1,876 students of the university. Of the 853 who have reported to date, 435 answer in the affirmative. 127 are only partly dependent upon their own resources but 308 are entirely self-dependent. 240 are actually working daily while attending the University in order to make money necessary to pay for their books and board. One is manager of athletics; two, book agents; one, driver of a bread wagon; one, a barber; three, book keepers; seven, canvassers; 22, clerks; six, paper carriers; four, commissaries; one, a carpenter; one, a dishwasher, and seven, electricians. 14 make both ends meet by arising at four o'clock to build the fire in furnaces. Four make gardens and clean yards. Two do work on the state farm. Four are musicians. 28 are doing housework; 12 are janitors; two, librarians; eight, laundry agents; one a leather worker, and one a boarding-house keeper. With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE FIRST NIGHT ENDS.

It was about two in the morning when the Woodney family at last composed themselves for sleep. The dog was gone, the weather was delightful, and there was no reason, so far as they knew, why they couldn't sleep, if so disposed, until noon. However, the excitement arising from moving to a new town was not to be quieted by an effort of the will. At four o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Woodney were still awake.

"Benjamin," said his wife in a low voice, that they might not disturb Mace and her grandmother in the parlor, "didn't Mr. Tumbleton say he had arranged his children alphabetically?"

"Yes, my dear. The oldest is A, or Adam. The next born was designated B; then came C, D, and so forth. It seems a convenient method, though it must be confusing if you want to take them backwards."

There was a pause, then Mrs. Woodney murmured, "And didn't he say the baby is named Y?"

"Yes; Y is its name."

There was another pause; then Mrs. Woodney remarked, "There must be a great many children!"

"It is certainly a long distance," said Mr. Woodney, "from A to Y. Let us try to sleep, my dear, and not think of it, for my mind is rather—is rather appalled by the thought."

Half an hour later everybody was sleeping profoundly. At five o'clock a pale, undeveloped dawn was trying to peep through the bedspreads which had been hung athwart the windows. Five minutes past five, there was a knock at the front door. "Oh!" sighed Mr. Woodney, emerging from the bliss of absolute repose. The knocking continued.

Mace called from the parlor in a cross and drowsy tone, "I suppose that is Bob Enderthorpe coming to read law." Mr. Tumbleton felt his way to the front door and asked through the keyhole, "Is there something we can do for you?"

"Mr. Woodney," came a strange voice, "my name is Wren. Tumbleton told me you want to put up a porch, and I've come to see if I can't supply you with the lumber. In fact, I'm the only lumber-dealer in these parts. I'd like to furnish you estimates, and I've come early before my store opens. I keep the store, here. I'm the post-master, too. And the undertaker, sir."

"I'm pleased to meet you," said Mr. Woodney, "and regret that the door must prevent us from viewing each other face to face. We're not up, here. We were tormented last night till nearly two by the vexations incident to coming to a new town. I am obliged to ask you to wait until a later hour, though I'm very sorry if I inconvenience you."

"Oh, that's all right," said Mr. Wren. "I supposed everybody was up; it's after five o'clock. Well, good day to you then, for the present."

"Good-morning," said Mr. Woodney, "and I'm sorry you've had this trouble on my account."

He went back to bed, and settled himself luxuriously for another installment of his tranquil dreams. "Don't let's say a word," he whispered, "let us do nothing to break the charm. Ah, this is comfort!" He went to sleep. The Woodney clock was not one which strikes the half hours. However, just at half past five, a knocking on the front door marked the time.

"I will go this time," groaned Mrs. Woodney. "It's light enough, now, for me to see."

"No, allow me," returned her husband. "I know the way there so well, I could make it on a run." He went to the door. "Is there something we can do for you?"

"Grandmother," whispered Mace, "don't you think papa is the best man that ever lived?"

A strange voice from outside answered Mr. Woodney: "I'd like to sell you ice, sir. My name is Hoogan. I've come to get your trade. I've got the only icehouse in these parts, and I'll guarantee every lump, Mr. Woodney."

"I will be pleased to meet you later in the day, Mr. Hoogan. We were up late last night, and are trying to snatch a little slumber. I am sorry to have to ask you to come again—or I can come to see you."

"Just as you please," returned the other. "I want your trade, and I hope you want my ice. The season is late, but my house is still well stocked. Now I'll explain how I get my ice. I take my wagon and my men—them wagons and horses that moved you from the depot are mine—and I go about five mile from here—"

At this point Mrs. Woodney, who feared her husband would catch cold standing unclad, stole from bed and brought him his garments in her arms, her bare feet making no sound.

"Yes?" said Mr. Woodney, trying to show interest as he drew on his socks.

"And I get my ice in a broad open place where they ain't no trees to mix up their leaves with the water. There's a branch right here behind my place. You say, why not get ice from it, being so handy? Well, it would save the expense of the hauling and the hire of so many men. But the ice wouldn't be so pure. You ask, why? Now, it's this way, Mr. Woodney."

"It is certainly commendable in you," remarked Mr. Woodney as he fumbled at his fastenings, "to seek only the pure and the good. That is a splendid lesson, whether in ice or morals."

"It's this way, I say; that branch is half filled up with debreeze when winter comes. Morals, you say? Well, I'm careful of them, too. I don't allow any man to hang around my place after he's drunk."

"I should think not!" cried Mr. Woodney, stealthily drawing on one shoe.

"They ain't no saloon run more modest and quiet than mine on the corner," pursued Mr. Hoogan, "and I'll take it proud to have you give me a call whenever you feel a little dry, or if but for a friendly chat. A man is welcome at my saloon whether he buys a drop or not. I try to make everybody feel at home. But I'll not keep you there any longer, Mr. Woodney. Good day to you till I see you again."

"The saloon-keeper!" exclaimed Mrs. Woodney, after they heard Mr. Hoogan depart. "To think of your catching cold for a person like that!"

"Now, he has a very agreeable manner," said Mr. Woodney. "I can't think he is altogether bad. Who knows but that I may exert a good influence upon him, and possibly persuade him to close his saloon? Let us make another trial—I'll keep on my clothes. I feel so sleepy, I know it will be no effort to row my bark back to dreamland."

There was a knock at the front door. Mr. Woodney snatched up his coat, collar and tie and went to the door, finishing dressing as he did so. "Is there something we can do for you this morning?" he called. "The family is not up, yet, but we will be ready for callers as soon as possible."

"Is that Mr. Woodney?" asked a lady's voice.

"Madam, it is," said the other clapping his hat on his head to hide his tousled hair, and opening the door. "Do not let me keep you standing. Walk in and as soon as Mrs. Woodney—"

"I am Polly Day," said the lady hastily. "We are three single ladies—sisters—who live next door, and I've come to ask all of you to eat breakfast at our house. We know how inconvenient it is to find what you want on first moving to a strange place. It will be ready in an hour, or whenever you wish." The breakfast in fact was at that moment smoking hot on the table, and Miss Polly had supposed the Woodneys would surely be ready to sit down to it, for it was after six o'clock. But she saw at once that the breakfast already prepared was not smoking for the Woodneys.

"Miss Polly," said the other, who had the idea that the lady was about twenty, and therefore addressed her more familiarly than he would, had he known she was fifty, "I am blind, as you observe, yet I can see you quite clearly, for I have had angel-visits in my sleep. We will come and add our gratitude to the happiness you feel in such a kind act of hospitality."

"It will certainly be happiness to us," said Miss Polly with a bright smile which nobody saw.

"Yes," said Mr. Woodney; "do you know, I would quite envy you, if it were not that I am myself so happy to accept your offer. I will get my little flock aroused." Miss Polly departed, and there was an excited stir in the Woodney household. A knock came on the door.

"Nobody cares, now," exclaimed Mace, "if the whole town comes!" Mr Woodney found Mr. Tumbleton waiting. "I thought you might need me to unpack and fix things," said Mr. Tumbleton. "And I wanted to know what I must do with your dog."

"My dog?" cried Mr. Woodney.

"Yes, sir. Yore wife said she'd pay five dollars for him, so that was a trade, wasn't it? Now, we can keep the dog till you get friends with him, but we'll have to feed him, and if you don't want him here—"

"Oh, no, indeed!" cried Mr. Woodney. "Are you sure my wife said she'd pay for him?"

"You ask her, and see! Now, Mr. Woodney, I'll tell you. I'll board that dog for you reasonable till you're ready to take him. We can't feed him for nothing, for we're pore folks. But we don't ast no more than his victuals and necessary expenses."

"What expenses, for instance, Mr. Tumbleton?"

"Well, he's eat up alive with fleas, for one thing and he's got to be sheared and oiled—it's been put off too long now. Sometimes he acts like he was going mad, and my wife, she thinks maybe he is. But I tell her if she had all them fleas on her and that long thick hair for 'em to crouch an' hide in, she'd act curious, herself."

"I suppose I might dispose of him," mused Mr. Woodney. "St. Bernards are valuable, aren't they?"

"They ain't a man in this county that wouldn't jump to buy Pup from you," said Mr. Tumbleton. "Now I say they ain't a man. They might be a few. But any farmer that don't keep sheep would be tickled to death to pay five dollars for Pup."

"I wish you'd find one of these farmers."

"All right. And I'll board him for you in the meantime. Now don't you think twenty-five cents a month is mighty little to ask for his keep?"

"It is reasonable," sighed Mr. Woodney, "yes, as little as you could ask, no doubt. But we have very few cents to spend on dogs."

"Then you just pay the five dollars down," said Mr. Tumbleton in the voice of accommodation, "and you needn't pay the quarter till the end of each month."

Mrs. Woodney who, from the next room, had overheard this conversation, but who had been prevented from making her appearance by an incomplete toilette, now entered the scene. "Mr. Tumbleton," she said quietly, "I did not agree to take your dog at any price. You offered her for five dollars. I said we'd try her as a watch-dog, and maybe buy her. We do not like her as a watchdog, and we cannot buy her."

"Maybe I misunderstood you," said Mr. Tumbleton, perfectly composed. "I thought you said you'd buy him sight or unseen. Very well, then. Now what can I do here, this morning?"

Polly's Patriotism.

Polly was a middle-aged parrot whose early days had been spent in the green forests of Yucatan in Central America. I had long tried to teach Polly to speak, and had taught her to say a few short sentences, writes a youthful subscriber to St. Nicholas. About eight weeks before Washington's birthday, I tried to teach Polly to say, "Hurrah for George Washington." But she would not repeat it after me. Then I thought it might be too long to say it all at once—that she probably could not remember it all, so I tried to teach her to say it word for word. But no; she wouldn't say a word of it.

Yet she listened attentively when I repeated it. Then I got disgusted and gave it up until a week or so before the day; then I tried to make her say it, but she would not listen to me now. So when the morning came I went out to Polly. She said "Hello." I answered, "Hello, Poll; can't you say "Hurrah for George Washington' for me?" Then she became furious and flew to the other side of her cage and would not look at me, so I finished feeding her. I went to my room and got my firecrackers, went outside and was shooting my fireworks away when mother called me to come in for luncheon. After luncheon I had to stay in the yard, so I went and got Polly and hung her up on the veranda, when along the street comes the street band playing "Star-Spangled Banner."

Then all of a sudden Polly becomes restless and cries as loud as she can, "Hurrah for George Washington!"

A Quarrel.

There is a knowing little proverb
From the sunny land of Spain,
But in Northland, as in Southland,
Is its meaning clear and plain.
Lock it up within your heart,
Neither lose nor lend it:
"Two it takes to make a quarrel,
One can always end it."

Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the heaven above us clearing,

The Inauguration.

The inauguration season has come and gone. Mr. Roosevelt has succeeded himself, and Mr. Fairbanks has occupied the vacant vice presidency. There were the usual formalities and festivities, the usual throng of visitors from all parts of the country, many of them in quest of office, the usual parade of civic and military organizations reviewed by the President, the usual gorgeous decorations and the usual inaugural ball in the evening. The latter feature has always seemed to us one that might be dispensed with without any material detriment to the dignity of the inaugural ceremonies. It is distasteful to a large number of persons who are sincerely interested in keeping the government's public celebrations free from any ground of criticism, and it has no logical or necessary relation to the occasion in honor of which it is given. People of good society and good morals do not ordinarily patronize public balls which are open to anyone who has the price of an admission ticket, and that is the case with regard to the inaugural ball. Anyone can go who can pay five dollars for a ticket. This policy may be democratic, but it has no other merit. The unusual feature of this inauguration was that the weather was mild and springlike. Inauguration day is generally a fruitful source of pneumonia and other ills resulting from exposure, insomuch that it has been seriously suggested to change the date to a less habitually inclement season than early March, perhaps the day of Washington's first inauguration, April 30.

The Question of Mileage.

Judge Swayne, of Florida, who was impeached before the United States Senate on twelve charges, has been acquitted by that body. The separate votes on the several charges showed a maximum of 35 and a minimum of 13 in favor of conviction, but on each vote there was a majority for acquittal. It is about as hard to get a conviction in an impeachment case before the Senate as it is to amend the Constitution of the United States. One of the charges against Judge Swayne was that he had drawn the maximum allowance for traveling expenses, $10 a day, when his expenses were actually less than that. This was one of the items in the bill of impeachment passed by the House of Representatives. And that reminds us of the attempted congressional mileage grab. It is the custom for members of Congress to receive mileage at the rate of twenty cents a mile for the journey each way between their homes and the capital. Between the last special session of Congress and the regular session there was no interval. One closed at noon and the other opened at noon of the same day. The President utilized what he called a "constructive recess" for the purpose of making some recess appointments, but the Supreme Court has since held that in such a case there is no recess. Yet the House of Representatives voted an appropriation of $190,000 for mileage allowance to pay for the trips which the members of Congress would have made to their homes and back if there had been a real recess between the sessions, but which as a matter of fact not one of them did make. Fortunately, the Senate killed the appropriation. But it leaves the House in the unhappy situation of having voted to impeach a federal judge for drawing travel allowance in excess of his actual traveling expenses, and within a few weeks voting to allow its own members $190,000 to pay the expense of journeys which none of them even had a chance to make.

A Protestant Cathedral.

Protestantism does not readily lend itself to cathedrals, but when any particular branch of Protestantism happens to be established as a state church it sometimes finds use for a cathedral. Most of the Protestant cathedrals are inheritances from Catholicism, but the established Lutheran church of Germany has a new one in Berlin. For fourteen years it has been in process of erection, under the fostering care of Emperor William, though it was planned by his predecessor. It is an immence structure in the somewhat heavy style that is characteristic of Berlin, and with a dome of about the same proportions as St. Paul's in London. The building was dedicated on Monday of last week in the presence of an immense concourse, including representatives from other countries and other churches. The ceremony is described as a brilliant spectacle, almost as full of color and picturesqueness as a high solemnity in St. Peter's. The Emperor wishes this to be considered as not alone a building for one church or sect, but as a cathedral, rather as the cathedral, for all Protestantism. Incidentally it is suggested that the Emperor shall be recognized, informally, of course, as the protector of Protestantism throughout the world. Personally, we see no objection to allowing him to protect Protestantism as often and as much as opportunity permits, so long as he does not ask a monopoly of that function. But it is scarcely probable, even with the new cathedral, that he will be able to teach the Protestant world to look to Berlin as its home and center, as the Catholic world looks to Rome.

For a Sea-Level Canal.

The first definite plans for the Panama canal are embodied in a report which has just been submitted to the canal commission by the engineering committee of that body. The striking thing about this report is the recommendation that locks be entirely eliminated, except tidal locks, and that the whole canal be constructed at sea-level. The committee estimates that the total cost according to this plan will be $230,000,000 and, although a canal with locks and a maximum height of sixty feet above sea-level, could be built for $178,000,000, the committee believes that the former plan will be well worth the difference of $52,000,000, as it will be possible in that case not only to accommodate a much larger volume of traffic, but also to enlarge the canal at any time to provide for a large increase of traffic or for larger vessels than are now in use or even in contemplation. It is estimated that the canal can be finished in ten or twelve years.

Business and Charity.

We do not believe in doing business on uncharitable principles, but there are some respects in which charity and business ought to be kept apart. The New York City Board of Education is trying to get a law passed which will enable it to discharge all women teachers who marry. The question has come up in other cities with varying result. The affirmative of the proposition is usually backed up by two arguments: First, that married women ought to be engaged in home duties and have no time to teach school; second, that the places ought to be given to those who have no other means of support, as married women are supposed to have. The first of these statements is true as a general proposition, subject to numerous exceptions, but it is also true that a married woman cannot be compelled to perform her domestic duties by ruling her out of the schools. The second argument is based on the vicious theory that positions as teachers are to be distributed as gratuities to the deserving poor. The truth is that teaching is expert work and there is only one sensible rule to apply in filling the positions, viz.—get the persons who can do the work best. The teachers' pay-roll is no charity list. No qualifications ought to be required of teachers except such as have to do directly with efficiency, and upon that one point all attention ought to be centered.

Papacy and Democracy.

It is reported from Rome that Pope Pius is losing the democratic ways which marked his demeanor in the early months of his pontificate. We don't blame him. The fact is, it is inherently absurd for a pope to have democratic manners. Why should he? How can he? To have democratic ways is to live among men as one of them and in a manner which suggests that all men are, at least in some respects, approximately equal. But to be a pope is to be the spiritual and ecclesiastical autocrat over millions, to be God's official representative, to speak with the authority of infallibility. These functions do not go well with democratic ways, and we have no liking for a high priest who gives rein to his private preferences to the extent of living and acting like an ordinary man. If we are going to have a pontifex maximus, let him act like a real pontifex and not belie his office by any superficial appearance of democracy. Of course it may seem to some a trifle absurd for any man, even a pope, to claim to be so holy that no other person, not even his most distinguished guests, can be permitted to sit at the same table with him, and that he cannot have an informal talk with his associates after dinner without going to the throne-room and sitting on his throne. But if there is any absurdity about it, it is not in these details, but in the theory which lies back of it all. And so long as the theory is maintained, let us have the etiquette to match.

Striking at the Trusts.

One of the most hopeful signs of the past six months is the awakening condition of the American mind to the evils of the big trust system. Many an American had become persuaded that the amalgamation of certain businesses meant greater efficiency in operation, better wages to employes, and less cost to the public. All but the first has proved a delusion. The smoker, for instance, pays the same price for his cigars and gets much worse quality, and in most places he is forced to take it. We instance the tobacco trust, because it is one that affects a very large number of men. We all know, despite the protests of the packers and the report of Mr. Garfield, that if the Beef Trust is not making huge profits, its manipulators have lost all their cunning. For they have made huge fortunes and the price of meat is as high in America, where it is produced, as it is in England, where there is little production; and at the same time the raisers and feeders of beef find there is little or no profit in their occupation when one small set of men fix the price of purchase, which is out of all proportion to the price of the dressed beef which the packers charge when they have handled it. The legislature of the state of Kansas, which has attracted the earnest attention of the whole civilized world for its efforts to bring into subjection the octopus known as the Standard Oil, has passed resolutions strongly condemning Commissioner Garfield's report, which seems to us to have been made within a compass of time altogether too limited to reach accurate results. This resolution asks for another investigation and the whole country will second this motion. Everybody's Magazine which, by reason of Mr. Lawson's articles, has done so much to open the eyes of a confiding public to the trickeries of the stock market and its manipulators, has begun the publication of a series of articles on the Beef Trust that will show its methods and how it stifles competition. A federal grand jury is to enter upon an examination at Chicago beginning March 20. As to the Standard Oil Company, Kansas is fighting it by entering as a state into competition and reducing the privileges of the corporation. Other nearby states are in sympathy and the example of Kansas in running its own oil plants may be adopted by these.

Is It the End?

Before these lines are read by our readers the end of a year's fighting in the East may have come, for the great battle of the war is now being fought. The leaders of both armies realize its significance, and in a sense it is expected to be decisive, and may lead to peace negotiations. Mukden is the center of the fight. Around it General Kuropatkin has massed his troops, and for nearly a week the effort of field marshal Oyama has been to envelop the great Russian army. General Kuropatkin has evidently been preparing for an advance, and some time ago General Rennenkampf made a brilliant charge with his cavalry but was forced back to the Russian lines by the resolute Japanese. Since then the little brown men have moved forward their long line of battle, day by day bringing its two ends closer together in the circling movement around the Russian forces. These have drawn their lines closer and closer together while the Japanese have advanced a considerable force between Mukden and Harbin, the natural line of retreat for General Kuropatkin should he feel under the necessity of abandoning Mukden. All indications are that a great battle is now in progress, the result of which will be decisive. The Japanese strategy was not at first perceived by the Russian generals, who strengthened the points where Oyama was merely feinting. Reports indicate that so dangerous became the Russian position that Kuropatkin tried to force his way through the Japanese left, and at the time of going to press indications are that both of the huge armies are in great danger, for whichever accomplishes its purpose there will be disaster for the other. If the Russians break through the Japanese lines, then Oyama with his army extended over sixty miles may have a serious reverse, while if Kuropatkin cannot bring about successfully this counterstroke he must either fight disastrously or surrender. Tokio feels hopeful, and St. Petersburg, while realizing the graveness of the situation, believes that its generals have a good fighting chance to turn Oyama's strategy into victory for themselves. Evidently the authorities at St. Petersburg had some intuition of the difficulty of the situation in the east, for on Friday last there appeared an imperial manifesto calling on the country to rally round the throne, and a rescript promising an opportunity for the people to place before His Majesty their views on all important measures affecting them, and recommended by the Council of the Empire.

Union Evangelism.

One of the questions which used to arise very often, but concerning which we do not hear so much now, was, "Can we and ought we who call ourselves Disciples of Christ, or Christians, unite with other evangelical religious bodies in union revival services?" The time was when this was thought to be impracticable, if not impossible. Some of the methods used in these revival services were so foreign to the teaching and spirit of the New Testament that it raised a serious question in the minds of conscientious brethren as to whether they should give their endorsement to such meetings by their presence and co-operation.

Two things have occurred which greatly modify the situation as respects this question. The first is that there has been a great change for the better in the methods of conducting these revival services. Men of national reputation such as would be capable of leading the religious forces of a city in a united movement no longer indulge in such excesses as characterized these meetings in the years past. The second fact is that we ourselves, in common with the rest of the religious world, have made some progress in the direction of preaching the gospel, and even of stating our own position, in a more irenic spirit. The result of these two changes has been to bring about a much more fraternal relation between all religious bodies than existed even a quarter of a century ago, so that it is possible now to carry out what has always been our desire, the heartiest co-operation with all who love our common Lord, in the furtherance of his kingdom.

If we are to judge from indications, we are entering upon an era of great union meetings, in which the entire religious forces of the city or community will work together for the common purpose of converting sinners, and extending the kingdom of God. This is possible now to a degree which it never was before, because as the evangelistic spirit increases the sectarian spirit wanes. Besides, it has been found to be an exceedingly difficult matter to excite any deep or widespread interest, in our cities especially, without the co-operation of the churches in such cities. Such co-operation makes it possible to secure abler speakers, and provide ampler facilities for a successful evangelistic campaign. In addition to that, the moral effect on the community of all the churches heartily co-operating for the good of the community, regardless of denominational lines, is very great. That fact preaches more loudly than any other evangelist we can put into the field. It tells the people that the churches of that city are not seeking merely to strengthen their respective parties, but that they have an interest in the religious welfare of the community that far transcends their interest in the differences which separate them.

The experiences of the past few months have demonstrated the practicability of our co-operating successfully in such united evangelistic efforts. There are some conditions which are obviously necessary in order to such harmonious co-operation. In view of the fact that we are bound to have such united efforts in the future, if we are to reach and save our cities with the power of the gospel, we desire to mention briefly a few of these essential conditions:

1. There must, first of all, be a realization of the religious needs of the city or community, and of the fact that these needs cannot be met so fully nor satisfactorily by the individual efforts of the churches as by their harmonious co-operation. Once this fact is fully perceived, it carries with it certain necessary corollaries.

2. One of these is that since the co-operation of all the churches is necessary to accomplish the greatest good for the cause of Christ in any particular city or town, then it is our duty as churches to hold in abeyance any peculiarities in methods or doctrine that would render such co-operation impossible. This does not involve the sacrifice of any truth or principle of the gospel, for there is a common gospel as there is a "common salvation" which all can endorse, and which has in it the power to convict and save the lost. If any evangelist or church holds peculiar views about foreordination, or premillennialism, or some peculiar view of the meaning and nature of the ordinances, the presentation of which would disturb the co-operation and hinder the success of the meeting—or, if such church or evangelist should attach special virtue to some particular method which is objectionable to other churches, but which involves no principle, these, manifestly, should be held in abeyance for the sake of co-operation.

Let us apply this principle at one or two crucial points. Disciples of Christ believe that baptism now is what it was in Paul's day—a burial with Christ in water, and a rising therefrom to walk in newness of life. We believe the New Testament teaches this plainly. Our Pedobaptist neighbors do not agree with us on this point. Shall we, therefore, refuse to co-operate in bringing men to faith, to repentance, and to the confession of Christ? We all agree that it is the duty of those who believe on Christ and desire to live a Christian life to confess him and be baptized. We can urge each of these duties in any union meeting without giving offense. Ought we not, then, to work together on that basis and be content to leave the New Testament to speak for itself, as to the meaning of baptism, at least until the union meeting is over? It seems to us this would be our plain duty.

Take the question of what used to be called the "mourner's bench," or in later parlance, the "anxious form." Many of the religious bodies have used that method in their evangelistic meetings, but they do not hold that it is the only successful method. Indeed, many of them have ceased the use of it. As for the Disciples of Christ, it seems to them to contravene the New Testament method so plainly that they could not use it themselves, nor work heartily or conscientiously with those who would believe in that method. It is not the bench that is objected to, of course, nor the mourning, but it is the idea that underlies it—that God needs to be persuaded and urged to pardon a penitent sinner. So in this situation, our religious neighbors generally agree not to use that method in their union meetings. A more common plan now is to invite those who wish to become Christians, either to come forward and make such confession, or to arise in their seats to signify their desire to do so.

Given the spirit of Christ and a sincere desire to work together for the salvation of sinners, and there is no difficulty in finding the way to such harmonious co-operation. And, believe us, we are to see much more of it in the future, and on a larger scale, than we have seen in the past.

On Hindering Union.

Jesus Christ was either a dreamer or one day Christian union will be a realization. The most weighty evidence in favor of a reunited Christian church is the prayer of the Master himself, "That they may be perfected into one; that the world may know that thou didst send me and lovedst them even as thou lovedst me"; and this expresses the most important reason for a real unity of Christians. That the Master would pray for that which he did not believe possible we cannot suppose. Nor had he any intention of substituting miraculous power for human responsibility.

We are glad to find in the Watchman, under date of Feb. 2, a very thoughtful editorial article emphasizing what we believe to be the fundamental basis of Christian union. As the writer says, in many of the discussions upon the subject there is a failure to recognize the principle underlying it. "The subject is treated as though it were a matter of economy of forces and funds, as if it were simply a question of expediency or of good policy, or even of convenience." But the great argument for Christian union is the fair conclusion that Jesus did not expect that the world would be convinced of his divinity unless his followers should be united and that he did not expect that the world would believe in God's love for men unless they could see that his disciples loved each other.

We are glad, indeed, to note the fine spirit of the Watchman's editorial.

The writer refers to a remark in a recent number of that paper about a union between the Baptists and Disciples, upon which a prominent Baptist in the Middle-West, where the latter are more numerous than in New England, thus commented: "We who are in the midst of the fray understand the position of the enemy better than those who are on the flank." In reply the editor says: "We would like to read the remarks of Paul on such expressions used in reference to fellow Christians. It is clear that so long as the differences which exist, and no doubt always will exist among Christians, are regarded as a state of war, peace and union are far away. According to the words of Jesus quoted above, those who hold to this view are not simply standing in the way of union of two bodies of Christians, but are hindering in a very vital way the universal acknowledgment of Jesus Christ as Lord and the triumph of his kingdom. That can never come until his followers are one."

These words are just as applicable to some who make a great profession about being "Christian only" as to many who lay stress upon a denominationalism. If we have truly the spirit of Christ in our hearts, "forbearing one another in love," we need have little fear but that some day, in God's good time, the practical union of all who love the Lord will be a fact. "Love God," says Fenelon, "and you will throw off the love of self; love God and you will love all that he gives you to love for love of him."

Notes and Comments.

As announced recently the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is engaged on a new book, which he has had in mind for several years, on the Holy Spirit. It has grown in scope since he has begun actual work on it. It will embrace about ten chapters. Five of these are now in type, as follows: I. "The Tri-personality of God;" II. "Inspiration of the Scriptures;" III. "Function of the Holy Spirit in Conversion;" IV. "Relation of the Holy Spirit to the Christian;" V. "Blessings From the Holy Spirit." The other chapters nearly completed will be: "Jesus and the Holy Spirit;" "Significance of Pentecost;" "Symbols and Metaphors relating to the Holy Spirit;" "The Holy Spirit and Christian Union;" "The Holy Spirit as related to the general progress of Christian Doctrine and Life." The work will be ready in a few weeks. It is being prepared in response to a very general demand, and we trust it may, in a measure at least, meet this demand.

Dr. Munhall's meeting in Jacksonville, Fla., has its critics. The editor of this paper was handed a tract on the street entitled, "Saving Faith." It contains this paragraph:

"Unsaved men and women often gather around aroused sinners in a meeting and ask them if they believe Jesus is the Christ, and they answer 'I certainly do.' Then they say, 'You are saved.' When, if they are saved, devils were more than saved, for they 'believed and trembled,' but these have never trembled under their pretended faith in Christ, which is indeed only an intellectual sanction of the historical fact that such a one as Christ once lived upon the earth. . . . The only faith that saves is the faith that receives Christ as an indwelling Lord." The last sentence is correct enough, but it is no doubt a misrepresentation of Mr. Munhall's teaching, that a mere intellectual faith saves. Faith must get into the heart and control the will before it saves.

Dr. Parker wanted to preach in St. Paul's Cathedral. And the Archdeacon of London would have permitted it, but the Bishop would not. The Dean of Ripon has just declared that he would like to have Mr. R. J. Campbell, Dr. Parker's successor, to preach in his Cathedral. But think of the electric effect! This, however, indicates the breadth of Dr. Fremantle's sympathies. The Dean has long been interested in the question of Christian union.

Dr. Fremantle has just made a statement in regard to the matter. He says:

> The platform, in my opinion, must be constituted of Christian life and social effort, looking at the furtherance of the kingdom of God as the common work for all Christians. . . . All attempts to unite on ordinances or doctrinal formulas, are simply impossible, but union by faith, which is really the life of God in the soul, and by sympathy and aspiration after practical effort, will engender a true spirit of union.

Of course we do not agree with this pessimistic view of Christian union. The Dean's plan is rather federation than Christian union. That may be a way towards real union, but it is not the union for which the Master prayed. While we dissent from the Dean's "impossible" we believe there is a needed word of warning in his words on formulary union. No union of long separated bodies will amount to very much that is based merely on an agreement, say as to the method or design of baptism. A coalition on ordinances without the spirit of Christ behind it might do as a lable for the bag, but who would be satisfied with the contents?

The Tuskegee negro conference just held brought out some interesting facts. The negro in forty years has saved more than $300,000,000 worth of property. In twelve southern states he owns 173,352 farms. By taxation, personal effort and philanthropic help an increasingly large number of public and private schools are in session several months each year. He has organized and supports 28,000 churches. There is no evidence that education increases crime. These facts indicate his possibilities.

The proceedings are now published of the eighth general council of the Pan-Presbyterian alliance. From it we learn that throughout the world there are 83 separate and distinct Presbyterian churches, with 26,000 congregations and over 23,000 ministers. It is in reading the reports of the committee on foreign missions that we are especially impressed by the fact that in all parts of the world there are movements towards union among Presbyterians. Surely it is time. The church historian may yet have to recount how the union of the scattered forces of the Master was brought about by foreign missions.

From reports which come to us by our pastors, some Disciple preachers are not above constant attempts at proselyting, a species of dogmatic activity totally out of date among other evangelical churches.

There may be, as the Western Christian Advocate says, some preachers among the Disciples who are more intent on immersing a Methodist than on saving a worldly man. But there cannot be many such, and all such proselyting is discouraged. But if a Methodist enquires the word of the Lord more perfectly, and comes to the conclusion that scriptural ordinances and scriptural names are to be preferred to those of man's devising, what just ground has the Western Christian Advocate against the preacher who gives a scriptural answer to the enquirer?

As we are turning our eyes toward the Atlantic Coast as a field for our special plea, it is interesting to see what a church so far removed in many ways from ours is accomplishing in New England. Protestant Episcopalians have claimed that they are to dominate this sooner or later. Compared with 1903's record of growth, the figures for last year in New Hampshire show a decline; Maine is stationary, Vermont gained one per cent, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island two per cent, and western Massachusetts six per cent. The Congregationalist thinks there will be a few non-Episcopal churches in New England in 1950—just a few! We think there will be a great many who will be content with scriptural bishops and scriptural names.

That is a pertinent question which the Congregationalist asks: "No revival proceeds in every particular just as you, we or the other man want. Shall we pick at its defects, or sense its real strength and put our shoulder to the wheel?"

The news we want tells of the work of the churches, not your commendation of this or that good brother.

For the first time, we believe, since the occupant of the Easy Chair began to put on paper his delightful musings, the usual batch of copy has failed this week to reach the compositors. Doctor Garrison left St. Louis early last week, and reached Jacksonvilla, Fla., just in time to be present at the close of the state convention. He sends back a paragraph about this, and as the page is numbered "5" we conclude that pages 1, 2, 3 and 4 were written on the cars. But where is that missing copy? The Easy Chair occupant is like a great many brilliant literary men who forget all about what they have written when their thoughts have once been put on paper. Here in St. Louis we are wondering whether the editor gave his envelope to some sleepy porter to mail or whether it will be found in one of the pockets of his winter coat, safely laid away, after he reached the land of sunshine and flowers.

The good people of Philadelphia have resorted to public prayer on behalf of their municipal leaders. For many years this city and the state of Pennsylvania have been a byword for centers of corruption and misrule. One would have supposed that the death of Senator Quay, and the revelations of Mr. Lincoln Steffens and other writers would have bettered the conditions, but after the recent municipal election Philadelphia's political case seems as bad as ever. The czars of gangdom seem to have control of the situation, and the way to overcome them other than by the use of force is admittedly difficult. In this crisis the ministers of the city have held public prayer-meetings. The decent citizens are certainly "up against" a big fight, but we hope they will not be discouraged, and that they will organize, and continue to organize until they can clean out all that is corrupt, mean and despicable in their municipal life.

Whenever there is an exhibition planned, at once there comes up the question of Sunday opening. The efforts to throw open the gates of the St. Louis World's Fair were constant, and had Congress itself not closed them, and for a large part of the period of the Fair itself been adjourned, the matter is in doubt as to whether, after all, the World's Fair might not have been thrown open during its last few months on Sundays. As soon as the Lewis Clark Exposition was well on the way towards completion it was announced that there would be Sunday opening. The first suggestions of a different policy were treated as quite impossible, but the efforts of the Christian people of the Pacific Northwest have been very encouraging. In the newer parts of our country every day is often much the same, and there is little Sunday sentiment. However, patient insistence on the value of the day of rest has at length won the attention of the directorate, and it is now announced that the program will include the following features of respect for the first day of the week. All amusement features on "the Trail" are to be closed throughout the day, all machinery in the exhibit buildings is to be stopped from Saturday night until Monday morning; the gates of the exposition itself are to be closed on Sunday until the hour of noon, and when they are opened in the afternoon, every care will be taken to preserve an atmosphere of quiet on the grounds, while religious music and religious addresses in the exposition auditorium will give further character to the day. This is so far a victory that many who would like to see complete Sunday closing will perhaps be content. After all, the question of amusements and the opportunities for self degeneration such as would be afforded by drinking-saloons are the serious factors in the case, and the closing of such places in a community that has been accustomed to looking upon Sunday as a day for amusement above all else, is a very decided gain in the direction of religious sentiment.

Dr. McKenzie did not give the best advice. Addressing a Boston ministers' meeting he said: "Be Methodists and do not try to be anything else. Don't try to be Congregationalists." His theme was evangelism, the originator of which knew neither Methodist nor Congregationalist. To make disciples of all peoples was his simple command, and those who seek simply to do that, with his blessing, laying aside their demoninational polities, will most certainly succeed.

Many people are skeptical about the results of the revival now moving over the lands. But now, as in the past, by the fruits we know converts. Take for instance one of the colliery districts in northern England. It is reported that the life of the inhabitants is being marvelously transformed. Footballers have forsaken the game, pigeon fliers have abandoned their sport, dog-owners have given up coursing matches, and the saloons are so depleted that one saloon keeper has declared that if the mission contines, he may be constrained to shut up. And this is just a sample.

The Christian World calls attention to a curious psychological effect of the revival:

> Professor J. Morris Jones, of the university college of north Wales, says he has heard common ploughboys burst into a flow of the most chaste and classic Welsh. "It is really marvelous, and the more and the better Welsh you know the greater is your admiration, and the more do you marvel to hear them." The chairman of the "converted" political meeting, which was attended by Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Broadhurst, confirms this. He says: "Some of the prayers offered up by young people, domestic servants and people of that class, impress you for their exalted ideas and the beautiful imagery which one would have thought quite beyond the conception of some of the supplicants. I heard a young girl pray in the presence of 2,000 people, and the way she dealt with the doctrine of the sovereignty of Christ, the apt interweaving of scriptural references, and the lines from our national hymnologists, interspersed with her own original phrases in the purest idiomatic classical Welsh, would have done credit to the most scholarly theologian of the Welsh pulpit."

There are large gains reported to the churches. What are we doing with the new converts? Are they being cared for by the older members?

Editor's Easy Chair.

We reached Jacksonville Friday evening an hour late, and just in time to reach the Florida Christian Missionary Convention in the closing part of the last session. Bro. Howard T. Cree, of Augusta, Ga., was delivering an earnest address on Church Extension. It seemed good to hear his ringing voice once more. At the close of his address, at the invitation of Bro. Boone, we gave a short message of greeting, pointing out some of the signs of promise on our religious sky. The veteran, B. F. Manire, in a closing word, said he had attended most of the conventions of the state and he thought this was the best one yet held. About $1,600 have been raised in the state the past year, and three evangelists have been employed most of the time, who have labored with encouraging success. Our General Home Board is contributing $500 annually through the State Board, and $600 directly to Tampa, where Bro. J. P. Rowlison is doing so splendid a work. The convention this year had a number of visitors outside the state who gave addresses, including H. T. Cree, Augusta, Ga., Richard Wallace, Valdosta, Ga., F. R. Miller, of Savannah, Ga., and Herschell Roper, of Macon, Ga. F. M. Rains, C. C. Smith and Geo. L. Snively represented the interests with which their names are associated, and Sister Atwater, vice-president of the C. W. B. M., was present, giving her wise counsel to the convention and aiding in securing a hearty co-operation between the state and C. W. B. M. boards in the state. Among the preachers present from the state were B. F. Manire, J. P. Rowlison, F. J. Longdon, S. J. White, T. A. Cox, Homer Carpenter and E. H. Raynor. Bro. Raynor, aided by Bro. Nichols, has recently added 79 in a meeting at Kissimmee. J. P. Rowlison has been made corresponding secretary, and J. T. Boone, Rufus A. Russell and C. W. Zaring, of Jacksonville, an executive committee. An optimistic feeling prevails in Florida. The corresponding secretary will report the convention more fully. We go on to Cocoanut Grove to-night. Greetings to all our Easy Chair readers from the land of perpetual summer.

The Gospel of Blood* By E. L. Powell

I sometimes think that art and music and poetry have so glorified the cross with silvery mists and crowned it with roses that somehow we do not feel as we ought its intense reality. We think of that cross very much, as the poet reminds us, as we sometimes think of the dying soldier, as if the soldier died without a wound, as if the wretch who fell in battle passed off to heaven translated, leaving no wife to pine for him and with no God to judge him. It is a real Christ who died upon a real cross, bringing to us the real, vital love of an eternal God. I want a gospel of reality, and the gospel of blood is the gospel of reality.

Again, the gospel of blood is in strict accord with the law of human progress, the law of pain and self-sacrifice. The sweetest graces and noblest achievements of the race have sprung from a soil that has been enriched by human blood. The pathway of life, like the Appian Way, has been lined with crosses. For the sake of knowledge a Pliny explores the volcano, in which he loses his life. For the sake of art a Verni, while tossing in the fierce tempest, snatches the mad waste of waters, even though the wave is leaping forward to destroy him. We have built, like corals, grave on grave; we have bridged many a chasm with the bodies of living men; we have climbed many a summit with bleeding hands and feet; men have died upon the scaffold and pined in dungeons and submitted to the torture of rack and thumb-screw in order that the cause of civil and political liberty might be carried forward just a little. The white ship of progress comes sailing through the centuries over a sea of love. Well has it been said that if the Hebrew nation had not torn its heart with the griefs of life, the Psalms would never have been written. If Dante had not walked the solitary path of exile and climbed the lonely stairs we should have had no Divine Comedy.

Art and science and literature are sprinkled all over with blood and the path of progress is marked by the blackened stakes of martyrs. The law of human development is the law of pain and self-sacrifice. Jesus Christ takes this law and carries it to its very highest and divinest expression. Those enemies of the Master spoke greater than they knew when they declared, "He saved others, himself he can not save," and no man can, in however partial and limited a way, become a savior who refuses to take the cup of bitterness in his hands and drain it to its very dregs. Jesus did not keep back one single drop of blood, but having loved his own, he loved them unto the end, unto consummation of love, unto the very highest outreach of the divine love.

The message of the cross is a reasonable message.

May I say again that the gospel of blood is the only adequate gospel to meet the requirements of human nature as at present constituted. If sin were a fleck of dust, then rosewater would wash it away. If sin were an intellectual twist, then philosophy would be sufficient. If sin were simply ignorance, then culture would be adequate, but when we remember, as a part of our conscious experience, that sin has poisoned the affections, has weakened the will, has blunted the sensibilities, has coarsened the whole nature, has permeated with its malign influence all of our faculties and powers, has been as a cancerous growth sending out its baleful and destructive influences to the very remotest tips of our fingers, then both the imagination and the intellect say something better than rosewater, something stronger than the perfumes of Araby, is necessary to meet the situation, and when we see that Man of the thorn crown, coming in the majesty of his glory, with his garments dyed in blood, walking and running and leaping in the intensity of his passion for humanity, we feel then that this pierced hand has power in it to lift us out of our miserable predicament and to place us upon the highway of redemption.

You know the old story of the gulf that was opened in the city of Rome, and how the people repaired to the Oracle and asked for information as to how this gulf might be closed, and the Oracle made answer, "Not until that which is most precious in the sight of Rome has been cast into it shall the gulf be closed," and they threw in their corn and their wine and their oil, but the yawning chasm was still before them, and finally Corsies, the brave Roman, came forward and said: "That which is most precious to Rome is Rome's manhood," and threw himself into the chasm, and lo, it was closed! That, my friends, in part, at least, illustrates the imperative need of the sacrifice of the Son of God. Here was this great yawning gulf that sin had opened, and heaven sends forth the mandate, "Not until that which is most precious in the sight of heaven has been cast into it shall it be closed." There can be no reconciliation save as that reconciliation is effected by means of the broken, bruised and dying body of Jesus Christ.

Again, let me remind you that the gospel of blood is the only gospel which can awaken and develop the instinct of self-sacrifice in humanity. If Jesus had been simply the great teacher, he would to-day be honored. If he had been the great and kindly man who went up and down the hills and plains of Galilee and Judea and Samaria doing good, he would to-day have been remembered, but that splendid spirit of altruism that has entered into humanity would never have become the mighty power that it has become as the centuries have come and gone since he was lifted up upon the cross. When Homer would stir the hearts of his countrymen to nobility he holds up before them Achilles, and the heroes of the past have given their spirit to their contemporaries and to their successors even as the granite and iron in the hills of Sparta passed into the blood of the Spartan warriors. Isn't this the thought of the Master when he says, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me"?

We are not making the demands upon men that are justified by the cross of Calvary, and that is the reason that life is so anemic and impoverished. If we shall be men, and bring forth that which is strongest in them we must again lift up the cross to its proper eminence. Garibaldi said to his men, "Soldiers, I offer you hunger and thirst, heat and cold; no barracks, no pay, forced marches, death, it may be; whoever loves honor and fatherland, follow me." Do you doubt the response? It is this mighty appeal which the Cross of Jesus Christ makes to many a church that has gone into winter quarters at Capia, for headquarters in the land of ease and selfishness and miserable pleasure can give no satisfaction to any part of the nature other than that which is superficial and external.

Oh, the mighty eloquence of the appeal of the Cross of Jesus Christ! Bid a man fight under the silken flag of selfishness, however proudly it may wave in the breeze, he will turn away. Bid him fight under the blood-stained banner of self-sacrifice that represents a cause that is worth while, and there shall be thousands and tens of thousands who will answer the summons, even as the soldier answers to the clarion peal of battle.

But finally, the gospel of blood can only be weakened and minimized as men take it from its New Testament setting and place it in the realm of theological speculation, or give it the subordinate position of mere martyrdom for a high and holy cause. That blood is unique. That blood somehow and in some ways sustains a relation to God and the divine government that no blood, however pure, that has ever been shed can possibly sustain to high heaven. Let us leave it with its mystery, but still in its New Testament setting, remembering that this much is clear: while there are depths that we cannot sound, while there are heights we cannot scale, one thing is evident, namely, it speaks to us of the divine love of God, it speaks to us of the great, beating, throbbing heart of God, and it is this love rather than any sort of mere arrangement that is the basis of divine forgiveness.

Remission of Sins

BY W. O. MOORE

Recently I read an article with reference to the remission of sins. In it was the remark that differences of opinion as to whether remission of sins takes place before or after baptism should not be an obstacle to Christian union. This remark caused me to be somewhat astonished. I was astonished to think that one who I think ought to know better should so express himself as to leave the impression that it is possibly a matter of opinion as to when pardon takes place. If there is no revelation as to how and when pardon can be had then opinions may be indulged although they may be of little profit.

One may say to another: "I will give you fifty dollars thirty days hence, if you will labor for me on the farm one month." If this offer is accepted, has the employer an opinion as to when he will get the fifty dollars? Is he not in a better condition mentally than that? If he has implicit faith in his employer he understands by faith that he will get fifty dollars when he has rendered the service demanded.

One may injure another by a slanderous tongue. The one wronged may say: "My offender is misguided. He has done me much harm. I pity him. If he will confess his wrong and cease to wrong me, I will pardon him." Has this offender an opinion as to when he can be pardoned? Has he not something more tangible than that? If he is dealing with one who is known to do as he promises, he understands by faith that pardon will take place when conditions demanded in order to pardon are complied with.

Christ after his resurrection said to his apostles: "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." "All authority has been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned."

Shall we say that it is a matter of opinion as to when pardon takes place? Did Christ fail to state what the sinner must do in order to be saved? Did he say that faith in him and proper repentance would insure pardon and that those pardoned should ally themselves to him openly by being baptized? He did not so express himself. Those who do as he directed understand by faith that they are pardoned and accepted of God. On the day of Pentecost the apostle Peter said to those convicted of sin and made anxious for salvation, to repent, and be baptized every one of them in the name of Christ for the remission of sins. They did as directed. Did they have an opinion as to when they were pardoned? They were on greater heights than opinions. They understood by faith that they were pardoned when they obeyed. They were baptized in order to the remission of sins.

Those who put on Christ by faith and baptism are liable to sin. How can they be pardoned? The apostle John said to those in the church: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Those who seek pardon must show a disposition to walk in the light. To walk in the light does not mean to walk in one's opinions. It means to walk in what Christ taught and commanded. Those who thus walk will be saved from sinning. To walk in the light means that the child of God is ready when he sins to do what is required of him in order to be cleansed. The apostle John said to those in Christ: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Do those in Christ have an opinion as to when they are pardoned? Do they not understand by faith that it follows confession of sins and the doing of what keeps them in the fellowship which is in Christ?

Christ is the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. Is one saved in the sense of being pardoned before he is delivered from the power of darkness and is translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son?

A Change in Religious Thinking

BY C. B. CARLISLE

Uncle Sam handed me this letter, a few days ago:

"I am a grateful reader of your sermons in the Syracuse Herald. But what am I to do, finding, as I have, that the peculiar type of Christianity (Presbyterian) in which I was cradled, the peculiar vision of religious life in which I was trained, the very peculiar set of doctrines which somebody picked up for me, and mortised into me, what am I to do, now that I discover all of it is only a partial statement, a sectarian discoloration, if not distortion, bordering hard on dishonesty, towards the large myriad-sided truth, that Christ disclosed, and the truth I want?"

This writer means that what he here refers to, has been considered by him as an essential, and, perhaps, exclusive truth.

I think Paul tells this man what he ought to do. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." Ten years ago, while in the midst of my work, as an active minister, that message, coming across the centuries, assumed the aspect of a direct, personal, telephonic communication from Paul, and from that day to this, ten years of pulpit work, the simple word of Christ has been, not only the inspiration of my preaching topics, but the topics themselves.

Although a minister, I had much the same worry as this friend. Then I reached the conclusion that any worry of that nature was a kind of spiritual near-sightedness. That one of the weaknesses of so many religious people—and a weakness which certain churchmen carefully fostered and coddled in behalf of the creed—was the feeling that any modification of view touching certain theological theories; some particular interpretation of an antiquated doctrinal claim, must surely mean a change of faith.

I was about half scared, until I saw that Christ never defined anything to be believed in, only saying, "Ye believe in God; believe also in Me." Until I saw that when Paul said, "I have kept the faith," he did not mean for a moment that there had been no change in his religious thinkings. That the stability of his faith was not affected by this change in his religious thinkings; that the ripening and enrichment of Paul's experience was itself a progressive revelation of the mind of Christ.

Maybe I was a little concerned lest some of the churchmen would look askance at me. I guess they did; but the look was all. Then I began to preach, as they do in the Christian fellowship, and I found people taking to it cordially. I have kept it up. I find it a great gain all round; that, while I have the grasp of vital essentials so real, I am enabled to think freely and speak frankly, without the fear that the true foundations are being removed. A great gain, that I am not asked to be Christian plus episcopacy, Christian plus a longer or shorter catechism, but upon this—"The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." Christ's life and my life. This life, yonder in Galilee, and his life in the upper and purer and more eternal Galilee; our life here and our life in the celestial Beulah land beyond the ashes of the sepulchre.

His name alone is our watchword; our badge of distinction; the principle of our piety; the bond of our union; the end of our actions; the authority for our conduct; and the source of our success.

By F. D. Power

The unveiling of a statue of Miss Willard in our Valhalla—the old hall of the House of Representatives—is an occasion of great interest to the friends of temperance and the friends of woman as well. No woman has been so honored before in America. I believe the statue of Margaret in New Orleans was the first memorial of this character in the United States. England has her bronze and marble Victorias. Maria Theresa sits enthroned in bronze in the heart of Vienna. Paris has its Joan of Arc. We have been behind in the procession. Our Molly Pitchers, and Martha Washingtons, Harriet Beecher Stowes, and Mary E. Livermores, Abigail Adamses, and Julia Ward Howes are passed by, and small men of whom no one ever heard are raised to the niches which belong to these noble women, and we are constantly mortified by the questions, "Who is he?" and "Why should he have a statue?" Perhaps the placing of this effigy in our hall of fame will awaken us to a sense of our obligation to womanhood. The nondescript female figure that crowns the Dome, decorated with its enormous feather head-dress, which we call the "Goddess of Liberty," does not mean anything. It is time to get away from such mythological monstrosities and give our real flesh and blood queens and mothers and heroines the place they have won for themselves in the history of the Republic. Illinois has done itself eternal honor in turning away from such leaders as Lincoln and Grant, Douglas and Logan, Trumbull and Davis, and selecting a woman for this high distinction. The tribute thus paid to her by her state and the nation could not have been more worthily bestowed. Other states have about forty statues to their famous men, patriotic soldiers, jurists, explorers, statesmen, but this is the first figure of a woman to adorn the great circle. Even the effigy of the Father of his Country changed its position to bid her welcome—a courtesy which eminently became the ever gallant Washington.

I regret to say the statue is not a good one. It is not Miss Willard. The face is a failure. The marvelous spiritual and intellectual light that beamed from her features is not hinted at in the work of the artist. Even the physical contour and the spirited poise of the head so characteristic of this splendid woman are lost. I knew Miss Willard well, and welcomed her many times to my pulpit, and there was an indefinable magnetism about her which no marble could reproduce though the hand of Canova or Phidias, or the sculptor of the Venus de Milo had attempted it, but this image is sadly disappointing. The statue is of Carrara marble, a little more than life size and she stands beside a reading desk with one hand on the top and the other holding some sheets of paper—a thing Miss Willard never did when speaking. Inscribed on the pedestal are the words: "Ah! it is women who have given the costliest hostages to fortune. Out into the battle of life they have sent their best beloved, with fearful odds against them. Oh, by the dangers they have dared; by the hours of patient watching over beds where helpless children lay; by the incense of ten thousand prayers wafted from their gentle lips to heaven, I charge you give them power to protect along life's treacherous highway those whom they have so loved."—Frances E. Willard. Presented by the State of Illinois, February XVII, MCMV.

The ceremonies incident to the presentation of the statue were impressive and beautiful. There was a large gathering of the White Ribboners from all over the country under the leadership of the President, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. A procession of over two thousand children filed past the statue. Little Summerfield Baldwin, the grandnephew of Miss Willard, bore a bouquet of lilies of the valley which he placed on the pedestal; next came the cradle-roll children bearing streamers of white ribbon; then the little ones of the Loyal Temperance Legion, each placing a flower, as the others had done, at the foot of the statue; then nearly two thousand school children. Each child received an aluminum medal of the statue. The exercises in the House and Senate were memorable. The galleries were crowded and the addresses were of a high order. Each body gave an hour to the presentation. The speeches of Mr. Foss, of Illinois, and Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, in the House, were specially noteworthy. "For God and home and native land" was emphasized as never before in the national legislature halls. "The most universally known and loved woman in America" was eulogized by some of the brightest minds in the United States Congress, and the statue declared to be "a fit and merited recognition of all that is highest, noblest and best in womanhood." Beveridge and Dolliver talked their best in the Senate, but the statue, after all, tells its story with a simple eloquence to thousands, and pleads the mighty cause of millions with a power that must always live and that can never fail. Those are two dates that will ever mean much to American womanhood, 1839-1898, and the placing of "the uncrowned queen of purity and temperance" in the capitol of the nation has a far-reaching significance which promises more than any man can measure. Education, philanthropy, total abstinence, the protection of the home, the noblest virtues, the holiest aspirations, are exalted.

Congress is not devoting much attention to reform measures now, hurrying as it is to its death. Some of the most important matters pending are the Gallinger bill, to stop the issuing of federal liquor tax receipts in no-license territory; the National Inquiry Commission, or liquor inquiry commission bill; and the Hepburn-Dolliver bill to protect no-license towns and states against wholesalers outside the state who sell liquors to "speak easies" in the name of interstate commerce. It is not likely there will be any legislation looking to the restoration of the grog-selling canteen at the coming session of Congress, as the new plan has not been tried long enough to warrant its abandonment. Dr. Wiley, head of the chemical bureau of the Agricultural Department, who, by the way, was a Disciple back in Indiana, has thoroughly aroused some of the liquor people by his statement that 85 per cent of the whiskey sold in the United States is adulterated. One of the distilling concerns writes him as follows:

> "The rectifiers of this country pay into the United States treasury more than $130,000,000 annually. They do more than any other industry to support the government of the United States. It will be found that your policy is shortsighted, and inimical to the government interests, and we believe that you have outlived your usefulness."

The Doctor answers back, and intimates that if he told all he knows, he would make revelations connected with his investigations so startling that they would induce a user of whiskey to become a total abstainer. If the government has such information it should be given to the people. Ten times $130,000,000 ought not to influence its suppression, no matter what the whiskey "industry" may say. Wiley should unbosom himself.

Over the Potomac in the Old Dominion the temperance cause goes forward. The Anti-Saloon League is doing splendid service. The retail liquor licenses issued in the state in 1902 were 1,866, in 1904 1,106, a decrease of 760 saloons since the passage of the Mann bill. There are 70 counties in which there is not a single licensed saloon. Of the 1,106 saloons 747 are in the cities, and only 359 in towns and country districts; and of the 359, 173 are in territory contiguous to the cities. The Anti-Saloon League received last year $4,000 in the state, and in the two years have closed 767 saloons at an expense of $10.60 to the saloon. Old Virginia never tires. The field secretary of the league there, J. W. West, is one of our young Maryland preachers, a Disciple with a big D.

The Old Message for the New Century

By W. J. Cocke

State Evangelist of Georgia.

What is this "old message"? It is the gospel—good news—from heaven to earth. God's love-message calling back a divorced world to his home, his communion, his salvation. Its essence is a four fold fact. The death, not of a martyr, but a Saviour, for our sins, and not for ours only but those of the whole world. A burial that fear may pass and comfort be imparted. The resurrection of Jesus for our justification and his perfect identification as the crucified, the buried and risen Lord.

It is a message that appropriates by obedience, that fullness of blessing enwrapped in its incarnate centre, and offered and assured by the mercy, power, and triumph of him who was the measureless measure of that love whose offspring the "old message" but feebly expresses.

Moreover, it has glories which, in earnest, may be found here, but the perfections of which shall be realized in the shadowless land.

We stand to-day upon the summit of the sixty centuries past, and as we look through them the pathway of God is one broadening highway of light. The star enlarges into the moon and the moon into the ineffable glory of the "Sun of Righteousness." The victories of Jesus, on a million fields, and in quick succession, mark the triumphs of the same old message.

If it was "the power of God" once, may it not be again? The logic of its prowess swells into a thousand affirmatives! The "sword of the Spirit," in the hands of redeemed men and women, directed and impelled by the Spirit of God, in years agone, has put to flight the "armies of aliens," and rightly used, will do all that men will allow it to do in the regeneration of hearts, communities, and nations. True it must be, it is still "the power." As to its power, its progress, its prowess, its saving, in the first and intervening centuries there can be no question.

It met the self-righteousness and prejudice of the Jew with the righteousness of God and the light of his truth. It touched the exquisite culture of the Greek and made it shine with glory divine. It entered the very citadel of Roman power and in less than three centuries, won the mightiest empire in the world to the Christ, so that the eagle bowed to the cross and a mighty leader, pierced by an arrow and stricken by truth, cried as he fell, "Oh, Galilean, thou hast conquered!" It threaded the forests of Britain and, by a process all its own, changed barbarians into Christians and heathen orgies into exalted Christian service. No Hannibal or Cæsar, Napoleon or Washington, ever led to defeat so crushing or freedom so holy.

But it is not so much a question of what this message has accomplished, of the conquests of the gospel in the past, as, Is it adapted to the conditions and circumstances of this, the 20th, century? Is the message of the first century also the message of this century? I believe it is. We cannot outlive it or rise above it. Indeed, every attitude we may have attained, has been made possible because we were borne upward on the crest of the gospel wave. It has borne us upward and onward. Our intellectual, social, moral, our spiritual, and even our material advancement and elevation, are directly traceable to the influence of the gospel, and place us under an obligation we can never discharge should we ever so desire. I am sure we never shall.

My reasons for the perpetuity and adaptivity of the "old message" are these:

1. It came from God and God is in it. Because he gave it, it is best, and as he is in it, it can never fail.

2. It is the only, all sufficient gospel. "If we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel, let him be accursed."

3. The world needs salvation today as it always has needed it, and the gospel is God's power to save from sin. There is none other.

4. The gospel is resistive in that it opposes sin, and it is aggressive in that it conquers all opposition. The world needs this now.

5. The beautiful simplicity of the gospel commends it to an age of confusion and mystery like this. A child can know it. A sage cannot master it.

6. The very tenderness of it causes our souls to cry out for it.

7. The dominant note of the gospel is joy and men are hungering after "good cheer."

8. The gospel is the great peacemaker. The 20th century longs for that "peace of God."

9. The gospel infuses into man's heart the hope of higher, happier and better things. It revels in the present realization, yet it paints the radiant bow of promise on the canvas of the future.

10. The very adaptivity of the gospel declares its perpetuity, and its very perpetuity proclaims its age-lasting adaptivity.

11. The gospel saves. It saves from sin, from sorrow, from waste of manhood and womanhood. It saves body, soul and spirit. It saves for this world, it saves for the next.

Glorious gospel! Its pivot is a Person! Its principle is truth! Its power is love! Its province is life! Its period is perpetuity! Its purpose is salvation! Its pathway is blessing! Brethren, let's be true to it! Let's love it! Let's preach it! Let's live it! And then, bye and bye, we will go home to enjoy its eternal fulness.

Reform Conference

BY GEORGE H. BALL, D. D.

Reform is a good word. Every thing, person and organization may be improved. Nothing on earth is so good that it cannot be made better. There are degrees in perfection. A perfect plant grows more and more perfect. Growth is the salient element of its perfection. It is just so with man and all the works and creations of mankind. It is so with the Christian church. Its founder was perfect, but its constituents imperfect, needing reform, capable of improvement, needing to "grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

For 1,500 years the church of Christ steadily fell away from its divine model. Carnal elements stifled the Christ-life and submerged the Christ ideas. With Martin Luther reform began. Since the days of Luther reform has steadily advanced. Nearly every Protestant church owes its birth to a step in advance. For 500 years the church of Christ has been slowly, painfully and hesitatingly returning from Babylon to Jerusalem. Every step has been resisted by its own members. Reformers have become opponents of reform. This has caused strife and division. Luther opposed Zwingle and forced a rupture. Zwingle grew in grace and the knowledge of Christ faster than Luther, and incurred his displeasure. Luther made a creed, set up a standard while yet in the wilderness and refused to move a single step farther toward the "promised land." He saw Christ and the ideal church dimly; Zwingle saw it more clearly, approached it more nearly, and was persecuted by the great reformer who preceded him. So it has been ever since. Reformers have persecuted reformers; by tedious stages progress has been made; each band of reformers has planted a camp and refused to leave it; progress has necessitated schism, so sects have multiplied.

It is a comfort to know that in spite of delays all detachments of the pilgrim church have been facing toward Jerusalem. In their heart of hearts they yearn for Christ, for the truth and life of Christ as the only "way and the truth and the life," embodied in the church, the body of Christ. The contrast between returning and departing Christians is immense. Slowly the several bands have learned to appreciate this contrast, and deal kindly with each other. They have now come to really rejoice over what each one has gained, and what each one has laid aside of pagan error and Babylonish folly. Still more, nearly every band has, to a degree, broken camp and made progress toward the ideal church. Creeds have been changed or discarded; the Christ spirit and Christly ideas have burst the bands and pulled the stakes and lengthened the cords which had hindered growth. Real Christian fellowship now prevails to a large degree among the returning divisions of the church. This is delightful. The shame of sectarianism among the disciples of Christ is steadily abating. The hunger for actual union and hearty co-operation is nearly universal. The different bands are becoming more and more anxious to be able honestly to sing:

"We are not divided,
All one body we;
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity."

It would surely be pleasant and useful for representatives of these returning bands of Christians to meet in conference, recount their progress, the errors left behind, the precious truths attained, the new light discovered, the broader and better views enjoyed, the creeds revised and the hopes of larger growth inspired. The air is alive with aspirations for union; the denominations are not only talking but acting; the spirit of union is on the gain. The spirit of Christ is surely at work. The hearts of saints are praying as Jesus prayed for the organic oneness of all the living members of his body, the church.

The annual summer assembly at Keuka park next August is to be largely made an "experience meeting" among returning pilgrims. Representative men from the leading denominations will present in the form of lectures what their respective denominations have lost of error and gained of truth, and what progress they hope to make in future, what errors to correct, what defects to cure, what improvements to gain, "till they all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the son of God, unto a full grown man, [or church], unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." These lectures can not be otherwise than instructive and inspiring. The course will begin at 2:00 p. m. on August 4, and continue each week day at the same hour until August 13. The forenoons of each week day are to be devoted to Bible study conducted by experienced instructors; the evenings will be made profitable and entertaining by concerts and lectures of a high order. Three sermons will be preached each Lord's day during the assembly which will begin August 3 and close August 13. Ample provision will be made for the entertainment of those who shall attend at a cost not to exceed $1.00 a day. The large central college building is turned into a hotel or boarding house each summer from July 1 till about August 26, and the college settlement of over fifty houses offers liberal provision for summer boarders. It is expected that the results of the "experience meeting" will be stimulating and impart to the current spirit of union a decided impetus.

A Symposium on Evangelism.

By R. H. Lampkin.

1. I would say, yes. Because our efforts prove more a resultant of numbers than of additions to the body of Christ. The prodigious amount of preparation, organization and advertisement, the necessary leader of song and the use of choruses, and other and many things, do not leave us in a spirit of need and dependence which alone makes prayer what it should and must be. In this I am not saying these things are not factors in successful meetings, but I do think we can and do oftentimes humanize and organize our meetings to such an extent that the flesh wars against the Spirit, and the provisional quenches the Spirit.

2. I would say we have come nearer restoring the teaching of the New Testament concerning the Holy Spirit than any other religious people, and most assuredly have we done this in the case of the Acts of Apostles. But in this the first and second questions are one, for our knowledge of the Spirit's teachings has tended toward the idea of "word only" rather than "also power." I feel we shall have to get away from our larger dependence upon a literalistic presentation of the words of the Spirit and go back to the idea that they are the power for evangelism because they are the Spirit's words, i. e., we speak them because they are his words, and not they are his words because we speak them. Further than this, that we restore the simplicity of the Spirit's language in evangelism, there is not anything to restore of the teaching concerning the Spirit. Our teaching concerning the Holy Spirit must be scant, because there is little taught us to teach concerning him. Our teaching is about how to save men by using what the Spirit has said upon the subject, and nothing about himself.

3. The last question I have partly answered in the above, for as I have looked at the subject of evangelism all these questions become one. We stand at the door of the greatest opportunity for a widespread interest in evangelism that was ever opened to man. Whether we shall enter it or not depends upon no other suggestion than the realization of the fact that the door of privilege and opportunity is open. If we could give ourselves over to an utter abandonment of self into the Spirit's power and service, the results no man can compute. We are bound too much by selfishness and covetousness, and even in our undertakings for growth and progress religiously, the limitations are too small for God's Spirit. "Each one win one," a "doubling in membership," and the set time of 1909, is too small a thing for God to move in. These are noble ambitions, but they are too finite for the Infinite, yet have in them the germ of what is to be the real evangelism. Each one is to be a particle in the measures of meal in which the leaven is to work, touching each his neighbor. It is our idea which is too possessive for the Spirit's use, and we have gotten the whole combination into our possession, and, we are running it, and it is going to be a tremendous failure unless we let God back into his own business. But fail we shall not, for a reformation and a revolution must come to the religious peoples of our country, and we shall be ready. The New Testament furnishes the best equipment for a successful and permanent evangelism, and having, as we do, an unbound and unhampered doctrine of the Spirit, we are furnished for an intelligent evangelism along the line of least resistance, and nothing but unfaithfulness stands in the way.

By A. W. Taylor.

1. I do not believe there is. We may pray less in public and with less vocal unction, but prayer is the attitude of one's life more even than of vocal expression. I believe we live more prayerfully than ever, use the closet more understandingly, and appreciate the meaning and use of prayer better. Best of all, we work as if we thought ourselves the Lord's divinest instrument for the answering of prayer.

2. Some have, but I doubt if we are at one on the interpretation of those teachings. There is much literalism yet in us. We want a mechanical operation of the Spirit, and so shut him up in the Book. Do we appreciate the omnipresence of the Spirit and do we not deny his work in many things just because they are ordinary? All truth and all right impulse is of the Spirit.

3. More love of souls and less of numbers. More love of the Scriptures and less of "Our Plea." More "Repent for the kingdom of God is at hand" and less water. Let us take Peter's Pentecostal example, exalt the sacrificial Christ and tell people to be baptized when they want to know what to do. After all, there is not very much room to complain of our evangelism. It is the greatest of the time. If it has any great need, it is that of more fervency and a contagion of it among the pastors.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 12, 19—.

MY DEAR NEPHEW:—Santa Claus was certainly kind to you. I don't wonder that you "just sat down and had a good cry." Preachers are pretty much like other folks, only a little more so. Such an expression of love from one's congregation as that of which you write goes a long ways toward smoothing some of the rough roads that must be traveled sooner or later. I have heard of preachers being killed by kindness but I never attended the funeral of one. A good text for such an occasion would be Num. 23:10: "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." I have known a few, however, who suffered because they didn't get enough of it.

The item "three Bibles" in your list gets me into a reminiscent way again. One Christmas, the third of our married life, Mary and I received eleven Bibles and a silk hat. At first we were a bit dismayed, for it so happened that Bibles were just about the most plentiful things in our home, and the silk hat didn't exactly "fill a long-felt want." Mary, dear heart, though she hadn't said it to me, was hoping that if we were remembered at all it might be in the shape of some badly needed books for my shelves. And I, though I hadn't told Mary so, was hoping it might be in the way of an addition or two to her slender stock of china.

But after all the Bibles stood us well in hand. Only the dear Lord himself knows how much good they accomplished. I saw a lowly saint die with hands clasping one of them, and I heard a frail consumptive girl read from another the twenty-third psalm.

The silk hat, however, presented a real problem. I had never worn one and I scarcely knew how to begin. I dreaded, yes, that's the word, I dreaded to put it on and sally out of the house, but I also feared if I never wore it I would offend the giver. Finally one day I got under it and with much trepidation and with groanings that could not be uttered, went out. I remember that I actually prayed for courage as I went through the gate and turned up the street. Everybody I met seemed to focus their eyes on that shining headgear. I felt that I was running as veritable a gauntlet as ever Boone or Kenton dared run and not half so successfully either.

But that day I crossed the Rubicon so far as the wearing of a high hat was concerned, for as you know in recent years I have seldom worn any other style. Just here is a good place to say a word or two about your clothes. For the pulpit and the platform conventional garments are all right, but I believe the best street or traveling dress for a minister is that which will not differentiate him in appearance from the average business man. Indeed, Will, there are times when a longtailed coat and white tie constitute a positive handicap. A marked clerical dress will usually have one of two effects on strangers. It will shut them up like clams, or else set their tongues to wagging furiously. In either case the real person is hid. And if there is one thing in particular that you must get close to in order to do good it is the real man. When a man or woman goes into the shell you might as well get busy elsewhere, for a while at least. (I take it you know all about turtles.) But whenever you catch them outside the shell and make them feel so easy that they don't want to go back in, then you are pretty certain to win.

Thirty years ago last June I rode half a day on a train through Illinois in the same seat with a traveling man. We soon struck up a pleasant conversation. I was dressed much as any ordinary business man and for such he took me. He talked freely and without restraint. More than once he used unnecessary expletives. Once he swore roundly. Several times he made brutally frank remarks about things that were sacred to me. But withal he had innate qualities of manliness that I admired very much. When the brakeman called his town he arose reluctantly. Then and not until then did we exchange cards. I can almost see now the bewilderment on his face as it dawned upon him that he had been talking for five hours to a minister just as he would have done to a fellow salesman. He had only time to say, "Well, I'll be switched!" (I think he started to say he'd be something else) shook my hand and was gone.

Two months later I saw him in my New York congregation one Sunday morning. He remained after the benediction had been pronounced and we shook hands heartily. Alluding to our experience on the train he frankly told me that if he had suspected my calling he would have "braced up" instantly. As it was he wished to thank me for my courtesy and hoped I would forget some things he had said. After that he came to our services every time he was in the city and twice visited me in my home. He became, and is today, a loyal Christian business man, so well known that were I to mention his name you would recognize it at once. I give you this, Will, out of my personal experience for what it is worth and I think it's worth a good deal.

I note what you said in your last letter about some innovations you prepared to introduce into your choir. Haven't you a music committee? If not, appoint one or elect one and then —well in this instance you might profit by emulating one act of Pilate, viz., wash your hands of the matter. I have known some big preachers in my time but I never knew one big enough to "butt in" to his choir and do it with satisfactory results all around.

But this is a long, rambling letter, too long, I fear. I must bring it to an end right here. I pray that this new year may bring you much joy and rich fruitage in your work.

Affectionately your uncle,
WILLIAM PRENTICE.

True prayer never stops with petition for one's self. It reaches out for others. The very word intercession implies a reaching out for some one else. It is standing as a go-between, a mutual friend, between God and some one who is either out of touch with him or is needing special help. Intercession is the climax of prayer. It is the outward drive of prayer. It is the effective end of prayer outward. Communion and petition are upward and downward. Intercession rests upon these two as its foundation. Communion and petition store the life with the power of God; intercession lets it out on behalf of others.—S. D. Gordon.

EASY CHANGE

When Coffee Is Doing Harm.

A lady writes from the land of cotton of the results of a four years' use of the food beverage—hot Postum Coffee:

"Ever since I can remember we had used coffee three times a day. It had a more or less injurious effect upon us all, and I myself suffered almost death from indigestion and nervousness caused by it. I know it was that, because when I would leave it off for a few days I would feel better. But it was hard to give it up, even though I realized how harmful it was to me.

"At last I found a perfectly easy way to make the change. Four years ago I abandoned the coffee habit and began to drink Postum, and I also influenced the rest of the family to do the same. Even the children are allowed to drink it freely as they do water. And it has done us all great good. I no longer suffer from indigestion, and my nerves are in admirable tone since I began to use Postum Coffee. We never use the old coffee any more. We appreciate Postum as a delightful and healthful beverage, which not only invigorates but supplies the best of nourishment as well." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

—Bro. I. N. Aldrich, of Downs, Kan., has been taking a run around the sixth district of that state, and reports that he found Agra and Kensington without a preacher. These are two fine towns on the Rock Island, about five miles apart, and they will pay $600 to a preacher.

—We have no church building at Glenwood Springs, but a devoted little band of Christians have faith and determination that the near future will give them a house. Glenwood Springs is one of the most beautiful places in Colorado, and will doubtless receive the attention of the state board.

—We are receiving warnings from different parts of the country against men who, it is claimed, are impostors and unworthy the support of the brethren. Among the names mentioned are Chas. E. Moss, and J. A. Cooper, and others. Further particulars we hope to publish elsewhere.

—We are glad to hear that the church at Mexico, Mo., has increased the salary of its pastor $300. Brother Kokendoffer is an untiring worker and one of the ablest of Missouri ministers. Much of the success of our church at Mexico, where a new building is now in course of erection, is due to the pastor.

—J. N. Lester and family have moved to Elmwood, California. While pastor at Waukegan, Ill., Bro. Lester's health failed him several years ago and for the past two years he has found the coast climate so beneficial that he has decided to locate on an alfalfa ranch, where friends will receive a warm welcome.

—C. C. Davis, pastor at Iowa Falls, writes of the great loss which the congregation there feels in the removal of L. W. Swem and family to West Liberty. He has been as a father to the church in the five years of its existence, and as a token of love and appreciation the members of the church gathered at the pastor's home recently to give Brother Swem and family a Godspeed, and some tokens of their esteem.

—L. H. Stine, of Lawrenceville, Ill., is to deliver his well known lecture, "Four Lights of History," before the men's club of the First Congregational church at Springfield, Ohio, on March 10, it being the first of a series of three lectures. Dr. Gladden and Dr. Henry Churchill King, who is to be the speaker at our congress, are the other two lecturers.

—H. C. Garrison has tendered his resignation as minister of the Pleasant Grove church, Garrett county, Ky., of which he has had charge for three years. Brother Garrison finds his work at Danville all he can attend to. In recognition of his faithful service here, a handsome increase in salary has just been voted him. We hope to publish in the course of a few weeks some articles by Brother Garrison.

—Joseph Gaylor is very much encouraged over the outlook in southwest Missouri. Many of the knotty problems that once confronted us, he says, "are practically solved, and though there are new ones, the work of the past has opened a thousand doors in that great field that were formerly closed. Good strong men are needed." He anticipates that the institute to be held at Monett early in May will be not only well attended, but productive of much good.

—In another column will be found a note from Brother Kincaid on the great fire at Hot Springs, Ark. As our readers know, the brethren there are without much financial resources, and this fire has crippled quite a number of them. Things were going along nicely until it came, in the direction of collecting the money necessary for the purchase of a lot. We are sure that this special condition will appeal to some of our generous brethren.

—"Our people have a broader and deeper insight as to the meaning of missions, and the missionary spirit. We look for positive results on March 5." This is the tone of a communication from Percy Cross, pastor at Pine Bluff, Ark., in writing of the missionary rally held there. It is to effect such results that these rallies are held all over the country, and we believe, from communications we have had, that the spirit of missions is growing in the churches.

—The foundation of the new church building at Florence, Col., has been laid, and it is hoped that by the coming autumn the church will be worshiping in the finished structure. It is to be of brick, and when a house costing not less than $2,000 has been built Brother Lobach will make the church a deed to the lots without cost. At present the members are meeting in a frame building, and Brother Russell is preaching to the largest congregations he has had for some time.

—The March offering should be sent as promptly as possible to F. M, Rains, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O. There should be no unnecessary delay. The money is needed to help meet some heavy notes in bank. The society has been compelled to borrow about $40,000 until after the March offering in order to pay the missionaries promptly and to keep the work in progress on certain buildings in foreign lands. The credit of our people is good at bank, but we must keep it so by prompt payment.

—We are glad to know that Bro. S. R. Maxwell is desirous of again entering upon the active work of the ministry, which he left some time ago for business purposes. Brother Maxwell came to us from the Methodists, among whom he was a shining light. He was pastor of our Third church at Richmond, Va., of the First church, Macon, Ga., and of the First church, Valdosta, Ga. Brother Maxwell has the endorsement of some of our foremost men. He is a brilliant preacher, a good money raiser, and active in every way.

Thousands of Men and Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will Do for YOU, Every Reader of The Christian-Evangelist May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys begin to get better they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Didn't Know I Had Kidney Trouble

I had tried so many remedies without their having benefited me that I was about discouraged, but in a few days after taking your wonderful Swamp-Root I began to feel better.

I was out of health and run down generally, had no appetite, was dizzy and suffered with headache most of the time. I did not know that my kidneys were the cause of my trouble, but somehow felt they might be, and I began taking Swamp-Root, as above stated. There is such a pleasant taste to Swamp-Root, and it goes right to the spot and drives disease out of the system. It has cured me, making me stronger and better in every way, and I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers.

Gratefully yours,
MRS. A. L. WALKER, 331 East Linden St., Atlanta, Ga.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue much suffering and fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; make your head ache and back ache, cause indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, make you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

How to Find Out

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—So successful is Swamp-Root in promptly curing even the most distressing cases, that to Prove its wonderful merits you may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information, both sent absolutely free by mail. The book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured. The value and success of Swamp-Root is so well known that our readers are advised to send for a sample bottle.

In writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

—"One of the few good church papers that come to this office," says the Missouri Statesman, "is the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of St. Louis." This is evidence that the Missouri Statesman knows a good thing when it sees it. We prefer, however, to think of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as a religious paper rather than as a church paper, since it is more concerned with Christianity than with Churchianity. We thank our Columbia neighbor, however, for its compliment, and especially do we commend its closing remark to the brethren in Missouri: "The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ought to go into the home of every member of the Christian church in Missouri."

—We very much regret to hear that another of our preachers has met his death in a railway accident. Bro. J. R. Johnson, of Harlan, was killed in the wreck that resulted from the Rock Island Flyer out of Des Moines striking a broken rail near Wiota, ten miles east of Atlantic. His head was crushed and he must have met with instantaneous death. Born near Osceola about 44 years ago, like many other of our preachers, he entered Drake university with a family already under his care. He leaves a wife and five children. His brother is W. S. Johnson, who was at Urbana in a meeting when the sad message reached him. In some respects this occurrence was similar to that of Knowles Shaw. Both brethren were of the same age, both were engaged on the same errand (Brother Johnson was returning from holding an appointment at Shannon City, Ia.), and while Brother Shaw was the only man killed in the accident, Brother Johnson was one of two. His family will have the sympathy of a very large number of interested people.

—W. H. Rust has resigned his work at Berwick, Ill., and accepted a call to Schaller, Ia., where he began work the first Lord's day of this month. During his recent pastorate a parsonage worth $1,200 was built and the church painted, most of the work being done by Brother Rust himself. There is a field here now for someone to be useful. Brother Rust leaves because of a desire to return to Iowa.

—The account of the new church building at Owensboro, Ky., was unfortunately omitted from our columns owing to the large amount of news we had and despite the fact that we did put on four extra pages to accommodate it. We learn that about $7,000 were raised, being $2,000 more than the indebtedness. We congratulate Brother Crossfield and his fine staff of co-workers on their achievement and pray that a great blessing may now come to the church.

—It has been decided to have a reunion of all old students of Kentucky university during commencement week in June. The feature of the occasion will be a dinner held on the lawn at Gratz park, and addresses are scheduled from four prominent men, the only one at present decided upon being E. L. Powell. It is desired to get the names of all old students and presumably anybody who has been connected with the university, and President Jenkins will take charge of all such communications.

—Next Thursday, March 16, a special service will be held at the Richmond street Christian church, Cincinnati, O., to burn the mortgage that has existed. Howard Cramblet, the present pastor, will be assisted by Justin Green and Vernon Stauffer, former pastors, and others. We congratulate the congregation heartily. It was in this church that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was officially launched, though it originated in a woman's meeting in the basement of the Central Christian church of the same city.

—Some of our good brethren think it is a most dangerous thing for an evangelist of our persuasion to hold union meetings with any of the denominations. We find the following from a contributor in one of our church papers: "It is absolutely sinful, and the preacher who does this successfully, jeopardizes his soul, the souls of his converts, and hinders the advancement of the kingdom of heaven. Such a procedure is a fearful departure from the truth of the gospel, and I hereby declare my solemn protest." We would very much like to hear what Bro. W. J. Wright has to say out of his experience.

—A. W. Lindsey, referring to Brother Bondurant, whose picture and a sketch of whose life appeared in our last issue, writes us as follows: "Years ago, Eld. T. M. Allen baptized a score of young men who remained in this community. When they grew old, all of them occupied the 'amen corner.' In late years they have been passing over the river one by one till they are all gone now. Brother Bondurant was 'the last leaf upon the tree in the spring.' Brother Allen must have been a master workman in fine material. His work lived after him. He wrought in marble, gold, silver, precious stones. His works have been tested and are now following him. Brother Bondurant is well acquainted in heaven, for his brethren all preceded him." Brother Bondurant was, we believe, the largest giver to missionary efforts that our church has ever produced.

—Our National Benevolent Association has appointed Bro. J. P. Davis, of Crawfordsville, Ind., to present its claims and look after its interest among the churches of that state. We need say nothing in commendation of the work of the Benevolent Association. It is one that appeals to all sympathetic hearts, and ought to receive generous support. We bespeak for Brother Davis a hearty welcome. He has held important positions in the west, and can be useful in the pulpit as well as represent his special work for the aged and the young who need the help of the brethren generally.

—Disciples' congress meets in Columbia March 20 to 23. The Columbia church extends a cordial invitation to all. A large attendance is expected, and should be had in view of the importance of such national gatherings. A good program has been prepared. The attractions of Columbia are great. It is the well-known seat of the State university, and in addition to this it is a city of schools and colleges. We earnestly request that those who expect to attend kindly send us their names at once. It will assist us greatly in our plans for entertainment. C. H. Winders, pastor.

—On August 28, 1865, Bro. C. G. Bartholomew, writing from Rockville, Ind., says regarding the "Buffalo, N. Y., Mission": "The prosperity attending Brother Headington's labors at this mission point shows the importance of the field, and the value of the labor already bestowed." The Richmond avenue church of Christ, R. H. Miller pastor, at its annual meeting made the following exhibit for 195 contributing members: Total amount raised, $6,968.01. The missionary offerings were $2,381.12. Average contributed per member, $38.81 for all purposes. For missionary purposes, $12.21. Percentage of missionary funds to total amount raised, 34. For 1899 it was 21 per cent.

—Earle M. Todd has decided to return to this country, and any church that gets him as its pastor will be fortunate in securing one of the most consecrated preachers that we know. Brother Todd gave himself to a work for which both his father and mother laid down their lives. It was M. D. Todd who established our cause in the historic city of Chester and fought the British and religious conservatism in one of the strongholds of Churchianity. Earle Todd, after a college training in America, went back to England to take up the work his father had so ably begun. Called finally to the larger field in London, he has been one of our leaders in the English work. For its sake we regret his return. But Brother Todd feels that in view of all the circumstances it is wisest for him now to return to America. He is in the prime of life, a good speaker, well informed and devoted to Christian work.

—Does the new editoral crowd the old into forgetfulness? I wish to congratulate you on the editorial in the Christian-Evangelist of Feb. 16, on "A Dominant Note in the New Evangelism," which I have been reading today. I agree most heartily with the declaration that "there seems to be little consciousness of sin, or little appreciation of its heinous character and awful consequences," and its appeal for continuous presentation of the need of repentance. Personally, and in my ministry, I feel that, along with the absolute need of faith, the point to be perpetually emphasized is the need of sincerest penitence. I remarked, in a ministers' meeting, "My greatest anxiety is my seeming failure to convict men of sin." A Baptist preacher smilingly remarked, "I do not worry. That is the work of the Holy Spirit." So was it of Timothy (2 Tim. 4:2) where the same word is used by Paul. J. H. Wright.

—In the absence of his chief the office "wielder of the shears" dares to give publication to a clipping from the Globe-Democrat. The editor is a good thousand miles away and he will have forgotten all about our offense by the time he leaves the orange groves and big fish. A telegram announces the safe arrival of himself and Mrs. Garrison at Cocoanut Grove. The following is from our contemporary:

"It was an auspicious augury of the ultimate union of Baptist and Christian forces (which some of the Christian ministers predict within ten years) to see Rev. Dr. John T. M. Johnston of the Delmar avenue Baptist church, coming out of a book store a few days ago with a great bundle of books, all by one author, which he had just purchased. They were the complete works of Rev. Dr. J. H. Garrison of the Christian church, written during his long life as a minister and editor. Upon being questioned as to his unusual fondness for the literature of the Disciples, Dr. Johnston replied that it was an individual preference. He liked Dr. Garrison's 'way of putting things' and he wanted to read everything he had ever written. If he accomplishes his elaborate purpose before April 3, he will be well prepared for the Baptist-Christian ministerial conference which is to be held that day."

city in the interest of good government. In writing about this to the editor of this paper, he says:

"One must be acquainted with local conditions before he could fully justify me in giving my consent to be a nominee, for on general principles I think that a preacher has no business running for office. He must be a leader and a prophet. But I have fought nearly eight years for cleaner things. We had organized a good government league of over eleven hundred members. We had nominated a man for mayor and he got scared and quit before his papers were filed. We had no other man to take the place. It was a case of lay down and let the forces of evil ride over us triumphantly, or take the field myself. My nomination is backed up by the best business men of Salina, by all the churches, and by my own board."

We have written Brother Shields that if he had sought for this nomination we would have regretted it; but since it seems the nomination has been forced upon him by circumstances, we hope he will have the chance to demonstrate that a good preacher and pastor may sometimes make a good mayor. Everywhere the people are seeking for honest and capable men for office. May the forces of righteousness prevail!

Not the Only One.

In Brother Harlow's excellent article in the Christian-Evangelist this week he says, "I have the honor, so far as I know, of being the only evangelist among us who has been called and has held a union meeting with all the prominent churches uniting."

There have been several such meetings held. W. H. Bales held a meeting at Breckenridge, Missouri, and Brother Putnam, at Howard, Nebraska.

This scribe has been asked to hold such meetings, but was prevented by previous engagements.

I most heartly commend Brother Harlow's article. It is easy enough to theorize about how to do evangelistic work; but it would be better to show us. Simpson Ely.

Indian Territory News.

The writer is just home from Wagoner, where the north district convention has been in session. Notwithstanding the bad weather and the fact that this was the beginning of our district work in the Indian Territory, this convention was a decided success. The following preachers of the northern district were present: D. H. Bays, Frank Van Vorhis, Randolph Cook, George Duffy, C. N. Martin, H. C. Collier, D. M. Harris, J. H. Crutcher, John T. Smith, J. T. Hawkins, S. R. Hawkins. J. H. Stark, of Iowa, and Otto West, of Missouri, were also in attendance.

S. R. Hawkins was chosen temporary chairman and Frank Van Vorhis temporary secretary. A constitution was adopted and permanent officers chosen as follows: Geo. Duffy, chairman; F. Van Vorhis, secretary and treasurer; J. H. Crutcher, vice-president.

"The Need of Co-operation" was ably discussed by J. H. Crutcher. Geo. Duffy delivered an address upon "The Spirit of Christ in Relation to Missions." Christian Endeavor was represented by F. Van Vorhis, the Sunday-school by C. N. Martin, and the C. W. B. M. by Mrs. Morton, of Okmulgee.

Several of the preachers present promised to donate their services for one mission meeting, others pledged themselves or their church to the support of the work, and thus a good start in the work was made. We have had a long, hard winter which has interfered with some of our plans, but the work moves on grandly. We are planning an aggressive campaign for the spring and summer. D. W. Campbell recently held a meeting at Stillwell, and effected an organization. He will return to Stillwell soon to further develop that mission. F. H. Groom has recently been on the sick list, but is convalescent. R. E. McCorkle is in a meeting at Mounds. D. H. Bays will probably locate with the church at Holdenville. John T. Smith has taken up the work at Checotah. Brother Brain, recently of Chicago, preaches two Lord's days per month at Wilburton. I began a meeting at Broken Arrow, Feb. 23. S. R. Hawkins, Cor. Sec.

Dedication at Peru, Ind.

The new building at Peru was dedicated under the direction of L. L. Carpenter, assisted by J. L. Thompson, the pastor. Brother Thompson has been in this field just a little over a year, and at once set to work to better the conditions. The cost of the remodeling was about $6,000. The church is beautifully carpeted, seated with opera chairs, lighted by both electricity and gas, and heated by a private steam plant. Everything went off well at the dedication, the only matter of regret being the absence of Chas. M. Fillmore, of Cincinnati, who was the church's first minister. He, however, sent a dedicatory hymn. The pastor is now in a great meeting with home forces, and 14 were added the first week.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

Our letter in the issue of Jan. 26 reported J. Murray Taylor, of Washington, D. C, in a meeting with W. S. Hoye, of Beaver Creek, Md. The results of the meeting were 22 added.

The most important addition, for the Beaver Creek minister, was one received from the church at Rockville, Md. On Jan. 25, assisted by the Rockville pastor, W. B. Taylor, the writer had the privilege of uniting in marriage at Rockville, our esteemed brother, W. S. Hoye, and Miss Anna Owens, an estimable member and the faithful clerk of the church there. The following night they were accorded a cordial reception at the Beaver Creek parsonage, where Brother and Sister Hoye are at home to their friends. Brother Hoye is in his 21st year.

H. F. Lutz closed his meeting at Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 5. He reports 21 additions, with more expected. I assisted in the singing for 14 nights.

We had one baptized at Waynesboro, Pa., at prayer-meeting last week and received into the fellowship on Lord's day following.

M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., assisted H. C. Kendrick in a meeting at Hagerstown, Md. We expect to hear of a good meeting.

Ernest C. Bragg has recently gone from Lynchburg, Va., Christian college to Friendsville in West Maryland. He reports three confessions there. Our Young People's Society took an offering for education, Dec. 29.

Our Bible-school will give the Easter exercise and take an offering for Christian benevolence, and we will observe the offering for foreign missions in March, and home missions in May. We are worshiping in a rented church, and struggling to get a lot, but we think the shortest way to a church home is by helping the ignorant, the orphan, the aged and the heathen, and we believe God will help us. And he is so doing through his children. We need $2,700 to get a lot for our church. We want to raise $3,000 to have a nest egg for a building. We are well along with pledges on the first block of $1,000. I want 100 persons to take the second block in sums of $10 a square, or two squares, or half a square, or send any amount. Brethren, pray for us, and help the only congregation of Disciples in Franklin county, Pa. J. A. Hopkins.

Waynesboro, Pa.

Georgia.

The Christian church in the state of Georgia for the past year cannot boast of so large results as those achieved in states wherein the cause is stronger, but taking into consideration the obstacles incident to a pioneer work the results are most encouraging. The year book, which has just appeared, compiled by the energetic state evangelist, W. J. Cocke, reveals a year of splendid service. Georgia has but 135 Christian churches with an aggregate membership of 13,000, and this in a population of two and a quarter millions. "Sixty thousand homes are said to be without Bibles; seventy-eighty counties have no church after the apostolic pattern; 165 towns ranging in population from 500 to 15,000 are without the great plea of the Disciples."

The state board reports nine men employed for all or part of their time. For the last six months W. J. Shaw devoted his entire time to Bible-school and Endeavor work with good results. The whole number of sermons preached by evangelists was 1,024; the whole number added to churches, 498; the whole number of special addresses, 174; two new churches were organized, two new Bible schools and four new Endeavor societies. The treasurer of the board received from all sources $3,106. In addition to the work manned by the board two other new churches have been instituted in the state.

The Georgia educational society, of which J. H. Wood is secretary, which has for its object the assistance of students for the ministry, reports $317.70 raised and paid in part to six young men now attending the Bible college at Lexington, Ky.

The C. W. B. M. reports a great increase in membership during the year. One new auxiliary organized and all old ones actively at work. In the state are 19 auxiliaries, 415 members and 105 subscribers to the Tidings. Total raised for all purposes, $1,283.12.

The woman's society for Georgia missions, which does a work similar to the state board, reports $1,308.86 raised, organized one church of 15 members, reorganized and revived one other, held five evangelistic meetings at old points and one at a new point, had 25 additions, sustained the mission school at Baldwin and supported two women missionaries in the mountains.

The state convention recently held at Savannah was one of the best in the history of the work. Better reports, larger gifts, more thorough organization and deeper spiritual life in the churches together with a spirit of progressiveness, gladdened the hearts of the delegates. All our national boards were represented on the program and the people were brought into more sympathetic touch with our larger efforts. Work in Georgia must needs be slow, because all the south is conservative, but with cultured men in the pulpit the work will surely go forward. Any investment now will bear great results in the years to come. C.

Missouri.

H. James Crockett, needing the help of an assistant pastor, had one to take up his abode at his house. He is now having his first experience in administering paregoric, soothing syrup, and walking the floor. Mother and babe are doing well.

The last word from C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, is that his dear wife is no better, but seems to be gradually nearing the end of the journey. Let us all carry them before the Lord in our prayers.

E. H. Williamson, of Kansas City, one of our very best young pastors, can be secured for a few meetings and some church would secure a great blessing by calling him to its pastorate.

J. N. Crutcher writes that his work at Chillicothe opens up finely. It surely is a great field and we look for great developments.

J. M. Rudy, pastor of the First church, Sedalia, was one of the evangelists in the recent union meeting in Kansas City. His teaching, preaching and life were such while in this work that the pastors of the various churches in his "district," two Presbyterians, Baptist and Methodist, joined in a letter to him of the largest praise. It was a rich compliment, well deserved.

J. R. Blunt is caring for and locating a number of Bible students from the burned out Kimberlin Heights school. The boys are having splendid success.

Maryville, H. A. Denton pastor, and Union avenue, St. Louis, J. M. Philputt pastor, are the only churches, so far, to send $100 this year for state missions.

The King Hill church, at St. Joseph, has called N. Rollo Davis for his full time this year. This means business.

J. R. Perkins has just closed a meeting with his home church, Huntsville, with 22 added. Now they are talking of a new parsonage.

W. H. Hook, who recently took a trip "beyond the Rockies," is back, with his address at Mexico. He has had a severe illness, but is now fully recovered.

It seems that there ought to be one hundred men—business men—in Missouri who would give $100 each for our permanent fund. Some of you try it.

J. Jones is working hard to build a new church at Green Ridge. The house there was destroyed by fire several years ago. He will succeed. He always does.

Never was the field more ripe for the harvesters than now; every thrust of the sickle brings in the ripened grain. Everywhere, at all times, it is being demonstrated that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

T. A. Abbott, State Secretary.

Baltimore News.

Recently the Baltimore ministers' conference invited the ministers of the Disciples' conference to meet with them to hear a paper on "Baptists and Disciples" by Dr. C. F. Winbigler, of Washington, D. C. The paper was kindly presented and just as kindly discussed by the ministers of both communions. These two great bodies of Christians need to cultivate a closer fellowship. We hold too much in common to fight each other on any point and the time has come when we who care for the prayer of Jesus must lay aside all prejudice and narrowness and seek with our whole hearts the fulfillment of that prayer. If some Baptists and some Disciples delight in making hard charges against each other and seeking a general warfare, let them alone. The differences between Baptists and Disciples are trifles in comparison with this great lost world that is daily passing into death. A preacher has very little to do when he takes these differences as the subject for a sermon to his flock on Lord's day and spends that time in magnifying these differences.

Our business is to cultivate a better fellowship both publicly and privately with our Baptist brethren as far as it can be done, and to love them even if we should in some corner meet some who do not love us. The present duty is clear and no man has a right to lower the standard.

The monthly report for our churches in the city is as follows: Fulton avenue, one by letter; Harlem avenue, three by baptism; Christian temple, one by letter, three by statement and five by confession, making 13 for the month. There were no additions at the other three churches. Peter Ainslie.

A CHEAP HEART CURE.

A Norwich Lady Tells You What to Use at Home, If You Would Cure Yourself at Once.

Alice A. Wetmore, Block 67, Norwich, Conn., says if any sufferer from Heart Disease in any form will write her, she will without charge direct them to the perfect cure she used.

We advise every one interested to get this free information now, for Miss Wetmore is very positive it will lead to their complete cure.

Toledo, Ohio.

Few places in all America are more attractive than Toledo; few more progressive. Last year it stood third of the cities of America in increase of population. It is the second city as a railroad center of the west, having 27 railroads and street cars running out of it. We have in course of construction the best Y. M. C. A. building in all the world. Not the city alone but the surrounding country is ideal level, fertile, and well cultivated, making this section one of the most desirable on God's good earth.

We have with all this in the city four churches and a mission Sunday-school; it has been only a few years since we had but one. The East side church, where Brother Van-Voris holds forth, has recently had a meeting which has resulted in 30 additions, and they are still coming. South church (Brother Norvel, pastor) is planning for a meeting. Brother Norvel is a faithful servant of the Lord, and doing fine work. He has a growing church. Norwood avenue church has recently called Brother Mahoney to the pastorate; he is building up quite a congregation, and I predict for him success.

I commenced my work as pastor of the Central of Toledo on Oct. 1. In this time God has blessed us. We have added to our list nearly every Sunday—as many as five at a single service. The Central has determined to make its influence felt in this section. I will commence a meeting at once, assisted by Brother Bargy, singing evangelist.

Michigan Notes.

Prof. G P. Coler, of Ann Arbor, conducted a preachers' institute at Kalamazoo, at which there were about a dozen preachers present from the southwestern part of the state. Some were detained on account of sickness, some holding meetings and some were snowbound. But the meeting was a success and all felt richly paid for being present. Professor Coler has had a large experience in institute work, he is thoroughly equipped in Bible knowledge, he understands the problems of the preacher, and by his tact and wisdom is able to call forth many helpful things. Such topics as "The Preacher's Call and Calling," "The Preacher's Library," "Sermon Preparation," "Sermon Delivery," "Sermon Illustrations," "The Preacher's Inner Circle," etc., were discussed.

The institute was followed by a foreign missionary rally, conducted by A. McLean, Cecil Armstrong and Brother Rambo. Every preacher was made to feel as never before that missions is the supreme business of the church. The Kalamazoo church continues to prosper and be active in every good work. Brother Halley is greatly loved by his people and the outlook for the church of Christ in that flourishing city is bright.

Michigan churches have been and are now engaged in the greatest evangelistic campaign in their history. Already more than 500 souls have been brought into our churches, and the end is not yet. This work is largely under the direction of the corresponding secretary and is carried on with no expense to our state society. Many of our weak churches are being strengthened and encouraged.

J. G. Wilson, who recently took fellowship with the church of Christ from the Baptists, has accepted a call to Waldron, where he is now engaged in a meeting.

G. A. Gish recently held a meeting at Wright with 17 additions, among whom was C. A. Osborn, a minister in the church of God. After Brother Gish closed the meeting Brother Osborn continued a few days longer with eight more added to the church.

J. W. Curch went to Deerfield and found a half dozen discouraged Disciples. He preached the grand old story of a resurrected Lord and 41 souls were added to the church.

J. A. Canby assisted V. H. Miller in a meeting at Petersburg and added 25 to the church, mostly by baptism.

T. P. Ullom just closed a meeting at Traverse City, with 90 added to the church, nearly all by baptism. Traverse City is rapidly becoming one of our strong churches.

J. A. Findlay, of Sullivan, Ohio, has accepted the work at St. Johns, supported by the A. C. M. S. and the M. C. M. S. This insures the success of the St. John's work.

W. F. Schrontz, of Orange, Ind., has accepted a call to Kalkaska, Mich. Brother Schrontz will be a strength to the preaching force of Michigan.

W. S. McIlvaine has removed his family from Washington to Kalamazoo, Mich., where he will make his headquarters and preach for neighboring churches.

Chas. Gardner is holding a meeting at Lacota. V. H. Miller is aiding C. O. Purdy in a meeting at Coats Grove. J. H. Hammond is holding a meeting at W. Sebewa and F. T. Porter is assisting T. W. Bellingham in a meeting at Bangor.

Let no church in Michigan fail to take the offering for foreign missions. World-wide missions now has the right of way. Make this the greatest year in our history.

Paw Paw, Mich. C. M. Keene.

New Church at Owensboro, Ky.

R. H. Crossfield and his devoted followers know the value of printer's ink. We commend, too, the editor of the Inquirer, the local paper at Owensboro, Ky., for its kindly treatment of the members of the Christian church in that town, who dedicated their handsome new building, Z. T. Sweeney preaching the sermon, on Lord's day. The Inquirer gave over two pages of its space to an advance notice of the event, printing no fewer than 46 photographs of the workers, besides those of Brother Crossfield, Brother Sweeney and the church. This shows both good journalism on the editor's part and the right appreciation of the value of the press in helping Christian effort on the part of the pastor and his board.

We cull the following facts from the Inquirer. It was in 1860 that the first Christian church was organized in Owensboro, Mrs. Nancy Wilhoyte being the only one of the charter members now on the church roll.

Soon after the organization the civil war came with its blighting touch and the church made almost no progress, being the greater part of the time without a pastor, its members scattered and divided. During its first years the congregation had no house of its own and met from time to time in a theater building. In 1870 the first house of worship was built. It was small and was soon outgrown and was remodeled to such an extent that it became almost a new building. The membership grew with varying degrees of rapidity. In 1895 it had reached not quite 300 actual members. At the present time there are 538 actual members on the rolls, and the church is instinct with spiritual and material life.

A. N. Gilbert was the first pastor. Others who have served the church are Joseph E. Taylor, W. W. Carter, C. K. Marshall, Alfred Flower, J. B. Mayfield, Benjamin C. Flower, G. W. Terrell, H. G. Fleming, C. F. Mortimer, John M. Goodwin, J. W. Hardy, R. V. Omer and R. H. Crossfield. What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all he beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs, and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for hat reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing s safe and reliable for constipation, liver aly kidney troubles, and especially in all formald skin disease, as this remedy." edi-

Indications are that this will be the best year ever in receipts for state work. But we ought to have half a dozen good clean men to fill the vacancies. These fields can pay salaries of $500 to $700 to start with, and more as the work develops. The people of the northwest are ambitious and liberal, and they appreciate the men who serve them efficiently. There are preachers in the middle-state cities who are railroading it out to some outside appointment Saturdays and back on Mondays who would more fully serve the cause and the Master were they to come and live with and serve the people of the great northwest. Will not some who read this come over and help us do this great work?

Besides the churches that can pay salaries as mentioned above there are many other places that could support a preacher in part by Sunday preaching, while other means of support can generally be had and wages as a rule are good. There is perhaps no place where labor is more respected by all classes, and we need a host of preachers who could in part provide for their support by clerking, teaching in day school or other occupations. We have in this state several splendid examples of the manner in which churches may be built up by men who follow secular callings during the week.

We have a healthful climate and the people are vigorous and intelligent. There is also opportunity for material advancement that does not belong to the older states.

It is hoped that some good preacher may "feel pressed in spirit" to answer this call. No drones or tramp preachers need apply. Good, clean men will receive a hearty welcome and will be given every encouragement by the state missionary board. In answering do not send letters of recommendation, but send references, which must include your own state corresponding secretary and one or two other good references, including the church last served. Address all communications to the writer as at the close of this letter.

Miss Nina Palmer, of South Elrod church, is in Drake university preparing herself for larger usefulness. G. W. Neal, who has been spending a month in Kentucky, is back at his work at Oacoma and Presho.

I am sorry to learn of the loss by fire of all the household effects of M. B. Ainsworth of Aberdeen. The serious feature of this loss was that all his manuscripts were destroyed. However I am glad to hear that he has reconsidered his resignation and will continue with the church at Aberdeen.

VERDICTS OF THOSE WHO HAVE READ THIS GREAT BOOK

His best book . . . It is the book of the gospel—the gospel for the man in the street.—Dr. Jas. Hastings, Editor of Dictionary of the Bible.

All who read the book will be benefited thereby. It breathes a sweet, pure spirit and will certainly do much good.—D. R. Dungan.

It is a book for the age, by one who is alive to the needs of the age and the great problems that confront the leaders of the church.—J. J. Morgan.

It is the ripest thought and matured conviction of a veteran whose ministry as a preacher and writer among the churches of Christ has been conspicuous. It bears the unmistakable marks of wide reading, earnest thinking and catholic sympathies.—Christian Standard.

It has been quite a help to me. It abounds in good suggestions and new applications.—Wm. Ross Lloyd.

It is a book of wide compass, depicting the spiritual history of man from his origin to his final destiny.—J. W. McGarvey.

It is the greatest book ever published by our brotherhood. At every reading it has had fresh charm for me. . . Send for it now! Now!! Not by and by, and you will thank me for ten years to come.—Jas. Small.

Dr. Moore is the most picturesque figure of this present religious reformation, one of its profoundest theologians and most charming writers. Of all his numerous and valuable contributions to church literature this is his masterpiece.—Geo. L. Snively.

The church at Platte has engaged C. W. Worden to serve as pastor during the coming year. There are quite a number of Disciples at Geddes, where the state mission board hopes soon to establish a church. G. W. Elliott has started a church paper at Brookings. Our state mission work is greatly in need of such a publication. J. K. Shellenberger, of Minnesota, is in a meeting with A. H. Seymour at Arlington. R. D. McCance hopes to have a meeting at Parker in the near future. R. M. Ainsworth, late of New York, who formerly lived in this state and did a splendid work at Platte, is with us again and has taken the work at Alexandria. We gladly welcome his return.

The church at Sioux Falls, which has lost so heavily by removals during the past two years and has been greatly discouraged, is renewing the struggle and will in the near future make a payment of $300 on the church debt. The writer spent Sunday, Jan. 22, with this church. There are some loyal people here.

It should be remembered that it is impossible for the secretary-evangelist to answer all the calls that come for meetings and other field work. Indeed two men full time would not be too many to do this work, even if we had means to sustain them. Hence calls for meetings should be in two or three months before the time set for them, for it is not often that the evangelist can pick up and go on short notice.

Do not fail to send in your offerings for state missions. We can make this a great year for state work if we earnestly try and send offerings promptly.

A New Hymnal in the Press.

While engaged in a meeting in this place with W. E. M. Hackelman as song leader, it was my good pleasure to examine the proof sheets of the new hymnal soon to be issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Co., and Hackleman Music Co. Brother Hackelman has devoted three years to the preparation of this work. He spent many months in the study of hymnology, and then selected the best hymns of all the best hymn writers. One feature of the book will be the absence of the "jingling rhymes and jiggy tunes" which have marred many of the song books of recent years. He has included about fifty gospel songs, but only such as he thinks worthy of a permanent place in our hymnology. I think I can congratulate the churches that soon they will have the opportunity of buying from two of our own publishing houses a hymn book which, in dignity, variety and all the qualities that go to enrich the service of song, as well as in its mechanical features, will be the equal of any ever published, if indeed it does not mark an advance in the world's hymnology.

The Hot Springs Fire.

On Saturday morning, Feb. 25, the sun rose on a grand and awful scene. We viewed it from the roof of our home where we were fighting in a rain of fire to save all we had. For hundreds of feet on the skyline about us there arose a wall of forked-tongued flame swept on by a forty mile gale. Twenty-four blocks of the southern part of the city, including one hundred business houses and hotels and five hundred residences, were swept away. Five thousand people were rendered homeless, among which are many Disciples. The loss of life was not great but the property loss was great, estimated at $1,500,000. Just one word with our friends about our church work here. For seven years we have sacrificed and toiled to build up the cause. Will this fire sweep away all our efforts or will you come to our rescue in this awful hour of darkness? All the money we can raise must go in a relief fund to care for homeless brethren, and not a dollar of the large subscription list which we had secured in the city to meet our next payment on the first day of April can now be collected. The gentleman from whom we purchased the lot has lost heavily in the fire and will have to have his money when due. Brethren, if it were not for God and you we would despair and give up hope of ultimate success. But if everyone who reads these lines will see that an offering is sent from their church all will be well and the work so well begun can be continued without a break.

Hot Springs, like Chicago, Baltimore and Jacksonville, will rebuild and the new Hot Springs will be better and grander than the old. Where shall our work appear in the new city? Three churches were burned in the fire. We would not divert one dollar by this appeal from our March and May offerings but we entreat you, brethren, to give us what aid you can. Address,

T. N. Kincaid.

A Plea for the Philippines.

The United States has shown great kindness to the Filipino people, and has established here a vigorous and beneficent government. But the measure of your Christian love with prayers and sacrifices, is not yet filled up for the actual redemption of this people. God has placed their lives in your hands.

Six years ago you found them the creatures of a degenerate colonial power. They were but three centuries removed from their primitive barbarism; filled with false ideals proceeding from wrong examples; and stultified by medieval dogma, idolatrous, spiritless. Their exemplars were political adventurers from Spain; their teachers were the most Romish monks that a Spanish nation could produce and that an Italian pope could countenance.

They were at that time engaged in a series of conspiracies and insurrections against their despots. Terror and devastation were fairly familiar to them. Suspicious and desperate, they plunged into fresh war against the American nation. Fire and sword ran everywhere. In mutual distrust, brother lifted up his hand against brother. Cities were burned, fields harried, cattle destroyed.

Then came peace and knowledge and confidence. But God sent his scourge of cholera; whole families perished; sorrow and terror broke out anew everywhere. The rinderpest came and slew their draft animals; in many provinces they could not cultivate their fields. The harvests were scant. Locusts multiplied extraordinarily, they came in clouds and devoured in a few hours the standing grain.

During these calamities the Filipino has been enduring the exasperations incidental to a new and unadjusted government. New laws, new taxes, and new commercial methods have been confusion to him. He has had to learn a new language, a new industrial ideal, a new civilization. Prices have quite generally doubled or quadrupled; opportunities for work have not correspondingly increased; while the requirements for skill in labor have leaped beyond his conception and training. Meanwhile a new coinage and currency system is being introduced. It is without avail that the government tries to protect the savings of the humble; timid and slow, they lack the wisdom of the money broker; they hold to their old coins and must bear their loss.

Americans come over here, citizens of the great republic, to fret at the deliberation, confusion, and incompetence of the native. After only these few months of very hit-or-miss benefit, they pronounce the man past regeneration. They demand that the country be occupied and developed in the interests of the capital, and that Chinese coolies be imported to take the place of the Filipino workman. Such immigration would be disastrous to the native tribes. In the name of humanity give this people a chance. As they stagger up from their stocks and fetters, don't bludgeon them with the club of commercial greed.

We have some good men here as teachers or officials in the civil government. Some others are more reckless of the responsibility, inconsiderate and abusive to the natives. It is hard to read the good will of the American nation through such lives as these. In matters that concern the most sacred interests of the people, the time is not far past when chief officials at Manila felt that the presence of Protestant missionaries in these islands was a mistake. Even in America some of our own brethren have said that the Philippines ought to be left to Roman Catholic reformers. But there is no reform in Rome. On the eighth day of December the American Archbishop Harty sanctified himself to worship before the image of "Our Lady of Antipolo." They all fall into the ditch.

For myself, I could count on my fingers the friends that encouraged us to leave America, for this mission field. I say again the measure of your Christian love for this people is not filled full. Public schools and civil beneficence cannot redeem them. These do not strike into the roots of human life, with its sorrows, its fears, its struggles, and its perverseness. Pitiable is the people that, in the midst of such calamities as these have endured, can look only into the flames of purgatory for their hope and consolation. It is no wonder that they receive the gospel of Jesus with such fear and gladness. Do not disdain them for their incompetence and childishness. Give them a chance with the gospel. Let the word of God run and be glorified in them. You started to plow with your armies. In the name of the Prince of Peace, withhold not your laborers unto the divine harvest. HERMON P. WILLIAMS.

A Remarkable Triumph in New England.

To take a little church where the audiences had diminished until from seven to thirty people only were accustomed to gather; where collections had dwindled until the weekly income amounted to an average of about $5; to take a church like that, with a mortgage of $3,500 on the property, an additional floating debt of nearly $500, and the church sadly in need of repairs, to wipe out every cent of indebtedness, and to put the church property in repair in ten months' time, so that this church can celebrate the fortieth anniversary of its founding next April 19, free from debt, and have a jubilee; to accomplish this we say in ten months' time, is no inconsiderable achievement. It stands out as a more remarkable achievement, when we remember that it is accomplished in New England, where the Disciples are greatly overshadowed by wealth, prestige and numbers.

And yet this is what is being accomplished at Swampscott, Mass., by Bro. W. H. Rogers and his devoted little band of followers.

April 19 is known as patriots' day in Massachusetts, the anniversary of the fight at Concord and Lexington, and it will be a day of freedom and rejoicing, indeed, for the Burrill street church of Christ at Swampscott.

It will not only be the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the church, but to the very day, the sixteenth anniversary of the dedication of the finest church building in Swampscott, on April 19, 1889.

Brother Rogers believes that a commanding achievement like this, coming like a thunderclap out of a clear sky, is the very thing needed above all others most effectively to get the attention of the people in New England. It will open eyes as nothing else can do.

It will stimulate our brethren throughout New England and make possible a new era for our cause there. It will be a striking illustration of Paul's words in 1 Cor. 1:27, 28.

It is now both the opportunity and the mission of the Swampscott church to paint this promise of God in bright red letters before eyes that are dim with religious doubt and cold materialism, so that they can't help seeing it.

Brother Garrison has incidentally spoken of this achievement as the renewal on the field of Christian fight of the famous Sheridan's ride—an apt illustration.

In order to accomplish it with every penny of debt wiped out, including current expenses for preaching, etc., from Sept. 1, 1904, to April 19, 1905, something over $5,000 had to be raised. Brother Rogers is at present perfectly secure of $3,000. Having done so well up to this juncture, he believes the great Disciple brotherhood will not let him fail in securing the rest. They would not if they could be on the New England field, and fully appreciate the odds at stake.

For the honor of our cause, and for the sake of the New England field where we have only twenty churches in all the six New England states, let not this movement which has been inaugurated with such audacity of faith, fail.

The C. W. B. M. and the Home Board are assisting to the extent of $500, but the time is so short and the exigency so pressing that a movement outside of regular lines is in this "now or never" case a warrantable thing.

Dedication at Coon Rapids, Iowa.

Lord's day, Feb. 26, we dedicated our new church. The building is the largest and best in town and is the only Christian church building in our county. It is a $5,000 structure but by using the old building we had to spend only $4,000. We built believing the people would pay. They did. Alfred M. Haggard dedicated it for us. Inclement weather and bad roads prevented many from attending the services but Brother Haggard in his own genial way rallied our forces and the $2,000 asked for was subscribed. We are proud of his work because he raised the money, left the people happy, and raised the Christian church in their estimation.

I think it was Napoleon who said, "The way to win a battle is to bring up the reserve forces at the crisis." Charles Gilbert Stout was our "reserve force" and when he appeared and attacked the people's purses an unconditional surrender resulted. Brother Stout helped us in our tabernacle meeting in June of 1903. He was with us six weeks and left us, after holding the biggest meeting in our local history, with the good will of everybody.

Lawrence and Edward Wright are now with us and we are preparing for a great victory.

MURVILL C. HUTCHINSON, pastor.

An Expose of Exposers.

It would seem to me that if we could round up a few of the "exposers" who are circulating among our brotherhood it would be better for the cause of Christ than anything we could do at present.

There is too much of a disposition among our brethren to harbor the offscourings of other churches and give them an opportunity to fulminate from our pulpits, when if we were on the inside we would not allow them in our backyards.

On a former occasion I had a little experience with a "Catholic Killer." He had secured the consent of my elders to lecture along that line. It had been procured without my knowledge or consent either. I regretted it, for the man had fraud written all over his face, and I said so very frankly to those whom it would concern. The next day, and before we could be humiliated with his "lecture," he and the woman he traveled with were arrested. His name was decidedly suggestive of "looseness," as well as his career, for he called himself Slack.

Only the other day while in Kansas City I was warned by one of our state board of a man of light complexion, portly, brilliant, but a villainous fraud who makes a speciality of borrowing from our brotherhood whatever he can get. He is wanted in Illinois on a criminal charge.

The last one I dealt with (to my sorrow) poses as a "Spiritualist Killer." I met him at our national convention, and because of the apparent number of respectable sponsors he had in the auditorium I assumed that he was what he claimed to be. If he will pay his bills here and refund to our ladies' aid society the money he embezzled from us, departing on an early train, I shall agree to entertain no more "killers."

The only "killer" I approve of is a microbe "killer." If one can be concocted that will kill any microbe whatever, including the parasites who are operating among us at the present time, I'll buy a whole gross of quart bottles, for the work ought to be thoroughly done.

I have grave doubts about these renegade characters who, when they decide to leave the people with whom they are associated, make for our brotherhood straightway and begin to assault the opposition.

Some of these deadbeats have the best credentials to be had, and it is a puzzle how they get them.

Moral: For the sake of your brethren in the ministry, quit recommending these scoundrels.

P. S. Hillman.

Wm. G. Fife Dead.

We have just learned at this office that Wm. G. Fife passed away at the Baptist Sanitarium in this city last night. Brother Fife was eighty-six years of age. His father was instrumental in organizing the First Christian church in this city in the year 1836. That is, the First church in this city was organized when our brother who has just departed to be with the Lord, was about nine years old. The writer of these lines knew his father as a most consistent man of God. Brother Fife, who has just departed this life, was in every way worthy of the thorough training received, and has always manifested that robust spiritual life so characteristic of our pioneers. He grew up with our cause in St. Louis, and was always solicitous for its growth and welfare. There is no other one man now living who is so thoroughly identified with the churches of Christ from the beginning as Brother Fife in this city. A worthy son has gone to meet a worthy sire. He leaves a blessed heritage to younger generations. May we be worthy of these great lives.

How a Great Meeting was Held.

Wilson has come and gone. The great meetings of the Central Christian church have come to a close. We are scarcely far enough away from them as yet to get a true perspective and to form true estimates of the forces that contributed to their success. However, it is possible even now to speak upon the meetings in the spirit of victory and with the thought that possibly a word about them may help others engaged in a like work.

THE PREPARATION.

For months before the meetings, plans were being laid; large numbers were being interested and great expectations aroused. Hundreds of calls were made by a select number of visitors. Thousands of letters were sent out from the office of the pastor to members of the church and to those whom he desired to reach during the meetings. Scarcely a sermon was preached but that reference was made to the coming revival. Large and efficient committees were at work, each as though the success of the meetings depended upon it. Cottage prayer-meetings were held all over the city. The daily papers were subsidized and large space given to announcements of the coming meetings. Attempt was made to create in the minds of the people not only the belief that we were to have a meeting but that it was to be a great meeting. About three hundred persons signed cards, pledging themselves to each win one person for Christ during the meetings. Everything was done to have the people lay aside usual social engagements and even unnecessary business to give place for the meetings. All the money necessary for the expense of the meetings was raised beforehand, so that we would not be troubled with this problem while the meetings were in progress.

THE MUSIC.

When Mr. Hackleman came to take charge of the music, he found a chorus of more than one hundred singers, besides a small select orchestra. These persons continued faithful in their work throughout the meetings. They were led to believe that it was just as important to sing the gospel as it was to preach it. All excepting five or six of the singers were Christians, or became such during the meetings. A five minute prayer service was held in the choir room almost every evening before they took their places. They sang reverently, hence with power. Professor Hackleman is a master before a chorus, and Mr. Lintt, who came after him, is a worthy successor to Mr. Hackleman. It was clearly shown in these meetings that music is a very important factor in evangelistic work.

THE PREACHING.

Allen Wilson is a born evangelist. He brings into his work more of the evangelistic spirit and more elements of true evangelism than any person whom I have known. His preaching is simple, his vocabulary is made up of words that a child easily understands. He is positive. If he has any doubts, he never betrays them in his speech. He makes the people believe that he believes what he says. There is no metallic ring in his speech; it sounds true and sincere. He is dead in earnest. He is logical. He knows the scripture text and quotes it freely in every sermon. When his discourse is finished, he has carried conviction to the hearts of his hearers, and the singing of the invitation hymn simply gives them an opportunity to act upon this conviction. He is strong in exhortation and this had a telling effect upon the halting ones.

THE RESULTS.

During the meetings 270 persons took membership with the church. Of this number, 185 were by confession, 35 were from the denominations, and the others were a gathering of a scattered Discipleship. These numbers indicate merely the immediate results. The church has swung into the living link class and will now support its own missionary on a foreign field. The meeting also makes necessary a new building, and this enterprise will take concrete form in the near future.

Des Moines and the Foreign Field.

The University church, Des Moines, has selected Hermon P. Williams as its living link to the foreign mission field. A very fitting arrangement, as Brother Williams went from University Place, where his parents reside.

Des Moines is well "linked" to the foreign field. Last fall Drake university sent Chas. S. Settlemeyer to China.

The Central church people take pleasure in referring to H. H. Guy as their "missionary pastor in Japan." And their C. W. B. M. supports Dr. Ada McNeil in India

The University church will be "linked" to the promising work in the Philippines through Brother Williams, who started it, and their C. W. B. M. is fitting out Miss Daisy Drake to send to India next fall.

The state C. W. B. M., with headquarters in Des Moines, supports Florence Mills in India.

In addition to these, Drake university has the following workers in foreign lands—more than one for each year of its existence:

Miss Loduska Wirich, Japan; Tezo Kawai, Japan; Frank Garrett and wife, China; A. E. Cory and wife, China; Miss Edna Dale, China; Jeu Hawk, China; Justin Brown, China; Louie Hugh, Chinese in Oregon; C. L. Pickett and wife, Philippines; Ernest M. Pardee and wife, Porto Rico; W. G. Wilkinson and wife, Porto Rico; L. W. Morgan, England; Mark W. Williams, England; Julius Cramer and wife, Denmark; A. Johnson, Norway.

At present, Bro. W. E. Rambo and family and Dr. W. E. Macklin and family, on furlough from India and China, are residing at University Place and Sister Laura D. Garst, who buried her husband in Japan, is a permanent resident.

Des Moines surely ought to be interested in foreign missions.

The Building of a Church in Topeka.

After seven months of labor there is an organization of 113 Disciples in the southwest part of Topeka, Kan. Fifty-five of these came by confession and baptism, 54 by statement or letter. It was in June last that the city mission society of the capital city thought it wise to establish a mission in another section of the city, and the committee leased a site for $30, and immediately began the erection of a small tabernacle costing $350. Evangelist Neal Overman dedicated the building and organized a Bible-school, June 12. Brother Overman accepted the free will offerings of the people, and under his leadership the way was opened for a great blessing. During the first two weeks of the revival 26 were baptized, and 43 were added by letter and a church organization was effected. The results by Sept. 1 were a membership of 69, with a Bible-school of 51. Ministers who assisted were Brethren Ireland, Palmer, Leason, Lowe, Henderson, Navody, Bentley and the Zumwalt brothers. At a cost of $600 a new location was purchased at 16th and Central Park avenue, and on the first of January another revival under Brother Overman was begun, resulting in 29 confessions and 11 additions by statement or letter. Fully 75 per cent of the membership attend the prayer-meetings, and the church is moving forward in every way. They feel greatly indebted to Brethren Ireland and Overman for their earnest prayers and faithful work.

C W. B. M. in Missouri.

Many encouraging letters are coming from the auxiliaries, accepting their apportionments for the special work. Some send fine plans, though more do not mention their plans, as requested.

Now the cold has moderated into balminess, let there be a general and systematic campaign to regain ground lost because meetings have been impossible. You will find that some members have already contracted the habit of not going. It will need much thought and prayer.

The Platte district convention will meet with the Cameron church March 14 16. Every auxiliary in the district is asked, nay urged, to send at least one delegate. You owe it to your own auxiliary to do this, to say nothing of what is due the faithful manager and her secretary, Miss Mary Hord and Mrs. M. B. Culver.

We are rejoiced to report the first living link with our board in Missouri. The Union avenue church, St. Louis, has, with the auxiliary, decided to support the new missionary in the newest field, Argentina. It is thought that Bro. W. J. Burner, of Illinois, will be selected for this field by our board. He is a splendid man, and having made a special study of Argentina for 15 years, is well equipped with a general knowledge of the field. Is there not another church in the state that will join with its auxiliary and also become a link? All the funds of the auxiliary may be used for this purpose, except state funds.

St. Louis. Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Monroe, La., is the Next Battleground.

April 1 is the day set apart to begin the next campaign in the long neglected Louisiana. Brethren, will you prayerfully read this notice, and observe the Golden Rule? Last June, it was decided that the next Louisiana state convention should meet with the First Christian church, Monroe, La. At that time, we had not heard of a single member in the town, there was not a dollar in the treasury to defray the expenses of a meeting, not a foot of land owned by the Disciples upon which we could pitch the tent, but the brethren asked the writer if he would attempt to build up a congregation that would be able to entertain the next convention. I told them that by the help of the Lord, Mrs. Haddock and Brother Stanley, I would. But that does not exclude your prayers and your offerings. I hope that all who read this will offer at least one prayer for the Monroe missionary effort, and then do your best to answer your prayer. I would not mind the work if we had a lot that we could call our own. Oh, if God would or could put it into the heart of some good Christian to send us $1,000 to secure a church lot now, we could have much better success in soul saving. We will need all of the help we can get.

Where "our plea" is strong, our people have no idea of the bitter opposition that we must meet in Louisiana. Bros. B. W. Stone, John Smith and Alexander Campbell never met harder opposition than we must meet in Monroe. I have been informed that the place has been flooded with tracts, "12 Reasons why the Campbellite Church is not the Church of Christ," hence we enter the place under an awful cloud, and but for the power of the old gospel that "our fathers" preached, we would not attempt the task, but believing in God, and the power of his gospel, and his loyal children, we begin the effort without a shudder, and we are just as sure that victory will crown our feeble efforts as we are that our King is more powerful than the evil one. We can hardly keep back the shout of victory until the battle is over. We have tried our good Master hundreds of times, and he has never failed us.

Our dear old home board has been standing by us in all of our struggles in the south, and I would to God that our churches would not turn a deaf ear to her appeals. I am a "home missionary crank" because in all of our struggles the dear old home board has done her best, and if she had the money to send the men, we could have 10,000 additions to the church of Christ in Louisiana in the next 12 months.

You are cordially invited to attend the Louisiana state convention which will convene with the First Christian church, Monroe, La., May 23-26. Free entertainment. Send in your names, (checks, etc.).

We confidently expect to have one of the greatest conventions that ever convened in Louisiana. Your venturesome brother,

J. L. Haddock.

The Best Lesson Commentary.

In this practical age Sunday-school superintendents and teachers want the very best helps that can be had. We are sure that the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1905, by the veteran Sunday-school worker, W. W. Dowling, ranks among the best that can be had.

It seems to be as near perfect as Sunday-school commentaries can be. We most cheerfully recommend it to all who desire to be abreast of the times and thoroughly qualified for teaching the holy scriptures in the Lord's day school. L. L. Carpenter.

Christian University Notes.

The recent foreign missionary rally here was greatly appreciated by the student body. Brother McLean has been here annually for several years, and is always a favorite with our students. He is always able to present his old theme in a fresh and inspiring manner. Brother Carey's addresses presented the claims of foreign missions in a most interesting, vigorous and attractive manner.

Dr. Dungan recently visited Frankford, Mo., in the interest of Christian university. He preached two or three times, and reports a very pleasant visit.

Mr. G. W. Massie, a student from Denver, Ill., died Feb. 17. He was taken with the measles on Monday and died on Thursday. Prof. B. H. Cleaver and a number of students accompanied the corpse to the home, where Professor Cleaver preached the funeral discourse. This sudden death was a great shock to the student body.

Only once before in the history of this institution, which has been in operation for a half century, has a student died here during the college year. This is surely a remarkable record and speaks much for the healthfulness of Canton.

Dr. Johann has been in western Missouri securing financial assistance for the college.

Recently the students who are preaching for churches near here had a meeting to consider how the churches for which they labor can be aroused to greater interest in foreign missions. It was an enthusiastic meeting. Fifty-four churches were represented and every preacher seemed to possess a double portion of the missionary spirit.

For several years our students have been very successful in debates with other colleges. Their fame as debaters has spread throughout the region round about, and now they are unable to find any neighboring college willing to compete for honors in debate.

The college is very fortunate in the friendship of the ladies of Canton. The college aid, composed of married ladies of Canton, made for the college last year nearly a thousand dollars. The young ladies' guild, composed of young women of Canton, are also liberal givers to the college. Feb. 20 they had Blind Boone here, and cleared a nice sum from his superb entertainment.

A. P. Cobb began a meeting here Feb. 19. A reception was tendered him at the church.

Helps To Faith

By J. H. GARRISON

THIS volume is an effort to carry the argument in favor of Christianity further back than it is usually carried, so as to meet every man on his own ground where he is, and to lead him thence, step by step, to the acceptance of Jesus Christ as affording the only revelation of God and the only religion which can fully satisfy the needs of men. Beginning with the foundational fact of human nature itself, with its religious instincts and religious needs, it aims to lead the sincere and honest searcher for truth from fact to fact until the mind is prepared to receive the Christ of the Bible as the fulfillment of the prophecies of man's inner being—its intuitions, its capacities, its needs—as well as the fulfillment of the prophecies written by holy men of old.

The work consists of two parts. Part I consists of a series of reasons, of foundation facts which underlie faith, embracing eighteen chapters. Part II treats of Some Obstacles to Faith, embracing twelve chapters, the whole making a book of 245 pages.

It is the author's belief that it is a timely book, adapted to the religious needs of many, who, today, are disturbed in their inherited beliefs, and are seeking for some more substantial basis for their faith. It is his sincere hope, too, that the book will in some humble measure meet the wants of this class of people and serve to lead many a doubting soul into the light and joy and strength of a clearer and stronger faith.

The work is bound in blue silk cloth and sells at the popular price of $1.00.

First Principles. By M. M. Davis, A. M., pastor Central Christian church, Dallas, Tex. (Pp. 216. Cincinnati. Standard Pub. Co. Price $1.00.)

The author of this volume is too well known among our readers for anyone to doubt his soundness on first principles, or to believe him guilty of dashing off into any new and untried paths. It is rather a plain, straightforward statement of the things most generally believed among us. The book discusses such questions as, "Is There a God?" "Did the Bible Come From God?" "How to Study the New Testament"; "The Divinity of Christ Seen in His Wisdom"; "In His Purity"; "In His Resurrection"; "Faith"; "Repentance"; "Conversion"; "Change of Heart"; "Confession"; "The Action, Design, and Subjects of Baptism": "Evidence of Pardon"; "The True Church"; "Christian Living." While there are a number of things omitted here that might well have been discussed under the general title, there are enough subjects discussed to give the reader a good, clear understanding of the fundamental things of Christianity. We are glad to note that the author has included some things in "First Principles" that are too often not thus classified. We should have been glad to have seen such topics as Prayer, the Holy Spirit, Sanctification, etc., included in the treatment, but perhaps the author felt that this might be stretching his subject too far. The author has many friends among the readers of the Christian-Evangelist who will be pleased to see this volume from his hand. The publishers have put out the work in good form.

Reuben, His Book. Published by Reuben, Centralia, Mo. (Pp. 297. Price $1.00.)

Behind the pseudonym under which the author writes is the personality of Morton H. Pemberton, whose photograph forms the frontispiece of his book. Mr. Pemberton attracted attention by some clever, humorous writings when he was a student at the University of Missouri where he edited the students' paper. From the desk he went to the platform and made quite a hit with the lecture entitled, "From Plow Shoe to Patent Leather." Since then he has branched out, wandered into fields far distant from his native state, and the sum total results in the way of lectures and writings appear in this book. It is well worth reading. Reuben is a real humorist. Like others of the tribe he has his sad days at home, but you see nothing of this in his published work. He has a unique way of putting things, and there is something good on nearly every page of his book. He does not run to the coarse side of things, and his knowledge of rural life, with the advantages of an education and travel, gives him much scope for hitting things. When it comes to questions of morality and religion he is always on the right side. On another page we give a few gleanings from his book, but have only sampled many good things.

Ready Money. By George H. Knox, President Personal Help Publishing Company, Founder Personal Help School of Achievement, Des Moines, Iowa. (Personal Help Pub. Co. Price $1.68 net.)

This volume has a taking name, but it is a still better book than its name indicates. It would indeed, be "ready money" in any young man's pocket to heed the advice and suggestions contained in this book. It is sane and healthy and good for young people of both sexes to read. It tells how to do things It has the air of a western hustler and yet mingled with it is a high view of life and an air of refinement. We should say its author was a successful man. His book has that atmosphere. It tells others how they may be successful. Here are some of the chapter titles: "Getting Started"; "Invincible Determination"; "Courage"; "Give the Boy a Chance"; "Doing Things When You Are Not Busy"; "Books"; "Only Half Doing Things"; "Being Businesslike"; "He Can—But Will He?"; "Right Thinking as a Business-Getter"; "Why People Fail at First"; "Making Up One's Mind"; "Doing a Big Business on a Small Margin"; "Nerve"; "Making the Most of It"; "Confidence"; "Failure"; "Stroking the Fur the Right Way in Business"; "Get Results"; "Self-Control," etc., etc. Each one of these short chapters is packed full of hard common sense. The book closes with some "Bits of Eloquence," which constitutes Part II, by some of the great masters of oratory. The book ought to have a good sale, for it deserves it.

The Daily Life. By Margaret E. Sangster. (American Tract Society. Price $1.25. Pp. 270.)

The character of Mrs. Sangster's writings is well known. She has a talent for wise counsel about the home life, and in this, her latest book, she throws glints of sunshine upon the commonplace, and does what she aimed to do, helps every woman to be the better for taking counsel with her.

Bible Study Popularized. By Rev. Frank T. Lee. (Chicago, Winona Pub. Co. Pp. 315. Price $1.25 net.)

This book is suggestive and helpful in indicating certain lines and methods of study, and giving illustrative examples. It is in no sense critical, and is all the better because it seeks to stimulate study rather than to point out spiritual lessons.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Newport, Feb. 27.—One by commendation two weeks ago; one by letter and one confession yesterday. Work moves slowly here. Expect to hold a series of meetings in the early summer.—T. F. Richardson, minister.

ENGLAND.

London, Feb. 21.—With startling power, the first wave of revival has broken on the West London tabernacle. The most fervent prayer-meetings have marked the later weeks. Sunday night, Feb. 19, I baptized five. After the services, the answer to an appeal for decisions was 26, over half adults; and our mission (protracted meeting) is still a month off. Albert hall, seating 10,000, is turning away thousands nightly from the Torrey-Alexander mission; yet our audiences are on the increase. —Mark Wayne Williams.

IDAHO.

Cora, Feb. 24.—We came here from Waverly, Wash., where we held our last meeting. Our meeting here is just one week old and we have had 21 additions to date. We go from here to Fairfield, for our next meeting.—Morton H. Wood.

ILLINOIS.

[By Telegraph.]

Rock Island, March 4.—Over two hundred added; eighty last five days. Closed.—Wm. J. Lockhart and Garmong, evangelists, O. W. Lawrence, minister.

Deland, Feb. 26.—Since our last report there have been 61 more added to the church at our regular services by baptism.—J. W. Lowman.

Vermont, March 3.—Seventy-four additions up to date, 31 the last four days.—R. A. Omer, evangelist, G. W. Ross, pastor.

Pekin, Feb. 27.—We are having a splendid meeting, great crowds and fine interest; 39 additions to date, nearly all being confessions. I gave a concert Saturday evening. When not singing in meetings I can be secured to give concerts for the benefit of churches or Christian Endeavor societies.—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist.

Saunemin.—Closed our meeting Sunday evening, Feb. 26. There were 19 accessions all by confession and baptism. This meeting was much hindered by the severe and stormy weather. A very pleasant reception was given us on Monday evening before leaving.—C. H. DeVoe and H. K. Shields, evangelists, Rochester, Ind.

Milford.—We began last night, March 1, with full house and good interest. Percy Baker, an old college mate, is pastor and is loved by all his flock. He knows how to prepare for a meeting.—C. H. DeVoe and H. K. Shields, evangelists, Rochester, Ind.

Rantoul, Feb. 28.—The meeting at Mt. Pulaski, where D. A. Lindsey preaches, closed last Sunday. The climax of that work was a meeting for men only, addressed by E. O. Sharpe. Never before won so many men in our meeting in that town. Our chorus of 30 men was a prominent feature. The meeting resulted in 13 being added to the church.—Guy B. Williamson and wife.

Chandlerville, March 5.—Brother Frazier and I are in a meeting here and we hope to have a good time, spiritually, among the brethren. I saw a notice in your good paper that I had been to Bloomington, Ill., helping Bro. J. H. Gilliland, for two weeks, in the fore part of the meeting and I thought it would be well to state that I had to leave at two weeks' end because of hoarseness, and have not recovered yet. I shall be glad to report to you the progress of our meeting here. Our meeting at Lafontaine fell through.—H. H. Saunders.

Eureka, Feb. 27.—Two additions at Bryant at regular services.—Lew D. Hill.

Pleasant Hill, Feb. 27.—W. Ringo, who is now preaching for the churches at Eldara and New Hartford, is well pleased with his work and the churches are pleased with him. In a recent meeting at Eldara in which I assisted 13 were added to the church.—O. C. Bolman.

Streator, Feb. 27.—Assisted by Edward McKinney, singer, I closed a three weeks' meeting last night at a mission point in the western part of the city; 37 came forward during the meeting. Including our January meeting (previously reported) held at the church there have been 70 additions. With one or two exceptions these will all be added to the record of the Streator church; 40 of the above are heads of families; 43 made the good confession. Several came from the denominations. We expect to begin a campaign soon toward the construction of a new house of worship.—Chas. D. Hougham, pastor,

Barry, March 1.—There have been seven additions recently, six as the result of a meeting in which the Baptist and Christian churches united. The meeting promoted a more friendly feeling between the two churches. The number of additions was small and most of them came to us. Cold weather and the fact that neither house could be kept warm hindered the success of the meeting. The congregation has recently lost by death one of its best members, Mrs. Mary A. Strubinger. She had been a member of this congregation for 52 years, having been converted in a meeting held here by D. P. Henderson. My first year's work with this congregation closes next Sunday. The congregation has called me for another year.—W. J. Burner.

Vermont, March 4.—The Vermont church closed a four weeks' meeting last night, being one of the best in its history. One restored, one by statement, two from P. M., 11 from M. E., 1 from Presbyterians, a total of 76, 68 of these being baptized. We were assisted by Evangelist R. A. Omer. Our people have nothing but praise for Brother Omer.—Geo. W. Ross.

Paris, March 3.—146 at close of second week in Scoville-Smith meetings. We continue.—Finis Idleman.

Chicago, Mar. 4.—Am home from a two weeks' meeting with the minister, W. W. Burks, Mason City, Iowa, in which there were 90 accessions, nearly all confessions. The meeting followed a union meeting held by Evangelist Sunday. About half of those who united with the Christian church, had signed cards in the union meeting. I have some open dates, can assist evangelists or pastors. Address me 6430 Parnell avenue, Chicago, Ill.—H. A. Easton, singer.

INDIANA.

New Albany.—Eight added at regular services in the last few weeks: six by confession and baptism, one by letter, one by statement. —Wm. A. Ward, Park church.

New Albany, March 3.—Great interest in S. M. Martin meeting at the Central church. Twelve additions last night; 63 to date. At no time have we been able to seat the people. Two thousand unable to get into the Grand Opera house Sunday afternoon. New Albany stirred by the gospel as never before.—B. F. Cato.

Bedford, Feb. 28.—We are developing great missionary interest and enthusiasm. Constant additions in our regular services; 17 added since Jan. 1 not previously reported, seven of them by letter. Every department prospers and all report surplus in treasury. Our C. W. B. M. makes constant gain, also Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor. Ladies' aid raised $747.50 last year; all departments, $5,500. In less than three years of present pastorate have paid $6,000 indebtedness in addition to current expenses. We owe now only $10,000. Brother Brooks begins a meeting with us in March.—E. Richard Edwards.

Peru, Feb. 28.—I am in a great meeting with home talent; 14 added the first week.—J. L. Thompson.

Shelbyville, Feb. 28.—Closed a meeting here last Lord's day with 53 added to the church: 30 confessions, 23 otherwise. Percy M. Kendall and his good wife conducted the singing. Bro. J. C. Burkhardt, of Connersville, did the preaching. The meeting was just the kind of meeting we wanted; it built us up spiritually. We have had about 450 additions to the church since we came into our new church building in March, 1902.—H. O. Pritchard, pastor.

Marmaduke, March 3.—Martin S. Pierce, formerly of Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., but now pastor of the Atlanta church, has just closed a ten days' meeting here with 24 additions, eleven the second night, one from the Methodists, one from the Baptists. $100 were raised in five minutes one night for the new college at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.—Wm. Burton, elder.

IOWA.

Marcus, Feb. 28.—Good audiences and two confessions. Bro. W. T. Hilton assisted me in a short meeting in January. Immediate results, three confessions. The church is prospering both financially and spiritually.—William Baier, minister.

Clarinda, March 4.—We are enjoying a good meeting at Clarinda. Have been running two weeks with 32 added. Bro. H. H. Hubbell, of Leon, is doing the preaching.—W. T. Fisher, pastor.

Cherokee, Feb. 28.—We had a glorious meeting here yesterday. Two young ladies confessed their Savior at the morning service. Three placed their membership with us in the evening. This makes six baptisms and three by statement since I began in January.—S. R. Reynolds.

KANSAS.

Wilsey, Feb. 27.—One addition yesterday by letter.—J. G. E.

Cunningham, Feb. 27.—Forty-five additions to date. Will continue a few days longer. —Atwood and Gardner.

Hanford.—I closed a meeting lasting three stormy weeks at Mt. Hope with three confessions and one from the Baptists. I began here Feb. 26.—D. Y. Donaldson.

McCune, March 3.—Forty-four additions to date, 26 in last five days. We continue.—W. C. Willey, pastor, David Lyon, evangelist.

Lyons, March 4.—I entered March 1 on my third year as pastor of this church. We have 220 additions in a meeting being held by Hamilton and Wilkinson.—Geo. E. Lyon.

Lyndon, Feb. 27.—Our meeting closed last night with 25 additions—17 by baptism, one from the M E.'s., two from the Dunkards, two by letter, three by statement. Brother Holloway was the preacher and Brother Shaffer my song leader.—J. F. Powers.

Junction City.—F. M. Branic began a revival with the opening of his pastorate here, February 1, but on account of the very bad weather the meeting closed after five days. Sunday, Feb. 26, gave us two additions at the evening service—one by letter and one confession. Our church is undergoing improvements, and a very suitable baptistry is being built. Prospects are bright for many confessions in the very near future.—R. L. Ready, clerk.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, March 3.—This is the third night of the meeting with the Third church—17 confessions.

Louisville.—I started work with the Parkland church under favorable conditions—15 having united during regular services in the month of February. Six came in on Feb. 26. Much interest is manifested.—G. W. Hunter.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans, Feb. 27.—Good audiences yesterday at Soniat avenue church. Two young ladies made the good confession, thus making four additions this month. L. C. Wilson preached at First church yesterday.—Marcellus R. Ely.

MINNESOTA.

Rochester, March 1.—The writer has just returned from Ladysmith, Wis., where he assisted H. F. Barstow in a two weeks' meeting, with 19 added. Good preparation had been made for the meetings, and in spite of opposition the meeting was a success from the very start. Ladysmith is one of Wisconsin's new towns and is to be one of her best. And better still, the church under the leadership of Brother Barstow is keeping step with the growth of the city. This was the writer's first trip into Wisconsin, but it was a most pleasant one.—G. Washington Wise.

Frazee, March 3.—Just closed a meeting here with 42 accessions. E. C. Nicholson, of Redwood Falls, did the preaching. A. J. Marshall is pastor here, but expects to leave this field soon and take charge of the Maplewood church at St. Louis, Mo. We go to Dallas, Tex., from here to assist in the Oak Cliff church.—A. S. Saxton and wife.

MISSOURI.

Bolivar, Feb. 28—Five added by letter Sunday. Brother Olds, one of our ministers, from Portland, Oregon, and wife were among the number.—J. H. Jones.

Fulton, Feb. 27.—I resigned work at Auxvasse yesterday. Raised $25 for foreign missions, and baptized eight persons. Begin at California, Mo., next Lord's day.—Herbert J. Corwine.

Savannah, Feb. 27.—One baptized last night, making five added since last report. Every department of church work moving nicely. We are nearing the end of our indebtedness and will close it up during March. We were in debt about $2,000 when I took charge last August.—D. W. Conner.

Barnard, March 2.—During the month of January I held a meeting with the church in Bolckow with five baptisms, one added by statement and two by letter. I preached there again Feb. 12, with one reclaimed, and again with Bro. M. F. Redlien, of Kansas City, I visited them and two were baptized and one added by statement. Brother Redlien preached on Lord's day morning and again on Monday night, when I buried the two young ladies—sisters—in baptism. The members at Bolckow are much encouraged and are hopeful for the future. We organized an Endeavor society there in January, and it is starting off in good shape, and much and lasting good is expected as a result of this good work among our young people.—J. F. Bickel.

St. Louis, March 6—First church. There were 19 additions yesterday, 11 being from the Chinese Sunday-school. The foreign offering was $220.—John L. Brandt.

Union Avenue. There were five additions and two confessions yesterday. The foreign offering was over $500 and we hope to become a living link.—James M. Philputt.

Compton Heights. Nine additions yesterday. The foreign offering not yet counted.—F. N. Calvin.

NEBRASKA.

Clay Center, March 3.—Our meeting here is 23 days old with 36 additions to date: 30 by confession and baptism, two reclaimed and four by commendation.—Simpson Ely.

Hastings, Feb. 25.—Evangelist B. B. Burton has been leading us in a meeting two weeks. By the middle of the first week our house, seating 360, proved to be too small to accommodate the people. Our M. E. friends offered us their house, which seats 800, and we accepted the offer. Except Sundays we hold our meetings there. From 400 to 600 are in attendance each night. To date there have been 12 confessions and three by statement. We shall continue for two weeks.—H. S. Gilliam.

Overton, March 3.—We just closed a meeting in which 14 were baptized (one from the Lutherans) and one added by statement. B. H. Coonradt and wife, of Edgar, were with us and preached and sang. The church indorsed them in a resolution expressing our appreciation of their earnest and consecrated efforts. Much good, not yet visible, was done. We close our first year here, having had 48 additions under our ministry, and go on to greater conquests.—O. L. Adams.

This increased the membership over 51 per cent. Mr. Bower, the pastor, is just the man for this new field. There is a great future. The Bible school, under the efficient leadership of George F. Rand, is the largest and certainly one of the best organized in the state. At the reception on Monday night, four more were added to the number that had already confessed Christ. At this reception I was made the happy recipient of a beautiful silver "loving cup" from the congregation.—H. H. Moninger, of Steubenville, O.

OHIO.

Findlay, Feb. 28.—During the month of February to the First church five were added by baptism at the regular services.—C. H. Bass, pastor.

Weston, March 2.—We have had six by baptism and 10 otherwise added since Jan. 1. One by baptism at Antioch lately. I began my seventh year here Jan. 1.—S. M. Cook.

Hopedale, Feb. 27.—Bro. Clarence Mitchell, of Lima, just closed what is considered the greatest revival in that community—45 additions; five confessions last night.—F. M. Wyrick, pastor.

Malvern, Feb. 27.—T. Alfred Fleming, pastor of the Miles avenue church, Cleveland, has just closed a three weeks' meeting with 31 additions—29 by primary obedience, one reclaimed and one from the church of God. Three of those baptized were from the Methodists and one from the Lutherans. The church has been greatly strengthened.—J. F. Ryan, pastor.

McConnelsville, Feb. 28.—We held a meeting through the month of January resulting in 20 baptisms and 10 other additions. The first week we divided the church of one hundred and eight into three sections and held simultaneous cottage prayer-meetings each evening which proved very helpful. This is a mission of the O. C. M. S. and one of the most promising in the state. In January we voted the last saloon out of this (Morgan) county. I have also just closed a three weeks' meeting at Lowell. Fifteen were baptized into Christ and eight were added by statement.—John Mullen.

Newark, March 3.—Meeting closed last night with 89 added—67 by confession and baptism. Grant W. Speer, of Hicksville, did the preaching. The large chorus and the membership were most faithful and supported the meetings loyally. The church is harmonious and outlook bright.—H. Newton Miller.

Uhrichsville, March 1.—Mr. and Mrs. John E. Pounds closed a meeting of three weeks and a half at Uhrichsville last night. Thirty-six were added, all but two by confession and baptism. The writer only arrived on the field as minister when the meeting was two weeks old. Had the church had usual ministerial leadership the results would have been much larger.—Charles Darsie.

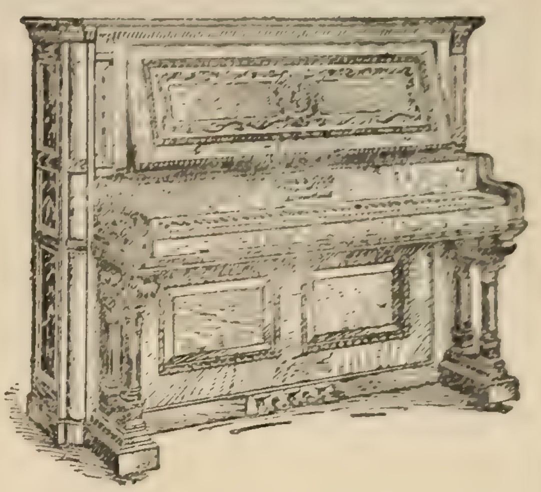
Meadville, Feb. 28.—Closed four months' work here yesterday with three additions, one by letter, two confessions, making 14 since coming here. Am preaching at two points outside of city with splendid hearing. Mrs. Trumbull and I could hold a short meeting or two very reasonably, to help out in expenses. We are hoping for great things for Meadville.—W. D. Trumbull, pastor.

WING PIANOS
Are Sold Direct From the Factory, and in No Other Way

You Save from $75 to $200

When you buy a Wing Piano, you buy at wholesale. You pay the actual cost of making it with only our wholesale profit added. When you buy a piano, as many still do—at retail—you pay the retail dealer's store rent and other expenses. You pay his profit and the commission or salary of the agents or salesmen he employs—all these on top of what the dealer himself has to pay to the manufacturer. The retail profit on a piano is from $75 to $200. Isn't this worth saving?



SENT ON TRIAL
Anywhere We Pay Freight No Money in Advance

We will place a Wing Piano in any home in the United States on trial, without asking for any advance payment or deposit. We pay the freight and all other charges in advance. There is nothing to be paid either before the piano is sent or when it is received. If the piano is not satisfactory after 20 days' trial in your home, we take it back entirely at our expense. You pay us nothing, and are under no more obligation to keep the piano than if you were examining it at our factory. There can be absolutely no risk or expense to you.

Do not imagine that it is impossible for us to do as we say. Our system is so perfect that we can without any trouble deliver a piano in the smallest town in any part of the United States just as easily as we can in New York City, and with absolutely no trouble or annoyance to you, and without anything being paid in advance or on arrival either for freight or any other expense. We take old pianos and organs in exchange. A guarantee for 12 years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material is given with every Wing Piano.

Small, Easy Monthly Payments

In 37 years over 40,000 Wing Pianos have been manufactured and sold. They are recommended by seven governors of States, by musical colleges and schools, by prominent orchestra leaders, music teachers and musicians. Thousands of these pianos are in your own State, some of them undoubtedly in your very neighborhood. Our catalogue contains names and addresses.

Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither, Banjo—The tones of any or all of these instruments may be reproduced perfectly by any ordinary player on the piano by means of our Instrumental Attachment. This improvement is patented by us and cannot be had in any other piano. WING ORGANS are made with the same care and sold in the same way as Wing Pianos. Separate organ catalogue sent on request.

You Need This Book
If You Intend to Buy a Piano—No Matter What Make

It is absolutely the only book of its kind ever published. It contains 156 large pages and hundreds of illustrations, all devoted to piano construction. HEALING OF THE MAN BORN BLIND.—John 9:1-11.

Memory Verses, 10, 11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I am the light of the world.—John 9:5.

Since the time of the last lesson, Jesus has probably returned to Galilee and, after spending a short time there, bade his last farewell to that district which was the scene of his early life and of the greater part of his ministry, and "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem" because "the days were well nigh come that he should be received up" (Luke 9:51). This final departure from Galilee introduces the period generally called the Perean ministry, though only a part of the period of several months was actually spent across Jordan in Perea. Twice in this period did Jesus enter or approach Jerusalem before the final entrance at the beginning of passion week. The first of these was on the occasion of the Feast of Dedication (John 10:22) and the other was the return to Bethany to raise Lazarus from the dead (John 11:1). The incident in the present lesson apparently occurred in Jerusalem shortly before the Feast of Dedication. Between these visits to Jerusalem, narrated only by John, occurred extended journeys and teachings reported at greatest length by Luke.

The question which the blind man suggested to the minds of the disciples, "Who did sin, this man or his parents?" was in keeping with the very simple philosophy of the earlier Hebrew sages. The necessary connection between virtue and happiness was the corner stone of their theory of life. Every sin must find its punishment and every affliction must be a punishment for sin. This was the doctrine of Job's three friends—a doctrine which he himself repudiated, as inapplicable to his case. The Proverbs and the Psalms are full of the teaching that the good man will always be blessed while the wicked man brings down trouble on his own head and upon his children. The sages are always at pains to explain that the apparent misfortunes of the righteous and the apparent happiness of the wicked are only transitory and not real.

But even with this explanation, this philosophy of life was too simple to be wholly satisfactory so long as the blessedness, which was the prize of virtue, was conceived of in material and financial terms. There are too many negative instances, where sin is not punished by physical and financial ruin and where these calamities do light on the righteous. A deeper and more spiritual view of the nature of blessedness restores the connection between blessedness and virtue. But the disciples were following the old impulse to think of every material ill as a punishment for sin. Hence their question. The answer shows the inadequacy of their view.

"I am the light of the world." The man whose blind eyes were opened would certainly be able to feel the force of this statement. Jesus was the light of his world. And to how many millions of others has he been the light in an even larger and deeper sense. Those whose eyes are still blind, may deny it. We know because we have seen.

The splendid assurance of this man touching the facts of his own experience is worthy of imitation. "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." Here was a fact not to be explained away. No criticism of Jesus could shake his faith. His confidence did not depend upon the decision upon any of the points that the rabbis and scribes might dispute about touching Jesus. The only fact that his faith needed was the fact which nobody denied or could deny—that Jesus had opened his eyes.

The facts of Christian experience have been perverted and the theory of it abused in times past, and perhaps even now. But it remains true that the soul's experience of God through Christ is a real experience which gives to the faith of the old Christian an increasing assurance of the reality of God and the value of spiritual things.

POWER OF SECRET HOLINESS.

"Take heed that you do not your righteousness of men, to be seen of them: lest ye have no reward with our Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 6:1. Read the first eighteen verses of this chapter).

In the part of the Sermon on the Mount indicated above, Jesus sets forth one of the most vital principles of his kingdom, namely: it is the motive of the heart that decides the moral quality of the action. Doing righteousness is the thing most acceptable to God, if done in the proper spirit; but if the motive be to be seen of men, the doer receives no reward from our Father who is in heaven. The motive has been wrong and that vitiates the action. This principle may be applied to everything we say and do. Jesus gives a few practical illustrations.

Doing Alms, or as we would say, giving alms. Almsgiving, in the time of our Lord, when there were no benevolent institutions for looking after the poor and the needy, except the church, was necessarily more widely practiced than now, though the time has not yet come when it can be dispensed with entirely. The Pharisees loved to advertise their almsgiving by the sound of a trumpet in order that "they may have glory of men." The common people honored benevolence, even then. The Pharisees, with a short-sightedness which is always characteristic of worldliness, were seeking only the praise of men, instead of the favor of God. Jesus tells us that they "have received their reward," that is, they receive the praise of men, but not the praise of God. Instead of that, Jesus tells his disciples that their benevolent deeds should be done in secret, purely for the good of those helped, and for the glory of God. Then the Father, who knows all our secret acts, will give recompense.

About Praying. The hypocrites of Christ's day loved to be spectacular in their devotions. They were fond of standing and praying in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, "that they may be seen of men." They, too, have received their reward. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door, pray to thy father, who is in secret, and thy father who seeth in secret, shall recompense." This is not said against public prayer, but against praying to the public, and for the public praise. The real test of prayer is in secret. The man who cannot and does not pray in his inner chamber has no business to pray in public. It is a blessed thing in this pushing, rushing age that we can shut the door of our eyes, and exclude the whole world, and be alone with God. It is this kind of prayer that God loves to recompense.

The Model Prayer. Study each petition in this wonderful prayer. "Our Father"—the filial spirit. "Hallowed by Thy Name"—the reverential spirit. "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done as in heaven so on earth"—the missionary spirit. "And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors"—the forgiving spirit. "And bring us not into temptation"—the cautious spirit.

Concerning Fasting. The hypocrites of Christ's day thought they had to put on sad countenances and disfigure their faces that they might advertise their fasting to men. Jesus rebukes that practice, and teaches the contrary spirit, that of appearing as usual unto men, and letting our action be in reference to God alone. If there are times in our lives when we feel like abstaining from food the better to bring our body in subjection to the spirit, this is not a matter for the public, but a matter between us and our God.

It is clear, then, from this lesson that Jesus despises all mere outward pretence, or show, or display of one's virtues, or ostentation, or pretended acts of worship springing from false motives. The lesson is one that requires the deepest heart-searching.

Prayer. Oh, Lord, since Thou hast taught us how to pray, and how to live so as to meet with the approval of our heavenly Father, wilt Thou cleanse the motives of our hearts to the end that all our acts of devotion and all our deeds of benevolence may proceed from love to Thee and to our fellowmen, and from a sincere desire to glorify Thy name, and to help those who are in need. And this we ask for Thy name's sake. Amen.

GLORIFYING GOD IN OUR DAILY WORK.

—Matt. 5:13-16; Rom. 12:11.

For the Leader.

We may be in the habit of associating our failures to live up to the divine will concerning us with our own interests, but we should think that not only we are affected, but God who brought us into being and who gave us the plan of life by which we have professed to work. The Creator is associated with all his creatures. If they go wrong, he fails to that extent of universal glory. Not that blame attaches to him for our failures, but, as a consequence that cannot be avoided, he does not have the glory of saving all. And if I alone am to blame for my failure in the gospel life, and if by my failure God is not glorified as fully as he might have been had I lived as I should, there is all the more reason why I should strive to so live that such will not be the case. Glorifying God in our lives opens up this and other questions for us to-night.

For the Members.

1. To glorify God in our lives is to live as he has made us to live. It is to live the normal life. It is to be a Christian. It is to follow Jesus our Savior. Why should anyone of the whole race, after finding this out, ever want to live any other life? That is the question. Human depravity is a deep question. It may be that the failure to live the life in the case of most men is due to an inadequate understanding of the life as it is in Christ Jesus.

2. If ignorance of the life that God would have us live is at the root of most sinful living, then what a responsibility rests upon those who know the truth! There is no greater work than that of sending or taking the word of life to the lost sons of men. How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of great joy! And we must come to this view, that most men who sin do so because they do not understand fully the beauties of the Christian life, that they do not know, or knowing somewhat, do not fully appreciate all it means. Herein is the church's burden and her opportunity.

3. The only hope for the church is in her realization of the purpose for which she was organized. If an individual loses his life in ignorance of his mission and purpose in the world, how much more the aggregation of individuals known as the church. Is a church no more than a club, or some kind of social organization? Is it not set apart to stand for the faith once for all delivered to the saints? Has it any reason to give why it should not be disbanded, if it takes no thought of its one purpose in the world? None whatever. God should be glorified by his church. Every local congregation is a lighted lamp upon a table. If it does not shine, it is bringing reproach upon the cause of righteousness throughout the world.

4. There is in some quarters a fear of being thought followers of Christ. Sometimes one hears: "Now it is not because I am too religious that I do not think that such a thing is right, but I just think it best to abstain from reasonable grounds." This seems to me wonderfully like denying the Lord. It is, at best, a fear that will not own his cause. What shall we say of it? We will condemn it. Let this denial of the motives of the righteous life have its day. While we are to pray for deliverance from the empty testimonial that proclaims aloud a love and a life that is not backed up by good works, let us make the works good, and then let us tell it out, let the light shine far over the land. One has no more right to become a miser with God's glory than he has with his money.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Do I begin every day as though it were Christ's and close it as though the record of its doings went at once to him?

A Weak Point in Our Teaching.

Yes, I verily believe there is a weak point, not to say anything more severe, in the almost universally accepted theory of the "Disciples of Christ" on the subject of the mission of the Holy Spirit, as a gift to individual Christians.

May it not be shown that the wise men of this reformation, in its early days, being uninspired men, found only part of the truth that had been, for long ages, buried under the rubbish of priestcraft and mysticism? In their discovery of truth as regards the teaching of God's word, that the sinner is not converted by any abstract operation of the Holy Spirit, have they not failed to comprehend him, as promised to obedient believers? I hear a chorus of voices from the rabbis crying, "No, no! We have always taught and emphasized the words of Peter, on the day of Pentecost: 'Repent and be baptized, every one of you, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.' "

But how many of all who come into church relationship know the meaning of this "gift of the Holy Spirit," or how to appropriate to themselves the new strength and power implied in the promise? Inspiration said, "The promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

Jesus taught his disciples to ask for the Holy Spirit. He taught them of the Father's willingness to give good things to his children, even greater willingness than that of earthly parents to give good things to their children, and, by one of the evangelists, these good things are summed up in the "giving of the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

Have the members of our churches, since the days of the Campbells, Stone and others like them, been asking and receiving this book, as the power to be appropriated by them, and used according to the promise of Jesus in meeting the responsibilities left when he went away?

Jesus knew well the magnitude of the work left in the hands of a few humble representatives of a rejected leader, then; is he less cognizant of the magnitude of present-day needs? He said to his disciples, "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the Comforter will not come, but if I go I will send him unto you. I will not leave you orphans."

Through this mighty advocate, speaking and working through the disciples, was to come the power by which Jesus Christ would build his church. This advocate was to be the instructor and defender of that church through the ages, and by his presence and power were the nations of the world to be gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd.

There was one promise of the Father given through the prophet Joel, one Comforter or Advocate—the Savior's reiteration of the same promise. Not a hint by even Joel or Jesus of the fine subdivision of the promise into "the baptism of the spirit," the "gift of the spirit," or the "gifts of the spirit."

The blessed Paraclete was to be to the disciples one mighty Person, through whom all victories were to be gained by all disciples, in all time, until the whole world was conquered for the crucified but risen Lord.

Were not his manifestations to be in all ways and at all times, according to the necessities of the situation the times or the circumstances? (See 1 Cor. 12.) When and where his power to speak to all the tribes of earth in their own tongues was needed, then and there this was the manifestation; when and where miraculous healing power would best convince, then and there the promised advocate was so manifested; and so on through all his miraculous manifestations which were for the purpose of convincing and "convicting the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment." Not the little "world" represented in Jerusalem on that memorable day was in the Savior's mind, but the whole needy race of mankind, of which these were but the representatives. When he is come he shall be so manifested through you that my persecutors and murderers shall be convicted of their awful sin, and, farther on, when the miraculous may have served its purpose, then "the more excellent way" must be the one lasting, convincing manifestation to the world (1 Cor. 12:27-31; 13:1-13).

"When he is come, he shall abide forever" (John 14:15 18)—abide in the hearts of all the children who shall be born of God, through all time. To every child he will be a well of water springing up into everlasting life, and so manifesting himself through each one, and so helping each one, that the great commission shall be carried out by their united efforts.

If, in the carrying of the truths of the gospel to some benighted land, gifts of healing or other miraculous manifestations shall best enable the missionary to conquer prejudice and superstition, who dare limit the power of the Holy Spirit; without his presence, who dare go to the heathen world? Yea, and who shall be able without him to silence the many cavilers of to-day? And if the almost miraculous bringing together of divided Christendom, which is to convince the world of the truth of Christ's claims, is to be accomplished, this also will be a victory gained by manifestations of this same one Holy Spirit. By him and by his presence only were or are the "greater works" to be done (John 14:12), for the promise of Jesus puts the Holy Spirit in the very place to the disciples that was to be left vacant when he left them (John 14:18).

This Holy Spirit, always present and never limited, shall do, through the faithful ones, the spiritually miraculous. Mighty is his power!

Jesus our Advocate with the Father in heaven, the Holy Spirit our Comforter, our Advocate, on earth; by these, shall we not go forth expecting victory in the face of the combined strength of all opposing forces?

The Spring Feeling.

I can feel the spring a-coming,
  I can feel it in my bones,
I can see it in the sunshine,
  I can hear it in the tones
Of the changing winds a-blowing
  From the land of summer days,
Where the balmy breezes soften
  Winter's raw and raucous ways.

There is piled up snow a-plenty
  In the city yet awhile,
But it's melting in the presence,
  Of the sun's returning smile;
The trickling streams of water
  That are running from the snow
Are the tears that winter's shedding
  'Cause he knows he has to go.

The crocus with its blooming
  Isn't very far along,
And the birds have hardly started
  Tuning up their welkin song;
But they're getting good and ready,
  And although they may be shy
At plunging into springtime,
  They will get there by and by.

The butterflies ain't butting
  Much into these early days,
And the busy bee ain't busy
  In his honey-making ways,
But they will be, don't you worry,
  For the spring will soon be here
With its waking of the roses
  And the rapture of the year.

There may be another blizzard,
  For the blizzard is a thing
That's very apt to happen
  As a harbinger of spring.
But though the blizzard blizzes
  And the earth is clad in white,
We are firm in our conviction
  That the springtime is in sight.

The boating on the river
  Is perhaps not extra fine,
And the air is rather chilly
  On the open trolley line;
There isn't much surf bathing
  And the summer girl's not here,
But the air is full of rumors
  That the spring is drawing near.

The coal man still is active,
  And the furnace still is on.
There's a shiver in the breaking
  Of the season's early dawn;
An overcoat is useful,
  And the heavy underwear
Reminds us of the winter,
  But the spring is in the air.

I can feel it coming nearer,
  I can smell the glad perfume
Of a new world budding slowly
  Till it blazons into bloom.
    Gee whiz,
    What a relief spring is!

CHAPTER XXIII.

CUPID'S VICTORY.

"That's a pleasant little nook you have discovered!"

"Yes, it is a frequent resort of mine. But I—I didn't think anyone would find me here."

"Perhaps I shouldn't have come this way. However, having intruded upon private grounds, all I can do is to offer an apology."

"Oh, don't apologize. You are welcome, I'm sure."

"Thank you. I wonder if the intrusion, the apology and the welcome might be expanded sufficiently to allow of my sharing a bit of that delightful spot. This is my 'Blue Monday,' and I think that bower would lend it a different hue."

"Certainly. I am sure there is room enough for two. But"—glancing at her breakfast jacket—"you will please excuse my appearance."

The time and place were both ideal. It was the third of June, about 9 A. M. After kissing her father good-by, Alma had given the servants their usual daily instructions, read the fashion page of the morning paper, scanned a new book, and then sought an hour's self-communion under her favorite weeping willow in the lower, rear corner of the great yard. More than an acre of luxurious trees and shrubbery stretched between her and the street, and she felt perfectly secure from public view. Surrounded by flowers and singing birds, she reclined upon a green mound—a laughing brook at her feet—reading an occasional verse in a book that lay propped open, in the fork of a tiny tree at her side, and at the same time permitting her memory to gather up the strange, sacred events of the past few years.

The day before, as Mr. Baxendale entered the pulpit, he had glanced at the Randolph pew and received the mental impression that one of its occupants was unusually attractive. A great theme throbbed in his heart, but, somehow, it got mixed up with thoughts of Alma, and in his own estimation the sermon was a complete failure. Throughout the afternoon and evening he reproached himself for having permitted "a woman's loveliness" to intrude upon the solemnity and importance of divine worship.

Unable to apply himself at his desk, Monday morning, he had started for a long walk. Finding himself in the act of passing in front of the Randolph mansion, he turned into a small street, leading around back of the place, thinking to pass, unobserved, out into the suburbs and on to a nearby glen.

But our little plans are frequently changed, sometimes in a moment, and by circumstances that never enter into our calculations.

The unexpected sight of Alma stirred the preacher's love for her into a sudden, daring determination, and the contemplated stroll was immediately forgotten.

Crossing the low stone fence and sitting down, rather awkwardly, upon a tuft of grass against the tree, he noticed the open book and said: "I fear I am disturbing you—I see you have been reading."

"I do believe," he added, reaching for the book, "that this is one of the prizes I gave you girls many years ago!"

"Yes," was the timid reply, "don't you think I have kept it nice and clean?"

"Lovely! Do you read it much or did you accidentally pick it up this morning?" he eagerly asked.

"Oh, yes. I have read it through several times. I am quite fond of Longfellow."

As she answered this surprising question, which betrayed an interest deeper than that of an ordinary friend, there was an indefinable something in her expression and voice that thrilled and impelled her lover.

Sliding down close beside her and taking both her hands in his, he said, his voice hoarse with excitement, "Alma, I must tell you. I—I love you to distraction."

"Oh, Mr. Baxendale!"

She felt that she ought to withdraw from his tight grasp and run away. But something besides her pastor's strong hands held her and she could not move. She sat perfectly still and permitted him to hold her hands—her heart fluttering, her cheeks flushed, and a tiny tear glistening in each eye.

Undeterred by her exclamation, the conquered man continued: "I have loved you for years—loved you devotedly. But I thought you belonged to another. I found out that you did not. Then I thought that you did not—could not—care for me. But something now tells me that perhaps I was wrong. Alma, tell me. Can you—do you love me? Could you be my wife?"

He had leaned forward until his face almost touched hers—his breath hot, his lips trembling, and a pallor in his cheeks.

Glancing shyly up into his face, through a flood of tears, she whispered: "Yes, I will. I have loved you, too, oh, so long!"

Whereupon he, still holding her hands, drew her gently to him and kissed her lips again and again.

Struggling from him, she said, playfully, "You terrible, terrible man!" and ran to the house. Going straight to her own room, she sank into the first chair, where for fully an hour she meditated upon the sudden transformation of her prospects, and laughed and cried alternately—the happiest woman in Providence!

"Well!" exclaimed Mr. Baxendale, after watching the retreating figure until it disappeared around the nearby grape arbor. He then picked up the book, which had fallen into the little stream, shook the water from its crumpled pages, pressed it to his lips, almost fell over the fence, and walked rapidly into the business part of the city.

When Mr. Randolph came home that evening, Alma threw herself into his arms, at the door, and said: "Oh, father! Something awful happened this morning!"

"Yes, my darling, I know all about it," he answered, with a smile and a kiss.

"How did you find out—who told you?" she asked, excitedly.

"Mr. Baxendale came to my office between ten and eleven o'clock and told me what he had done."

"Oh, father!"

"He, likewise, told me that he desires to be married on the 31st of July, so that you can accompany him on his vacation."

"Father! And did you give consent?"

"Yes, or rather I told him that your decision should be mine. I specified, though, that I wanted you to live here—when I go to join mother you will be my only heir, anyway."

"Father, dear, you precious darling! And what did he say? Did he consent to live with us?"

"Yes," but before the sentence was completed, Mr. Baxendale, coming in unobserved, stood by the door.

"I am an unbidden guest again, but I felt that I must come back and take tea this evening," he stammered — embarrassed almost beyond self-control.

"You are more than welcome," cheerfully responded Mr. Randolph. Then, with his arm still around his daughter's waist, he took the preacher by the hand and, drawing them close together, he said: "My children, you have my consent and prayers. May God bless you."

After bestowing the benediction, he kissed the lovers affectionately and left them alone in the hallway.

* * * * * *

It was an early morning marriage. A host of friends had gathered in the old church to witness the consummation of the strangest chapter in its eventful history. Alma, leaning upon her father's arm, passed down the left aisle and met Mr. Baxendale and his assistant between the front pew and the pulpit; where, under a fragrant arch, Warren Williams pronounced the ceremony which put an end to the bachelorhood of his classmate and lifelong friend.

At the train gate Mr. Randolph kissed his daughter, then turned to her husband and said, with a twinkle in his eye, "Mr. Baxendale, there is to be a board meeting this evening. Do you think it safe for you to be away?"

(THE END.)

"Raffles."

There is such a thing as being too hospitable to literary suggestions. Examples of it appear regularly in the cases of boys whom yellow-covered stories fire with yearnings to hunt Indians or to be pirates. The stuff these urchins read bears some such relation to literature as wood alcohol does to honest spirits. The odd thing about the latest case of this sort is that the hero of it got his mental stimulation from literature of a much higher grade. "Raffles" appears to have been the guiding star of Christopher Sandrock, whose recent capture by the New York police was the news sensation of a day. Christopher had been so active in evil doing, and had stopped and robbed so many persons with the aid of two large pistols, that the neighbors grew uneasy, and the World offered a reward of a thousand dollars for his capture. It turns out that Christopher has been robbing people chiefly for fun. He is still a boy, but a bright one. He claims to be a Socialist, though the organized Socialists of the town disown him. He has admitted that the character of Raffles as ably set forth on the stage enlisted his sympathies, and that the Raffles exploits seemed to him easy to duplicate. So he did duplicate them, and successfully.—Harper's Weekly.

Horrible Russian Prisons.

A tale of Russian prison cruelty is told in Harper's Magazine for March by Dr. Emile Joseph Dillon, who writes at first hand of Monastery Prisons in Russia. In the Solovetsk monastery men have been confined as long as sixty-three years. Some have gone mad; others, released after years of confinement in damp dungeons, have emerged as physical wrecks, unfit for living at all. In former years these dungeons were "stone sacks," which consisted of iron cages enclosed in stone towers, into which "heretics" were dropped like rats, and in which they could neither stand up nor lie down. There they sat in an upright posture until they miserably perished. The Solovetsk prison was abolished by Kuropatkin ten or twelve years ago, but the Suzdal monastery prison still exists. Confined there now is Nastassia Kuzminichna Shoovina, or Sister Mary, as she was called in her own convent, and her tragical story is told by Dr. Dillon.

All a Matter of Color.

It will not do to be too credulous in matters of science, even after the wireless telegraph. We may well have doubts, for instance, of the scientific basis of the discovery, credited to an English scientist, Dr. S. Stensen Hooker, that the N-rays differ in color according to the temperament of the individual from whom they emanate. Thus, a passionate character is indicated by deep red, a good by pink, and an ambitious by orange, while deep blue pertains to the deep thinker, yellow to lovers of art, light green to a progressive mind, and dark green to those physically and mentally ill. If this is true, our phrases about the green-eyed monster jealousy and having the "blues" will lose their old meaning. Philosophers, according to this idea, always have the blues.—Leslie's Weekly.

The Cow From a Child's Standpoint.

Here is a little girl's composition on the cow, as it appeared in Hartford Times: A cow is an animal with four legs on the under side. The tail is longer than the legs but it is not used to stand on. The cow kills flies with her tail. A cow has big ears that wiggle on hinges; so does the tail. A cow is bigger than a calf, but not as big as an elephant. She is made so small that she can go into the barn when nobody is looking. Some cows are black and some hook. A dog was hooked once. She tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat. Black cows give white milk, so do other cows. Milkmen sell milk to buy their little girls dresses, which they put water in and chalk. Cows chew cuds and each cow finds its own chew. This is all there is about cows.

Some Pickings from "Reuben—his Book."

The idea of a man mixing up chemistry who don't know the best money can only be got by mixing up gold and silver at 16 to 1. Why, he is jist as apt to mix up 16 parts oxygen and 1 part hydrogen when he goes to manufacture water. Anybody knows he ain't safe to fix up chemistry for our boys. I am one of those men who believes that any man who gets a salary from the state ought to believe like the majority. This is the only way to please the majority.

"Now, boss, I don't see what you want to interview me for on these subjects. I know you got some idea in doing this, but I tell you I ain't got no money, and I know when a newspaper man interviews you he wants something out of you, sooner or later. I don't care though what you say about me. I like to see my picture and my name in the paper, so you can go ahead and put it in, but don't tell anybody I wanted it in there."

I like fraternity men but I don't like fraternities—it is like loving the sinner but hating the sin. If a man is a good student in the fraternity, he would be a better one out of it. The ideal fraternity man is one who doesn't pretend to study, but dedicates himself to society. Appear like you are living easy and keep in touch with the girls. To be an up-to-date frat man you must be a social swimmer. You must please the ladies and if you do this, you won't have time to do anything else. Girls like attention and if you want to be popular with them, you must anticipate their wants and pleasures. Girls are like kittens, they like to have attention and to be stroked gently, and you must be sure you stroke the fur the right way and in a manner that the fire won't fly.

The problem of the future is to attach electricity to every man's business so that he needs only press the button. I have thought of this great question as I lay in bed of mornings down on the farm. I would have electricity all over the place, and the head of my bed would be my switchboard. In the morning then when the birds sing and the roosters crow I would press the button that would start the kitchen fire. Then I would press a button that would wake up my wife, and raise her gently out of bed. Then the little button that would hush the baby. Another that would electrocute a chicken and blow his feathers off. Then a button that would pour ginger on the hired man. Another that would milk the cows and start the plows. Then for the button that would bring on the automobile. When we get these things the farmer will be satisfied to stay in the country, and not till then.

The problem of the future in transportation is to get there on railroad time without being smashed up short of your destination. What we need is double tracks all over the nation and Uncle Sam the engineer and conductor. We won't let individuals and corporations carry our letters and papers, but we turn our bodies over to railroad companies and tell them to crack loose, smash us up, and make as much money out of us as they can. It's a beautiful theory to reserve the right to regulate railroads, but it is a hard proposition when they have enough lawmakers padded with passes and boodle to prevent it.

Now he goes cahoot with the man of the biggest scheme. To some he gives the paternal smile and to others he says, "I don't know you." Some day Uncle Sam will join the church and shake his companions on the outside. He will then wear his own breeches and keep other people's hands out of his pockets.

Expositions are man's a, b, c's—his letters—and they are God's punctuation marks. Expositions are the accumulated thought of the ages on wheels. Men think and men pray, and God hears and drops the key to him who can best unlock his law.

If you want to see progress on wheels go into the Transportation building. Originally when man wanted to go he walked, and when he struck stream he swam. When he struck an ocean he stayed at home, and he was just as happy as the man on the steamer and the man in the Pullman. The man who walks is healthy, and the man who rides is lazy, and generally sick. God made legs and man made wheels.

All men are brothers—when you read about it. But when you bump up against them, some are Chinese, some Japanese, some Hindos, some Hoodoos, some Igorrotes—and some negroes. Grandpa Adam wouldn't know his children. Are all men brothers? Yes; but you don't want to hug them. We believe in equal rights—that is to say, we will drink the same kind of water, but not out of the same jug. We will all sleep at night-time, but not in the same bed. Coons can come to the same show, but they must get up high where the air rises. We worship the same God but we want the seats separated. Humanity is one from God's point of view, but man sees himself only and those like him. All others are descendants of Ham. Every animal thinks he is it. The hog thinks that man was made to feed him corn. The goose thinks that woman was made to drive him to grass. The sheep thinks that man shears him to keep him cool. Man thinks that all animals were made to eat. Half the people think the others were made to bring them wood and water. There are two main classes of people in the world, white folks and other folks. If you are white and take a bath regularly you belong to the superior class. If you are shady, tan, or black, you belong below. But all are parts of the stupendous whole. God needs some to grease the wheels, and some to make the grease. Some to push and some to pull, some to ride and some to guide. The higher the seat the less the space—the room is all below. That race is higher whose knowledge is greatest, whose principles of right and justice are best, and whose love is nearest God's.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Advance Society.

I have a whole lot of things to tell you this week that ought to interest you, whether you are a boy with a top or a girl with the thread tangled in the doll-dress she is making, or a man or woman with spectacles and experience. If the starting off of this page doesn't seem fun, skip over to the middle or under the picture, or to some other spot, for it isn't all the same stuff, whatever objection you may find. Do you know where Aurora, Mo., is? A book has recently been published there. I haven't seen the book, but I want to tell you one thing that it says in the preface. Now listen, for I think it's a very peculiar thing, indeed. This is what the author of that book says: "I have written this book for the masses and not for the classes, using the simplest language and sometimes ungrammatical expressions such as are common among the masses, that I may be more fully understood by them." Now, what do you think of that? Making a book ungrammatical so we can understand it! Poor old Missouri! Don't you think it a queer way to educate people—taking bad English to them? Let us rejoice that we belong to the Advance Society which requires us to read five pages of history and thirty lines of poetry each week, a verse in the Bible a day, memorize weekly a good quotation (not an ungrammatical insult to our intellects) and record in our notebook our progress. And if we don't belong to the Av. S., let's hurry up and do so before these bad English books get us and eat us up! A special reduction is made of that Aurora book to preachers, of 50 cents. Now what have the preachers been doing to warrant such a rebate? Has their English so run down at the heels that ungrammatical works appeal to them? I don't believe it. Young people and old, as we respect ourselves, let us seek the best books and the best English; if people can't understand us when we say "I saw," and "I did it," are we to say, "I seen," and "I done"?

Speaking of the Advance Society, the time has come to report the names of the two who have sent in the best four quarterly reports. The first prize, a copy of "Adnah," goes to W. S. Whitacre, Mt. Vernon, Ill. (I don't know whether his name is Willie or Sam), and the second prize, "The Red Box Clew," goes to Evelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo. It would perhaps be unsatisfactory to compliment the other reports, as they didn't get a prize; and yet I cannot help saying that many of them were shown with pride to my friends. These reports show what the Av. S. is really accomplishing—how it spurs us to a higher mental life, and holds us to a continuous effort. Remember that these two same prizes are again offered for the four best quarterly reports received before Feb. 11, 1906, and everybody has a chance to begin right now, and win one of the prizes. But after all, it matters little who wins and who doesn't; the good of it is in the reading, and that good, one and all may obtain, prize or no prize. I wish you could all see the reports that won this time. W. S. Whitacre's are bound together with pink ribbon which had nothing to do with gaining first honor, of course; and one of his quotations is from Me, and reads, "No one has done the best he can for himself, till he has done all he can for others." Well, that's a pretty good sentiment, but he didn't get the prize because he quoted from J. B. E., so don't think it! Both of these reports give in detail each day's work, and all is arranged with the greatest neatness. Evelyn Hord quotes from Mrs. Browning, and there is a good deal in this:

"Dear work! art thou the curse of God?
What must his blessing be!"

Such a sentiment leads us naturally to speak of our missionary. Here is her picture—and here is a letter from her: "We arrived at Yokohama, Japan, Sunday morning. We attended services at Union church and in the afternoon a Baptist mission school. At the United States naval hospital we held one of the most precious services I ever attended. Our steamer was anchored some distance out in the bay, so we had to go ashore in a little steam launch that rolled considerably. We became quite used to climbing the steps on the side of the ship. We went to Tokio, Japan's capital, by train, and saw many rice fields, growing lotus, pear trees with arbors under the limbs to support them, like grape arbors, and women working in the fields. The Japanese are a very happy people, extremely obliging, polite and neat. It seemed queer to us to see the shoes on the verandas of their odd houses. The winding roads make numerous turns, the yards all have pretty artificially arranged flowers and shrubs. Altogether Japan is a lovely little country, and as brave and plucky as can be, but the people lack one thing, the most important of all—Jesus. . . . This is Sunday evening at the South Chih li mission, Tai-ming Fu, North China. I have received your letter, six weeks after you sent it. You cannot imagine how my heart is touched to read about the dear Advance Society's interest in me. I appreciate it more than words can tell. From time to time 'Their Missionary' will be glad to send them some word. The gift of $10.50, Mexican, is just received, and I hasten to reply. I do praise the Lord and thank the dear members of the Av. S. for their loving remembrance. I shall pray that many of the dear ones now helping in this work may themselves be led into active service for the Master, and know the joy of telling the glad story to those who never heard it before. I hope I may sometimes hear from those really interested. I am your friend in his glad service,

"DRUSIE R. MALOTT."

Since writing the above, Drusie has no doubt received the $10.35 of Chinese money (that is "Mexican") which I have sent her additional, this week I am sending her another $10; which will make in all $32 of Chinese money the Advance Society has forwarded for the cause of missions in China. As I have explained, there is no board behind Drusie; she has no one to call upon, and we should all the more feel the responsibility. But no one must for a moment dream that in saying this, I reflect on boards. What could we do without them? Indeed, I respect every splinter of ours, and work as I can to help them support our missionaries. And of course a missionary working under a board shows just as much faith and heroism and self-sacrifice as one who goes forth alone. Let us do everything in our power for missionary boards, for as you know it is not doing anything for the board except enabling it to send out more missionaries. But Drusie is our missionary, and while we help others, we, as the Av. S., should do what we can to assist this young girl who has no one else to whom she can look.

The other day Ral Shaver and his wife gave me $5 to do just what I pleased with. I want to tell you about it, and show you how much good $5 can do. As you may imagine, I was perfectly stunned at first from having so much money in the house with the privilege of using it as I pleased. It took mighty little calculation to estimate that I could buy 300 bananas (they are always 20 cents a dozen in Plattsburg) or three new popular novels that I have seen so widely advertised that their very titles now smell like soap advertisements. Nor did I forget that I could take a trip to Kansas City, stay all night with a friend (thus getting my board free), and see the sights. But I must tell you about our penny-a month orphan-roll, that you may have the same if you desire. For years we have talked in our Endeavor society about sending money to our foreign missionary board to help the Indian orphans in Damoh. I myself have made some very neat little speeches on the subject. We sang songs about it and we prayed, but nothing seemed to develop. The years came and went, and our eloquence flowed on forever, but the little Damoh Indians got no rags to their backs or bite to their stomachs, from our efforts. So at last we found that speeches are just air. Then we suggested that all who felt like it give one penny a month for the orphan cause in Damoh. Everybody felt he could afford that; the church members heard about it and wanted to be on the list themselves; so now we have over 75 names, and of course I took 24 cents of that $5 and paid up the donors to the end of the year. That left me $4.76. Well, there was another thing: Our Sunday-school has never had a library. I thought to myself, "Now here's a chance to start an Endeavor library. The Christian Publishing Co. are offering 40 volumes for $2.50. "They may be poor excuses," I thought, "but they'll go all around, and that's better than buying two books that may be very fine. Besides, you can't start a library with two volumes, but you can with 40." So I gave $1.76 on condition that the Endeavor Society raise 74 cents. They did; and we got the books and while small, they are really valuable. The strangest thing about it was that we raised the library money lots quicker than if we hadn't started the orphan enterprise. Well, I had $3 left, and I divided it half and half between Drusie and Charlie. Now don't you think God has blessed that five dollars? I wish I had some more for him to bless! Who knows but that library may grow till it becomes the library of the town? Who knows but the $1.50 sent to China may convert some one to Christ? Who knows but the $1.50 reserved for Charlie, may open the door of some business school to him, when he is older? From Emida, Idaho, comes this prayer from Mrs. Dora Griffith: "I send $2, one for Charlie, one for Drusie, our dear missionary. May the Lord bless her and spare her that she may enjoy the fruits of her labor, and may Charlie live to be a good Christian man, is my prayer."

Mrs. E. McLeod Davis, Crawfordsville, Ind.: "I send 80 cents for the Advance Society missionary, in memory of my dearly beloved daughter." Lucille Jones, Bolivar, Mo.: "I want to join the Advance Society. I am 11, in the 7th grade. I was visiting my grandma during Christmas holidays, and it was there I commenced keeping the Advance Society rules. Will quotations from the Bible do?" (Certainly. What a sweet association in those words: Christmas—Grandma!) Clarence and Carl Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "We inclose $1.50 for orphan or missionary fund." (Half and half.) "Mamma wishes Charlie could spend a week with us next summer. Our church supports a missionary in India—one of our young ladies who graduated from the medical college at Ann Arbor. We received 'Adnah' for a Christmas present from papa. Mamma read it and thinks it . . ." (Much obliged!) "We hope the Woodneys will prove as interesting as The Green Witch." (I am sorry we are so situated that I cannot at once acknowledge money received. I have ever so many dimes and nickels and a few larger coins which as yet have not been published on this page. Why? The continued story is called for three weeks out of four, and on the fourth week we have such limited space, and I have so much to say! But in the course of time all money will be acknowledged. But I'll tell you what; if you'll inclose a postal with your gift, or a stamp, you'll hear from me in my own elegant penmanship.) Sidney Stephens, Moberly, Mo., sends 50cts: "I have been reading about the little orphan boy," he says, "and am always sorry for those who can't help themselves. I only wish I could send the whole amount." He is 14. I had quite an adventure with one money order; it was lost and finally came to life from the Dead Letter Office of Washington. As to the many delightful birthday letters I received, what can I say? From Kent, Ohio, comes an offering from one who does not want her name given, and who says, in part: "When I read that Feb. 11 is your birthday, I turned to my birthday-book and recorded your name. I give the stanza in that book at your day:

" 'Take my life, dear Lord, and use it,
Wholly thine—so let it be.
Filled each moment from Thy fulness,
Molded, guided, ruled by Thee.'

While I am sure you are not 100" (Oh, no!) "except by the count of the little negro who reckoned he'd lived a hundred 'by de heaps of fun Ise had'— and I do not suppose you are even fifty" (Oh, no, no indeed, not near! Why! I'm not even forty! Why! I'm not thirty-six!) "my offering will count at least one cent for both Drusie and Charlie for every year you have lived. Why not ask each of all the friends to make you some such gift at each of your anniversaries? Drusie will be 23 on Sept. 9. Why not ask for a birthday gift for her of 25 cents; one for each year of her life, and two cents to grow on?" (Don't you think she'd get too fat on so much?) "If all would do as much for Charlie there might be enough to take him on a summer trip, even if it were as far as New York. Let us have Sept. 9th as a special day of prayer for Drusie." (Seriously, I think these are splendid suggestions, and while I hope nobody will wait till Sept. 9th to pray and give, we can make that a special time of celebration. Now, I'm afraid all this won't get printed and if it doesn't, what am I to do? By the way, I want to tell you something that I think is sweet; the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is giving itself free to Drusie, so she will read all we are saying. Another point; some one asks for Charlie's last name. No, I don't want to tell it. I'll tell you why; I don't want to be publishing his full name just because he is at present helpless and needs our money. I think he'll be more independent and self-reliant if he knows he hasn't been published from one end of the land to the other as an object of charity. I may be wrong about it, but that's how I feel. You may say you have a right to know his name. Of course you have, and if you'll send me a postal or stamp I'll furnish it. But I don't want to print it. Another thing; Mr. Whitacre, our Adnah prize-winner, wants it to be distinctly understood that he is no kin to that Whittaker with whom Charlie had such a hard time in the orphan-home for American Indians! Still another thing; some of your letters have been so heavy that I've had to pay "due postage" on them, and it's mighty hard on me to pay "due postage." Still another thing—but I have room only for good-by.

GET RIGHT WITH GOD

THE church does not claim a monopoly of revivals. The fourteenth century saw a revival of learning; in the fifteenth century there was a revival of fine arts; in the sixteenth century a revival of philosophy; in the eighteenth century a patriotic revival, and now, in the twentieth century, we have a revival of religion. Twenty years ago the tides of faith were ebbing away; now we see them coming in like a flood. Men have discovered that the sins of the world are unbearable, and that without the aid of God they are unequal to their trials and problems. If men would realize God in their daily lives they would change earth into a kind of heaven. All men are beginning to feel, therefore, that before we go any further we had better "get right with God," become good friends with Jesus Christ, straighten out the record and do unto others as we would have others do unto us.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

A simple and proper method of cleaning costly and easily-injured articles is to make a suds of hot water and Ivory Soap, and allow it to cool until lukewarm. This solution, while very effective, is perfectly harmless.

Ivory Soap contains no alkali. It will not destroy the surface or texture of any material, however delicate.

Ivory Soap differs from other soaps. It is more carefully made, and the materials used in its manufacture are the purest and best.

New Congregation at Pana, Illinois.

Pana, one of the most important towns of central Illinois, has a population of about 8,000, largely of the laboring people. The Catholics are quite numerous and the usual number of Protestant organizations is present. Years ago the Disciples of Christ had a small and weak organization, but it perished and the little building was disposed of. All who remembered the old days declared that it was folly to try to revive the work. A faithful few, who conducted a small Sunday-school and observed the Lord's supper during the past year, thought otherwise. Bro. M. R. Corbett, a prosperous farmer, purchased a well-located lot for church purposes last fall. Our state and fifth district boards took the matter of a meeting in hand, raising a special fund to employ an evangelist and singer. The writer solicited this fund and secured Lawrence and Edward Wright for the meeting. A tabernacle was erected the first week in January, with a seating capicity of 600, well heated and lighted. Services began on January 7 and continued 46 days. The total number added was 70, of whom 35 had previously been identified with us, 19 came from other bodies (six Baptists, 10 Methodists, one Presbyterian and one Congregationalist), 24 were baptized, of whom eight were from the denominations. The church was fully organized on Feb. 19 and pledges were taken sufficient to employ a pastor for one-half time. The congregation will continue to use the tabernacle till a church house can be built.

A More Cheering View.

If one does not find either comfort or conviction in Dr. Osler's theory of superannuation at forty and voluntary extinction at sixty, one may turn to the more cheering theory expressed by Dr. Lyman Sperry in an address in Chicago a few days ago. In his judgment, there is no good reason why man should not live one hundred and fifty years and be happy and useful to the end of the period. The destructive forces which tend to shorten life are many and complex, but most of them are subject to human control. According to Dr. Sperry, long life is largely a matter of wanting it enough to be willing to pay the price in careful, moral and sensible living. As this conviction is the result "of a third of a century of scientific study," we judge Dr. Sperry must be in the neighborhood of sixty, and, with ninety good years still ahead of him, in no mood to accept Dr. Osler's invitation to chloroform.

The Treaty with Santo Domingo.

The Senate, which was "kept in" for a special session to ratify the treaty with Santo Domingo, is spending this week in debate on that topic. The treaty suffered numerous amendments by the Senate committee on Foreign Relations before that committee reported it favorably back to the Senate. In its present form it is shorn of some of the features which were considered most likely to breed trouble. While the President is not enthusiastic over the changes, he is said to be willing to accept them. Even when the history of the negotiations has been cleared up so that the Senate will not think that the President's first intention was to put the treaty into effect without asking the consent of the Senate—and some of the Senators still cherish the opinion that that was his intention—the treaty will still have trouble enough in getting ratified. There are a good many people, including some Republicans, who do not think that it is any part of our government's business to act as a collection agency to help European powers and their subjects to collect their bad debts in the Latin American republics, or to garnishee the customs receipts of an irresponsible island for the benefit of its foreign creditors even with the consent of the nominal and ostensible rulers of the island. But then, the Monroe doctrine certainly carries some responsibilities with it. We can't say "hands off" without being willing to lay our own hands on when an emergency demands the grip of some stout fist. And Santo Domingo does need the laying on of a good strong hand. It is predicted by insiders that the treaty will be ratified this week and that the Senate will adjourn on Saturday.

Silent Statesmanship.

A member of the British Parliament has achieved sudden fame by announcing to his constituents that he has never made a speech in the twenty-four years during which he has occupied a seat in that honorable body, and that he never intends to make one. Here is a real modern statesman. Speeches in legislative assemblies are seldom made to convince the opposition or win votes for the measure under consideration. Usually the speaker merely wants to go on record before his constituents and win votes for himself in some subsequent election. The above mentioned member has evidently discovered a method of keeping solid with his constituency which is less time-consuming than the old method of oratory. In the name of humanity, let him make it known at once. Premier Balfour complains that much time is wasted in needless debate, and no wonder, for his own speeches in the last session filled 317 columns of the printed record, nearly 50 per cent more than those of his nearest rival in loquacity. But perhaps, after all, it is as well that a certain amount of the time of a legislative body should be consumed in harmless, if unnecessary, oratory. Most of the real business must be done in smaller groups, in committee room and not on the floor. There was a time when military prowess was considered the chief qualification of a law-maker; then oratory; now the silent statesman has his day. Hail to the member who has never made a speech and never expects to. May he never lapse into eloquence.

The Czar's Rescript.

We have not found it possible to exult very heartily over the alleged liberality of the Czar's recent rescript in which he informs the Minister of the Interior of his intention to convoke an assembly to consider legislative reforms. Following, as it did, a manifesto in which the principles of autocracy were re-affirmed, it appears that the Czar is desirous rather of silencing the complaints against the government than of removing the cause of them. The assembly which is somewhat dimly foreshadowed in the rescript, may perhaps be representative, though that is not altogether clear. But it is not to be a legislative body. It is purely advisory. Its sole function will be to inform the Czar how the people feel about the course of the government. If it will do this freely and faithfully, it will be no small service to the cause of progress, for the Czar's isolation from public sentiment has been one of the great troubles hitherto. Because he was the high and exalted autocrat, the etiquette of the court and his own sense of official dignity cut him off from communication with common people; and because he was thus cut off, he had little chance to learn that his autocracy and all the rest were an absurd anachronism and a ruinous regime. By this vicious circle, tyranny has perpetuated itself. If the new assembly shall interrupt it, it will do well. But as for the Czar, he is either trying to be shrewd and calm the people by a show of liberality without real concessions, or he is weakly vacillating, in which case he will probably end by clinging for support to his traditions.

Tolstoy's Appeal.

Count Tolstoy is out with another manifesto in the London Times. It is his contribution toward the solution of the present problem of internal reconstruction in Russia. His suggestion is that there be no reconstruction, but destruction instead. Of course it is his old doctrine, that all government is an unqualified evil and that the thing to do with a faulty government is not to correct it, or even to substitute a better one for it, but simply to knock it on the head. Governments are "intricate institutions sanctified by tradition and custom for the purpose of committing by violence and with impunity the most dreadful social crimes." The chief of these "social crimes" is war. If there were no governments, there could be no war; therefore there should be no governments. This is the argument. Against the self-satisfied citizens of western lands who are saying harsh things about Russia, he hurls this shot: "They [America, France, Germany, Japan and England] are in the most hopeless state of slavery—the slavery of slaves who do not understand that they are slaves and pride themselves on their position as slaves. The fact is that every coercive government is in the essence a great and unnecessary evil. Therefore the aim both of the Russians and of all men should not be to replace one form of government by another, but to free themselves from every government and abolish it." By the utterance of such sentiments at such a time, the greatest man in Russia and the most ardent lover of liberty becomes an impediment to the progress of reform.

Prince or Priest?

The recent statement by the Anglican bishop of London that his annual expenses exceeded his salary by $5,000, has aroused much comment and crititism. The salary is equal to that of the President of the United States, $50,000, and the bishop is a middle-aged bachelor of simple tastes. What does he do with the money? That is what everyone has been asking, and the natural assumption has been that he must have fallen into very extravagant habits for an ecclesiastic. The bishop himself has answered the question by publishing his expense account for the year. It foots up $54,600. Without going deeply into particulars, we note that the various items of taxes, insurance and repairs amount to $16,000 and that subscriptions to charitable and religious purposes are $12,500, while the bishop's personal expenses were only $1,473. On the whole, the fault does not seem to lie with the bishop. And yet something must be wrong when one servant of the church spends the income on a million dollars, or more than a hundred times the salary of many of his fellow-ministers in the same church. The chief difficulty seems to be that the church furnishes the bishop of London with two white elephants in the shape of palaces upon which he has to pay the taxes, repairs and running expenses and in which it expects him to entertain largely. Fulham Palace, for example, his larger house, has fifty-two bedrooms. It is the notion which always crops out sooner or later in a state church that the leading ecclesiastics are "princes of the church" and must live in princely state. Even the Archbishop of Canterbury's $75,000 a year is probably insufficient to keep up the dignity and state with which his office is invested. Pity the poor bishop. It is not his fault. The system is to blame.

The Scholar in Politics.

The old idea of the college professor as a bookish recluse or an ineffective theorist is gradually vanishing. The recent session of the Indiana legislature called attention to the capacity of college men for public service. In that session no men were more conspicuous or more useful than Lieutenant-Governor Hugh T. Miller and Representative T. C. Howe, of Marion county (Indianapolis). Both of these are graduates of Butler College and have spent most of their lives so far (they are young men) as professors in the same institution. The Indianapolis News says editorially:

> Indiana can furnish a fresh chapter to the discussion of the question of the usefulness of the scholar in politics. In the general assembly that has just closed the college professor was in evidence. The lieutenant governor, while now a banker, is a scholar and was long a professor. He was educated for the classroom, and for many years, and until within two or three years, held the chair of history at Butler College. It has been doubted whether a college man, devoted to principles and ideals, could adjust himself to practical politics and statecraft. But the correct ideal of the professional man gives to him not only theory and learning, but a holy hatred of sham and graft, an alert conscience and a worldly wisdom not to be despised by the crafty politician. Of such a quality our lieutenant governor has proved himself to be. There have been an orderliness and an attention to business in the Senate that have been most gratifying to those who care to see the state's business administered promptly, decisively and with a sense of decorum.
> In the house it was probably with deep interest, and perhaps some little concern, that Marion county put into its delegation another "scholar in politics," Prof. T. C. Howe. Certainly the experiment has not proved a failure. Here also was a man deeply concerned in the real welfare of his county and the state. Yet he served his party well. He brought to the duty of a legislator the ripe judgment of a man who knows men and books, and whose observations have been broad and practical. He has reason to be satisfied with his experience as a legislator. He was a working member. By education he knew how to work, and he gave to the state the best that he had. Fortunate is the school or the state that is served by such men, of open mind and high principles. The scholar thus equipped should always find a place in politics as in business, or in any of the affairs of life where the public money and the public welfare are involved.

Trust Investigations.

Commissioner Garfield's report on the beef trust was a distinct disappointment to the public. There was a general expectation that something startling and flagrant would be revealed. In accordance with a resolution of Congress a year ago, the investigation has been carried out, and Mr. Garfield reports that the six packing companies, which comprise what is generally called the beef trust, are not over-capitalized, that their profits in certain years which the investigation has covered have not been abnormally large, and that inter-ownership of stock among these companies does not exist. The Kansas legislature and some others have promptly passed resolutions reflecting upon Mr. Garfield's ability as an investigator and asserting distrust of his report. "Every fact known to the public," says the Kansas resolution, "is contradictory to this alleged investigation and report." The criticisms may have some sound basis in fact. We do not know—and most of those who are making them do not know. Two things should be remembered: first, that it was not the business of the commissioner to report only facts which could be used against the trust in a trial, but to report all facts impartially; second, that the whole report has not been published and that the parts withheld from publicity as yet may possibly contain the facts which are to be used in the prosecution of the trust. It is understood that President Roosevelt is thoroughly satisfied with Mr. Garfield's methods.

A resolution of the House, introduced by Representative Campbell, of Kansas, requests an investigation of the oil industry in Kansas and adjacent states. The "oil industry," of course, means the Standard Oil Company, just as "all cities of over 500,000 population in Missouri" means St. Louis. Commissioner Garfield will begin this investigation at once. While the matter has grown out of the war on Standard Oil in Kansas, the investigation will not be confined to that state but will cover the operations of the oil trust in the western field.

The End Not Yet.

Kuropatkin has fought disastrously. A week of fighting has gone by and the end is not yet. The great flanking movement of the Japs resulted in the retreat of the Russian army from Mukden. The counterstroke of Kuropatkin failed. Finding himself unable to maintain his position there and unable to break the line of the investing army he made the effort to extricate his forces by following the line of least resistance—a retreat to the Tie Pass, near which the Japs had a small force and the Russians had a fortified position. In many instances, the retreat became a rout, for the Japanese followed relentlessly, cutting off many of the defeated army and annihilating other divisions. The dispatches indicate that the Russian loss may be as great as 200,000, though we think this number is too high an estimate. But they have lost in addition a strongly fortified position, large quantities of stores—much of which was burned—and ammunition and many guns. This last item is a very serious one. Besides, they have been beaten, and it is already reported that the victorious Japanese are at work upon another turning movement to drive out of the Tie Pass the army that may reach and be reorganized there. The world talks of peace, but the Russian war party answers No to such talk. There seems to be a feeling in its official quarters that the financial problem alone will defeat Japan. But the little country's credit grows with its victories. And Russia—well, it cannot do much this year, even though Kuropatkin has resigned and another takes the command.

The Confession of the New Evangelism.

In the old evangelism of the writer's boyhood, penitent believers who wished to begin to live the religious life in fellowship with the church, were required to make a profession, rather than a confession, and the thing they were required to profess as a condition of baptism and church membership was their belief that God, for Christ's sake, had forgiven their sins. It was this feeling or sense of forgiveness that was deemed the essential thing to have before one should obey the Lord in baptism. This was often called a "Christian Experience." Many were never able to relate such an experience as they had heard others relate, and such as they believed they ought to be able to relate, and hence never presented themselves for church membership. These often remained "seekers," as they were designated, for many years, and failing to obtain what they were taught to think was the necessary feeling, they often gave up the search and settled down into lives of worldliness or of dark despair.

The confession required in the new evangelism is the confession of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. To believe on him with the whole heart—that is with the full purpose of becoming his disciple—is the faith of the New Testament on which salvation is predicated. This is the faith that unites to Christ, that accepts Christ as a personal Savior, that surrenders to him wholly and irrevocably. Its unfailing signs are repentance, issuing in a changed life, in so far as the old life was marked by sin, and the desire to obey Christ in baptism, and in every other known requirement. The confession that is made publicly before men, is no doubt generally, if not always, preceded by a private confession of Jesus as Lord, between the individual soul and him alone; but as baptism and the formal identification with the church are necessarily public acts, the confession of faith in Christ, which the New Testament makes precedent to baptism, should also be made publicly. It is acceptable to God only as it is the outward and open expression "with the mouth" of what is sincerely believed "with the heart."

Concerning the form of this public confession we desire to say a few words. The substance of what is to be confessed is clearly taught in many passages, with a varying form of words. The celebrated confession of Simon Peter, as given by Matthew, is, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." In Luke's account of the same matter Peter is reported as answering the question, "Who say ye that I am?" with the words, "The Christ of God." The confession of Nathanael, which seems to have been accepted by Jesus, was, "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel." John the Baptist confessed him as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Thomas owned him as, "My Lord and my God." Paul preached Jesus to the Jews as the Christ of the Old Testament scriptures. Concerning the confession he says: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." He also said to the Philippian jailor, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

As the confession in our churches is usually made in answer to a question, as in a majority of the above instances, what form should the question take? We are not bound to a fixed form of words, but the question should be such as to draw out the essential fact. There is an impressive and a very non-impressive way of questioning those who come forward to confess Christ. The form of question might be varied to adapt it to different ages and conditions. We like, for ordinary use, a form of question, or of questions, like this: "Do you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ with your whole heart? And do you desire and purpose, here and now, to accept him as your personal Savior, and to obey him in all things, according to the best of your ability?" Such questions, slowly and impressively stated, and answered clearly and distinctly by the confessor —"I do," cannot fail to impress the witnesses with the gravity and significance of "the good confession." It would also help those taking this initial step to understand what is involved in it, and would better prepare them for the solemn ordinance of Christian baptism, in which they set forth in impressive symbol what they have previously expressed in their confession "with the mouth."

In a word, it should be the effort of the evangelist and of all ministers of the word, to bring the soul seeking salvation into personal contact with Jesus Christ. The preaching should set him forth as the soul's only satisfaction. The confession should bring those manifesting a desire to become Christians, face to face with Jesus Christ. It is not enough that those who would be real followers of Christ should give intellectual assent to his Messiahship or Godhood; there should be the personal commitment of the heart and the will to him as Savior and Lord.

The missing "Easy Chair" copy came to hand just one week later than it was expected and we must put down the delay to Uncle Sam's postal authorities. As most of this installment is still of current interest we give it publication this week along with the editor's contribution sent subsequently from Cocoanut Grove.

Notes and Comments.

Some of our pedagogues have put on record curious examples of the lack of religious knowledge and familiarity with the Bible among college students. There are others who do not know their Bibles. At an exhibition in London, two ladies were looking, the other day, at Watts' picture of "The Rich Young Man" who went away sorrowful. The lady who had the catalogue read out the text, "He went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." Her companion stared, and after a moment's pause said with an incredulous note, "Really?"

The New York Independent recently published a striking article on "Advertising the Gospel." The American preacher seems to be the greatest sinner of all in the matter of catch-penny titles for sermons. The writer has been making extracts from the newspaper columns headed "Religious Notices," and he has found some very odd announcements. In many churches the chief emphasis, he says, is laid on the music. One church boasts of music by "a South African boy choir"; another, "Music by American Indians"; the third says that "Colored jubilee singers will render gospel songs and plantation melodies." But these things are mild in comparison with some of the remarkable titles chosen by sensational preachers. Take, for example, "Seeking Grass for Mules, and Finding Elijah"; "Nathan Said Unto David, 'Thou Art the Man,' or the Crack Detective"; "Out of the Frying-pan Into the Fire: a Study of a Recent Suicide." A sermon on Abraham sitting at the door of his tent and being visited by the two angels is labeled with the striking headline, "The Hebrew's Afternoon at Home." The writer's conclusion is that these methods prevent many men from ever entering the churches, while to others they will make religion seem a silly and unworthy thing. We do not doubt that this will be the verdict of a great majority of preachers. Every legitimate means should be employed to get a hearing for the gospel. We are encouraged to go out and seek after the lost, but we must be careful lest in a laudable ambition to attract attention we degrade the message by the language in which we clothe it.

The great revival continues to have some of the results that we ought to look for in any such upheaval. We regret to learn that young Evan Roberts, who has been such a mighty factor in the movement in Great Britain, has had an attack of nervous prostration through constant work. The reports from different parts of the field indicate that the effect of the revival is attracting wide attention. The mayor of Swansea was so greatly impressed by its results in that big city that he says he hopes it will last forever. At one place in Wales it is reported that "every day of the week becomes more and more like the Lord's day." In another district there was not a single charge of drunkenness during the whole week—a thing not known for many years past. At another place there has been a great demand for Bibles and hymn books, while that for light literature is all but gone. A popular weekly novelette which used to be taken regularly by 36 is now taken by three customers only. At Barmouth some 70 boys and girls asked permission to hold a prayer-meeting in one of the class rooms at the dinner hour. An unusual sight was the baptizing in the river Dee of a large number of converts. Sir Marchant Williams, a prominent police court magistrate, testifies that his work has been greatly lightened. "I am not," he says, "concerned with inquiring into the cause of the revival, and have to deal only with its effects as seen from day to day in the various courts over which I preside. There cannot be the least doubt of its beneficial effect as regards the Welsh-speaking population of my district."

The Herald and Presbyter in an article on "Japanese Presbyterians," says:

> "Admiral Togo is a member of the Presbyterian church, and Vice-Admiral Urin is a Presbyterian elder. * * * Three of Japan's leading newspapers have managers and proprietors who are Christians. * * * General Kuroki and General Oku are both members of the Presbyterian church, and are prominently known as true Christians, and as men of piety and righteousness of life. Field Marshal Oyama, while not a member of the church, personally, is in hearty sympathy with it, contributes to it generously and is always ready to say a good word for it and to help it forward. His wife is a very ardent Christian woman. She graduated from Vassar college some years ago, and was marked for her religious life while in this country."

We are sure our readers will rejoice to know that the men who are creating a new future for Japan are believers in Christ. That destroys the bugaboo about the "yellow peril."

The Word and Way quotes a "noted pastor-evangelist" as saying that "the most tremendous sensation that could happen in a city church would be for a sinner to get religion at an eleven o'clock morning service." We had supposed the phrase "getting religion" had been remanded to oblivion along with the idea that religious disease, like smallpox or measles, might break out when least expected. If the Editor and the preacher he quotes mean that it is so unusual a thing for sinners to "turn to the Lord" and confess him at the eleven o'clock morning service, we beg leave to say that this is not applicable to the churches of this reformation. On the contrary it is the ordinary thing to have sinners witness the good confession at the Lord's day morning and evening service.

Editor's Easy Chair.

I

The "Easy Chair," this week, as it so often happens, is a cushioned seat in a Pullman palace car. The train is headed south, and the warm sunshine is streaming in at the east window—the herald of a sure-enough spring, with grass and flowers and birds. The train has just pulled into Birmingham, Ala., one of the south's manufacturing cities. As we were leaving St. Louis yesterday evening, with the air balmy and the skies clear, a friend said, "Why go south now? The wild geese have been flying north for several days—a sure sign of spring." We are not ready to admit that a goose knows more about March weather in Missouri than we do. Besides, we have business south which the geese "wot not of." We are hoping to strike the closing session of the Florida convention at Jacksonville. After that a few sniffs of salt air on the Bay Biscayne with the oars, or behind the "bellied sails," a look at that little orange grove which we have been watching for two or three years, a few strolls through the pines, a little while for renewing acquaintances with Cocoanut Grove friends, and then we will be ready to follow the wild geese north in a "wild goose chase" for cooler breezes. It is a little late to go south, but it was a choice, this time, between no visit and a short visit, and we chose the latter, so much do we love the pines and the palms, the lakes and the lagoons, the bays and balmy breezes, the sunshine and soft blue skies, the groves and the 'gators, the bloom and beauty of "Florida, sweet Florida."

Some men inherit fame, some achieve it, and others have it thrust upon them. The now famous Dr. Osler, of Johns Hopkins University, seems to belong to the third class. The newspapers are thrusting fame, or notoriety at least, upon the doctor because of that recent sensational utterance of his proposing to lay on the shelf, or otherwise dispose of, all men above the age of sixty. Of course his remark about chloroforming them is not to be taken seriously, but we see that four men in the city of Chicago alone have taken their lives on the strength of the reported opinion of Dr. Osler. That may have been a mere excuse for getting out of Chicago, but it shows that public men ought to be careful about what they say. Eliminating the "joke" about the chloroform, the doctor's speech is sufficiently erratic and unwise to entitle him to a place among the university freaks or crank professors, of whom we seem to have a superabundance in this country. Is there anything in the university atmosphere to breed the bacteria which infect the brains of these "crank" professors? Perhaps it is only the desire to illustrate the extreme freedom enjoyed in the university—even the freedom to make a fool of oneself, if one wish to do so—that prompts this class of men to be cranks and freaks. But, whatever may be the aggravating cause of the university freak, there is no doubt that he is a nuisance to be abated.

If Dr. Osler had contented himself with saying that the most actively creative period of the human brain, with the average man, is between the ages of 25 and 40, few, if any, would have cared to question the statement. But almost every one except the university freak has learned from history and observation that the activity of the mind is affected by many causes, of which age is only one. Some men reach maturity at thirty or younger, because there isn't much to mature. Others continue to grow and bring forth fruit in old age. Some of the greatest pieces of art and literature have been produced by men away beyond the age of forty. The matter of temperament, of health, of environment, of keeping in touch with the living issues of one's time, and, above all, of having a great purpose or cause to live for, has quite as much to do with one's mental activity, as age. There are young men of eighty and old men of forty. Some people don't know the difference between a white-headed man and an old man. That's the reason some foolish churches turn down a gray-headed pastor for what they call a young man. There is, after all, a worse fate for preachers above sixty, and yet able for twenty years of service, than to be chloroformed. It is more cruel to refuse them an opportunity to devote their wisdom and experience to the service of their Master, and allow them to drop into want, and suffer from neglect and non-appreciation for the sin of having gray hairs! No wonder some preachers resort to hair dye to save themselves from so cruel a fate!

One of the most remarkable and encouraging revelations which has come to us, of late, in hundreds of personal letters from our readers, representing all parts of the country, is the widespread and deep-seated conviction that what we most need, and what all other religious bodies of our day need, is a deeper spiritual life—a stronger hold on Christ and unseen realities. In the freedom of personal correspondence these readers open their hearts to us, expressing their gratitude for what the Christian-Evangelist has done for them in leading them to aspire for higher things, and their conviction that this bringing of the mass of our membership into more vital touch with God is fundamental to our success in every department of our work. Nothing could be more gratifying to us than this dissatisfaction with our present spiritual attainments. We have not yet given to the world an exhibition of New Testament Christianity, on its spiritual side, that would make the reformation we plead an irresistible force. Perhaps this was not to have been expected at the first, but the world has a right to expect a growing approximation to that ideal. That the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands, and has stood through all these years, for this all-around, full-orbed exhibition of New Testament Christianity—its doctrine, its ordinances, its personal allegiance to Christ, its spirit, its life, its freedom and its fruits—is well understood. This is its reason for being, and but for this mission the Editor would lay aside his pen and his editorial tasks.

II.

The novelty of strange scenes has its attractions, but there are some familiar scenes, like some familiar friends, that never lose their charm. The scene which confronts us this morning is one we have often looked upon with pleasure. Bay Biscayne is spread before us gleaming like a molten sea in the morning sunlight, but we look at it through a grove of tall, slender pines, through the tufted tops of which the ocean breeze sings its everlasting song. Eight miles out there is a long dark line that marks the Key Biscayne which stretches many miles up and down this Atlantic coast, as if to guard the shore against the fury of the ocean when it is storm-driven, and to form a sort of inland lake where amateur sailors and fishermen may pursue their sport without incurring the perils of the open sea. This line of keys, or islands, stretches along the coast of Florida from above Miami to Key West, a distance of perhaps 150 miles. A channel is now being dredged through so that smaller vessels and houseboats may pass from Miami to Key West between these keys and the mainland. The East Coast Florida Railway is planning also to make Key West its terminus. This involves, of course, crossing wide stretches of water by trestle work, between keys, but modern engineering is equal to the task. All this means the increasing development of Southeast Florida as the Riviera of America.

These trade winds that rise and blow steadily from the southeast make fine sailing on the Bay. Since reaching here we have enjoyed two very delightful sails in Dr. Gifford's new sailboat "Helen," under his skillful seamanship. The "Helen" has a very large sail, and is very swift in a good breeze. The last day we were out the breeze was very stiff, and she walked up into the wind like a thing of life and spirit. Out into the channel where the big steamers pass, on south of Cape Florida and until we came in full view of Soldier Key, the vessel sped, like a racer on the home stretch. The salt spray dashed in our faces until the ladies of the party were quite drenched, but they enjoyed the exhilaration as much as the rest of us. Two long fishing lines with hooks baited with white cloth were trolled through the foaming water, but the vessel was so swift that only one Spanish mackerel was active enough to "catch on" and be drawn in. In the two hours we were out we must have sailed in the neighborhood of 25 miles out and in. Dr. Gifford, whose report to the government on Porto Rican forestry has just been published, has built him a unique tropical house here, and is doing much to improve and build up this part of the state. We are the guests, as heretofore, of Mrs. Florence P. Haden, who, since the death of her husband, Captain Haden, continues to spend the winters here. Her sister, Miss Alice Powers, is with her. Mrs. Haden has a beautiful place here overlooking the Bay, part of which she would be glad to sell to some northerner wishing a winter home in Florida.

The recent cold snap has made its mark even in this part of semi-tropical Florida. The palms and the banana plants show it most, and it has affected the oranges that remained on the trees at the time of the freeze. Fortunately the trees are not injured seriously, and the crops for the next year will probably not be greatly affected. Ice is a very rare thing to see in this part of Florida, but it made its appearance here during our very cold spell in the north. The people are not discouraged by it, but are rather agreeably surprised that the damage is no greater than it is. The climate here now corresponds with our June as to temperature, though that is moderated by the sea breeze, and "the nights are always cool." We found it necessary to begin to lighten up on clothing before reaching Jacksonville, and here we find our summer clothing very comfortable, except at night, when, on going out, an extra wrap is necessary. We notice no diminution in the throngs of visitors to the East Coast this year. No doubt other parts of the state have their full share of visitors from the north, for Florida is the most accessible winter resort for a majority of those who annually seek refuge from the rigor of our northern winters. It has been the means of saving the lives of many invalids, and of prolonging the lives of many old people who cannot stand the sudden changes in our more northerly states.

One of the letters which have followed us down south is from a young minister who is expressing his gratitude for the recent symposium on the Holy Spirit and prayer, and the general tone of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in emphasizing some things which have been too much neglected in our attention to other matters. He expresses the encouragement and renewed hope which he and many other young preachers feel, as to our future, as a religious movement because of the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on these subjects. As the time grows shorter in which we can hope to serve the cause of Christ by promoting the permanent success of our reformatory movement, we feel a deepening interest in the younger men in the ministry upon whom will devolve, very soon, the future guidance of this great work. If we may say it in the spirit of the profoundest humility, and with an increasing sense of personal unworthiness, we believe the Lord has shown us, very clearly, in no miraculous way, some things that are absolutely essential to our future success. We are sure he has made these things equally clear to many others among us. To point out these things to the younger generation, and especially to our younger ministers, is the chief reason we have for desiring to live as long as we may serve so holy a cause.

We have been here less than a week and are already planning our return, as this is to be only a flying visit. The Congress of Disciples at Columbia is one thing that is hurrying us back. There is so much that is mentally and spiritually stimulating in these annual assemblies of the brethren for free discussion of living questions that we hardly feel we can afford to miss them. There is one thing that no religious movement like ours can dispense with, and that is liberty of opinion and free discussion. If any man attempts to make his opinion a test of fellowship, we will see to that; but he must be allowed to express it. Some men never learn how little there is in some pet theory until they have an opportunity to set it forth before the brethren and have it run the gauntlet of free discussion. Then they are disillusioned—provided it is not an incurable case. Let us go to Columbia and sit at each other's feet, each one of us anxious to learn any new truth which our brother may have to teach us. There are other reasons that draw us away from this summer clime, but we must have a plunge in the Atlantic and go fishing once, away out where the big fish are caught, before we turn our faces (there are two of us) northward. As we write these closing lines a mocking-bird is warbling its lay, as if it would woo us to tarry longer.

We must follow Jesus Christ step by step, and not open up a path for ourselves. We can only follow him by denying ourselves. "Ye are not your own."—Fenelon.

The Rational Basis of Obedience

By H. C. Garrison

I. The Point of View.

The task undertaken here is to show that the conditions of salvation as set forth in the New Testament are reasonable. The authority of Jesus is not questioned; his right to say upon what terms he will accept the sinner is assumed; but the conditions of pardon and salvation as given in the New Testament are not the product of his authority; they belong rather to the very nature of our spiritual constitution. They are essential not because he has given them, but he has given them because they are essential. Their ultimate sanction is not the arbitrary will of Jesus but rather the fundamental laws governing the soul.

The point of view here taken is that in the Christian system all religious institutions, ordinances and services have as their ultimate aim not to influence God, but man. Perhaps no more fundamental error has been made in our thinking about God than to consider his attitude toward the sinner as one of hostility—that he is angry and his wrath must be appeased. It is a notion gotten from paganism perhaps, certainly not from Jesus. This idea has writ itself large in man's interpretation of the death of Christ. It has been hard for the world to get over the thought that Christ must needs suffer and die to appease God's anger and reconcile him to men. I read the other day in one of the creeds something to this effect, "Jesus Christ died on the cross that he might reconcile God to the world." I read just now these interpretations of his death which I like better: "Christ also suffered for sins once, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring us to God;" "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself;" "We were reconciled to God through the death of his Son." There is a vast difference between the two positions—reconciling God to the world and reconciling the world to God. We shall not attempt here to go further into the ministry of the atonement than to say that according to his apostles the primary purpose and effect of Christ's suffering and death was the latter and not the former.

Too often are our prayers and other religious services regarded as a means of pacifying and persuading God. We want to bring him over to our way; we plead with him to do our will. But Jesus put "Thy will be done" in the forefront and finish of his prayers. It is unchristian to regard prayer as a means of persuading a reluctant God; it is rather a laying hold of a willing God. I know we are encouraged to ask and assured that we shall receive. It is true that blessings come in answer to prayer that would not otherwise come. But does this necessarily mean that by prayer God is brought over to our way of thinking? What father among us has not often withheld from his child a gift which he was anxious to bestow, until by asking for it in a proper spirit the child showed himself prepared to receive it with advantage and not with injury? In a sense the asking changes the father's mind toward the child, yet in another sense it does not. The child is changed and can be trusted with the gift. But if your child constantly seeks to argue you down, and bring you around, and bend your will to his, you do not like it. The ultimate end of prayer is to bring us into harmony with God's will, and not to move him to do our will.

Sometimes our faith and repentance and obedience are regarded as efficacious means by which we may secure from an otherwise unwilling God the coveted boon of pardon; a sort of price which he has himself fixed upon that which is priceless; a triple key that unlocks the vault of heaven's richest treasure. Christ himself has made the key and the lock. He might have made it different had he chosen, or he might have left off the lock altogether. All authority is his, and he has chosen to make it thus. Another and better explanation of their meaning is attempted.

While pagan religion is man seeking after God, Christianity is God seeking after man. Natural religion is man crying in the darkness, "My Father, where art thou?" Christianity is God calling unto man, "My child, here am I, come unto me." Hence, while pagan prayers and services and ordinances are intended to influence the deity, Christian ordinances and institutions are intended to influence man. To the Jews who had by their traditions made the Sabbath a burden, hoping thereby to please God, Jesus said, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

I see in this the spirit of all upon which Christ sets the seal of his approval. It must be for man. Faith is for man. Repentance is for man. Baptism is for man. He who came that he might minister to men authorizes no office, no organization, no ordinance, no service, that does not also minister unto men. Paul has caught the spirit of his Master when, with one mighty sweep, he brushes away all ordinances "after the precepts and doctrines of men" with this one final word, they are "not of any value against the indulgence of the flesh." There is the test by which he tries all ordinances, of the Mosaic law or of philosophy. Whatsoever is not of value to man in obtaining the mastery of the flesh and living the true life of the spirit has no place in the Christian system.

From this point of view let us approach the conditions of salvation revealed in the gospel and try to discover the spiritual laws underlying them.

II. The Spiritual Value of Faith.

It has been an offense to certain minds that faith should be made a condition of salvation. "How can a man control his beliefs? They are not subject to volition, but depend on temperament, or early teaching, or circumstances for which he is not responsible. Besides, what merit is there in believing certain propositions or what crime in disbelieving them, that the former should be rewarded with heaven and the latter with hell?"

The reasonableness of faith as an essential to salvation is the object of our search just now. The point from which we start in this quest is Paul's uncontroverted position, "We are not under the law, but under grace." The difference is fundamental. The law, although based on the ten commandments, had many rites and ceremonies; the economy of grace has none. Under the law there was no essential relation between the thing done and the blessing sought, other than legal enactment. Circumcision, for instance, the unqualified condition of citizenship in Israel, was an arbitrary condition. Something else might have done as well. Nor was there any necessary relation between transgression and its penalty. Violation of the Sabbath, for example, was punished with stoning. The penalty was purely arbitrary.

The reverse is true of the gospel. It has no arbitrary rewards or penalties. All its penalties follow as effects with transgressions as causes. There is no penalty visited upon him who refuses the gospel other than the penalty which is visited upon "the eye when it refuses light, the heart when it refuses love, or the flower when it refuses the kisses of the sun." In a word, under the law there was a reign of arbitrary enactments; under grace there is a reign of spiritual law. There is a physical constitution and there are physical laws governing it. Certain violations of these laws bring certain results. No one imagines these to be arbitrary penalties. Then certain remedies have been found helpful. No one thinks the physician arbitrary in giving them. The doctors are not responsible for the penalty or for the properties of the remedy. They did not enact these laws of the body, nor impart these properties to the drugs. They have only discovered some of them for us. Banish all the doctors, and burn all medical books, and forbid all medical colleges to open again, but these laws are not thereby repealed or suspended. It still remains true that arsenic is a poison, that alcohol makes drunk, and that an alkali is the antidote for poison by an acid.

So we have a spiritual constitution, and there are spiritual laws governing it. These did not originate with the Bible; they are as old as the spiritual order. Burn all the Bibles, banish all the preachers, and destroy all the churches, but it still remains true that "without faith it is impossible to be well pleasing unto him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." When Jesus proclaimed the necessity of faith unto salvation he was not enacting a new law, but announcing an old one. The New Testament is not a book of legislation, but of revelation—not the creation, but the publication of the essentials unto salvation. And these are essential not because they are in the book; they are in the book because they are essential.

There is nothing exceptional to our uniform experience in other matters in announcing that faith is necessary to salvation. The home is founded upon faith; unless the husband have confidence in the wife, and the wife in the husband, children in parents and parents in children, there can be no home. Education is begun and continued in faith; its very first step is to believe the teacher when she says certain characters represent certain sounds. Government rests upon faith; the people must have confidence in the government or it cannot stand. Science is based upon faith in the uniformity of nature's laws. Business is carried on by faith. Most of our travel is by faith in engineers and conductors. Without faith in the soil, the seed, and the seasons, the farmer could reap no harvest. Our food and drink are taken in faith, because we believe them nutritious and free from poison. It is not strange then that salvation also should be conditioned upon faith. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is," else he will make no effort to come. It is not that God looks with favor upon the believer simply because he believes, and with displeasure upon the unbeliever because of his disbelief; but the believer is moved by his faith to "come unto the Father" through his Son, while the unbeliever is not so moved, but follows the devices of his own heart. The merit lies not in the believing, but in its product, obedience.

Religious Education*

Religious Education and the Brotherhood of the World.

By Charles Cuthbert Hall, D. D.

In his presidential address Dr. Hall briefly reviews the history of the association and what its attitude to the future should be. He said that the intellectual development of this country is advancing rapidly and upon an enormous scale: that the sons and daughters are growing up in intellectual society, prepared to build a broader civilization than the founders dreamed of, to count for a positive force in the life of the world. What remained for the members or the association to do was to show that from the right relation of the individual to God, from the root of vital religion, spring moral forces which, taken up into the system of education, are competent to regulate the whole field of living.

"To all who observe the passage of events and who reflect on what they observe, the present state of the world speaks of impending changes, the meaning and extent of which are not to be predicted. As one ponders, noting the phenomena of the East, with others, ominous yet not less evident, darkening the sky of northern Europe: and as one reflects that God's plan moves onward, whatever else be stayed, the question presses: Shall there be a new interpretation of Christianity to the world? Shall there be a new Epiphany—a fresh manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, through some nation that has come out of the blind evolutionary struggle into the simplicity that is in Christ?

"If so, can we be that nation? There are conditions present in our life that suggest the possibility of our election for this benign service. In the heart of our people is the spirit of civil liberty. We judge of the blessedness or misery of nations by the measure of their freedom and self sufficiency. Our most holy traditions associate themselves with the voluntary principle and the unfettered rights of conscience.

"If it be God's pleasure to use this nation, so wondrously segregated from the complications of European politics, to make to the bewildered world a new demonstration of the essential spirit of Christianity, there must come a great deepening in the nation's heart of the sense of universal brotherhood, which is (to use the venerated language of our Authorized Version) 'Good will toward men.' Peace on earth comes not, abides not, returns not, save where there is good will toward men, deep solicitude for the world's good, a growing tradition in a nation's heart, supplanting that unchastened selfishness which is the first tendency of a prosperous and progressive people.

"From that tendency we are by no means exempt. At present, its expression in the terms of militarism is held in check by the traditional charm of liberty, but in the more subtle form of commercial ambition it may steal upon us unawares.

"It is certain that no nation can ever re-interpret the mission of Christianity to the Orient in part enraged, in part jaded and dispirited by sword thrusts from the west, unless there be manifest on the part of that nation a purpose to temper selfish ambitions by that first law of Christ's life—'Good will toward men.'

"There is but one way to preserve and to propagate that spirit in the American nation, with our genius for commercialism and our love for progress. It is to promote the influence of religious education upon the millions of our younger citizens in their school and college days. Intensify this, by wise and well considered methods, and they shall develop a sense of the brotherhood of the world, a zeal for the advancement of the world, a deference for the rights of the world, a sympathy with the aspirations of the world, that shall make our national spirit an interpretation of the mission of Christianity to the non-Christian races."

Survey of Progress.

By Wm. H. P. Faunce, D.D.

Dr. Faunce, of Brown university, gave the annual survey of progress in religion and moral education.

Reference was made to the unusual evangelistic effort on the part of many churches, a movement which is sure to be followed by zeal in education. One of our great needs, he said, is to achieve in America what has long been seen in Great Britain, the union of candid, patient scholarship with genuine fervor in religious and philanthropic endeavor. Continuing, he said in part:

"A noteworthy tendency is the growing sense of the underlying unity of all agencies aiming at moral and religious development. Organizations not mentioned in any church council, destitute of ecclesiastical recognition, have sprung up in many places this past year, for Bible study, for training of teachers, for study of mission fields. The place of the home in our national scheme of education is now receiving greatly increased emphasis. There is a pronounced reaction against the extreme secularization of the schools.

"A third characteristic of the past year is the growing demand for contact with reality in religious as in intellectual education. In the intellectual realm the change in this direction has been the most noteworthy advance of the last quarter-century. There is a generally increasing desire to face all facts in psychology, in literary criticism, in historical research, in natural science. There is a general acknowledgment on the part of educators that the children and young people of our time are deficient in the sense of the imperativeness of both morality and religion. Some writers echo the opinion that the great defect of childhood to-day is the lack of the spirit of acknowledgment of rightful authority. The sanctions of the moral law are not defied, they simply are not felt or even perceived.

*Being extracts from the speeches at the meeting of the Religious Education Association.

"It is the general conviction of college teachers that, while the freshmen of to-day know more than their fathers knew at the same age, they are inferior to their fathers in logical strength, in power of concentration, and in the faculty of sustained thought. The haste to be wise may be as fatal as the haste to be rich.

"The year has been notable for its publications dealing with the principles and methods of religious education. The discussion of the objects and methods of the Sunday-school has been incessant during the last twelve months. If there are more than 13,000,000 persons enrolled in these schools, and if over eight-five per cent of our church members come from these schools, we have in this vast undertaking a most potent force for the development of the national character. From all sections of the country now come reports of noteworthy, and in some cases remarkable, progress. The Episcopal church in this work has taken a position of leadership.

"The church is exalting its teaching function as never before. The young people's societies connected with the various religious denominations are obviously in a transitional period. They are suffering at present from a conflict of ideals. The emphasis is now being quietly transferred, in many societies, to the attainment rather than the expression of experience, and the societies are becoming groups of students. The relation of the young people's organizations to the church and to the school and the college is not yet fully determined. The question how far these great organizations are to be of an educational character cannot as yet be answered. The Young Men's Christian Association continues to do a potent work. Some of the strongest associations are to be found in the state universities of the west, whose religious influences appear to be as efficient as in the privately endowed institutions of the east. One of the most striking developments of the last year is the organization of fraternity Bible classes in a large number of colleges and universities.

"The religious forces in college life are, if not stronger, better adjusted to the conditions than ever before. The theological seminaries are in some cases making earnest efforts toward co-operation with the great education forces of our time. The ministerial calling is not securing its fair proportion, in respect of numbers or ability, of the educated manhood of our time. Our civilization cannot endure without leaders of spiritual vision and prophetic power."

Dedication Incidents

BY L. L. CARPENTER

For more than a quarter of a century the writer has made a specialty of dedicating new houses of worship, built by the Disciples of Christ. His work along this line has extended over many states and territories, as well as into the King's dominions.

In looking over my record, I find that up to this date I have dedicated 633 houses of worship, and at these dedications I have raised something more than $2,000,000 to provide for the payment of the indebtedness against these houses. How I first got into this work I do not know, and why I continue in it is equally mysterious to me. Recently a brother asked me to tell the secret of success in raising money at dedications. I told him that I hardly thought that there was any secret in it. If there is, it consists in two things: First, when a church invites me to dedicate their house I suppose they do so because they think that I can raise the money to pay their debt; and second, I know that I can raise it provided the church will do what I ask them to do; and I will obligate myself not to ask anything unreasonable, or anything that they ought not to do.

I have dedicated houses in nearly all kinds of communities. Sometimes I will dedicate a small house in some country place, and the next Lord's day in some large city. Sometimes there will be only a few hundred dollars to raise, and sometimes many thousands. I remember dedicating a house in a small village, and when I arrived at the place I asked the brother where I was assigned for entertainment, what their indebtedness was, what we would have to raise to provide for all their debts. He told me that it was more than would ever be raised. I told him that they were exceedingly unwise to build so much beyond their means; that they could never pay their debt, and eventually lose their house. Then I asked him again, and he replied, "If you will raise enough to pay half of our debt we will be perfectly satisfied." "Well," said I, "tell me how much it is, anyhow," and the brother said, "Why it is $350 and it can never be raised in this town." I told him that "if I could not raise $350, I would go home, and 'go way back and sit down,' and never try to dedicate another house; that I would expect some one of them to give that amount." "But," said he, "you have never dedicated a house in this part of the state." The next day, after the sermon, I raised $700, and to this day I think that they are wondering whether it was a dream or a reality. They were amazed.

At one place where they were in debt only $900, and thought it could not be raised, I raised enough to pay all debts and nearly enough additional to build a parsonage. In the afternoon I went to take a little rest and fell asleep. When I awoke I heard some brethren in an adjoining room talking about the work of the day. One brother said, "Wasn't it strange how easily that money was raised?" Then he said, "If Brother Carpenter were a young man what could he not do in raising money?"

I laughed in spite of myself, and said to myself, when I was a young man I could not have raised it at all, for I had not yet learned how to do it. When I was young we had not yet learned how. Now the work is so familiar that young men understand it as well as the older men and do the work as well as the more experienced ones.

While the work of dedicating a house is exceedingly hard both on the brain and body of the man who does the work, yet the joy and rejoicing of the church members when they realize that their hopes are now realities; that they have a home where they can worship God; where the pure, sweet, simple gospel of Jesus Christ can be preached; where saints will be strengthened, sinners converted, the children taught the word of God in the Sunday-school, the young people taught how to work for Christ and the church, is so great that after all it is a most delightful work.

THE 1905 CONVENTION CITY.

By W. M. White, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangement.

Possibly a few words regarding the convention city might not be out of place just at this time. The most important city of our country to-day is the best meeting place of our next international missionary convention. The location is most fortunate, the eye of the whole world is now turned toward the Orient. Our convention city is the gateway which opens out toward that great eastern land. It is a rare privilege which we shall enjoy this year in being permitted to assemble our missionary forces in so strategic a center as San Francisco is just now. Greater San Francisco has a population of about 658,000. The cities which comprise our greater city are San Francisco, Oakland, "the city of churches," bound to the larger city by six splendid ferry boats which make it possible for the traveler to cross to and fro every ten minutes. To the south of Oakland lies beautiful, homelike Alameda, with her 24,000 population, connected with Oakland by steam and electric car service, and with San Francisco by two splendid ferry lines. Lying off to the north and east of Oakland, hugging the hills of the Marin coast, is situated the Athens of the west—classic

Berkeley—with her great California state university, also the seat of our Bible seminary. Still farther to the north, nestling amongst the beautiful hills, are San Rafael, Belvedere, Sausalito, and magic Richmond. Each of these is reached by a half hour's boat ride crossing one of the most wonderful bodies of water found on our American shores. To the south of us, connected by electric and steam cars, within a few minutes' run, are San Meteo, Menlo Park, Palo Alto, Burlingame and Redwood. These towns furnish in a large measure the resting place for San Francisco's tired brain.

So different is this city from all others that one finds himself at a loss to know just what to select from among the multitude of interesting things and places to write about. However, I shall venture to fall back upon that time-honored old theme—weather, or more properly, from the Californian's point of view—the climate. Really we have something to tell about our climate that is worth knowing. Is it not a matter of importance to be able to say that you live in a city whose mean temperature does not vary more than 10 degrees the year round—moreover is it not worth telling that within the memory of our oldest citizen has there been but one real snow in San Francisco, and that fell only to the depth of three inches and remained on the ground less than 24 hours? Our weather bureau records show that our city averages 294 sunshiny days a year. Is it not worth while to take a trip to such a land? We think so, hence we urge you to accept our invitation to come and see us next August.

I venture the prediction that the forthcoming convention will be the most valuable gathering of the kind ever held among us. Think of the excellent opportunity our brethren will have of becoming acquainted with the great home mission field of the west. Then, too, many will have for the first time an opportunity of seeing for themselves the great work being done by our Church Extension Society. There are, dotted all over this westland, evidences of the handiwork of our Christian Woman's Board of Missions. And again, how many are there of us who have longed to see and know something of the real work that is being done on the foreign field? Here you will have that opportunity. We have a Chinese population within one quarter of our city of 30,000. We have 20,000 Japanese also within our borders. Every nation under the sun has its representatives in San Francisco. Come and learn more than you would in a lifetime from books, by actual observation. In the name of our brotherhood of the Pacific Coast, I invite our brethren throughout the whole world to meet with us at San Francisco in our next international convention, Aug. 17-24.

Union Evangelism By W. J. Wright & B. B. Tyler

The Evangelistic Campaign in Louisville, Kentucky.

It began Feb. 12 and came to a close Feb. 26. Like the great meeting in Kansas City it brought into co-operation practically all the Protestant people excepting the Episcopalians. About 200 churches were in the movement in the Falls Cities campaign, the director-general of which was Dr. Jos. P. Calhoun, of Pittsburg. On the general committee the Christian churches were represented by our brethren E. L. Powell, T. S. Tinsley, D. F. Stafford and J. M. Vawter.

Like the campaign in Kansas City it was not planned long enough beforehand to make it possible to secure all the men desired as evangelists, though the men secured averaged much higher in scholarship, culture, pulpit ability and evangelistic gifts than in the former meeting. Still it would be easy to select a much stronger corps of evangelists from our own ranks.

In preparation for the meeting the entire city had been canvassed with a view to discovering the number of non-Christian people there, as well as to locate backsliders, discover Christians who had not taken membership in the local congregations, and ascertain the denominational preferences of the people. Cards of invitation were left in every house in the city by those making this canvass.

The daily papers were most generous in their treatment of the entire movement, whereas in Kansas City they were rather unfriendly, full of criticism, much of which was unjust, while gibes and flings were numerous. The Louisville papers gave more space daily to the movement than was given in a week in the former campaign. Not only was space freely given, but editors and reporters wrote with consideration, kindness and encouragement. The meeting could not have been made the great success which it was without these splendid allies.

In the force of evangelists and singers the writer was the only representative of the Christian churches. This time I was assigned work in one of the very best sections of the city. My meetings were held in the Second English Lutheran church, one of the newest, most beautiful and commodious auditoriums in the city. Prof. W. S. Weeden, of New York, conducted the singing in my meeting. He is a master director of chorus and congregational singing, as well as soloist and able worker in every part of the meeting. Our meeting place in a few nights proved too small, and though overflow meetings were arranged in the lecture room and nearby churches, hundreds were turned away nightly.

My preaching was just such as I have been doing for years in our own pulpits, though I could not emphasize some things as I would have preferred. Fully half of my sermons were doctrinal and dealt plainly and forcefully with what we generally call "first principles." My message never was more heartily received by people or preachers, nor was it ever more honored of God, for nearly 500 persons came out to confess their faith in Jesus of Nazareth.

At the close of the meeting the preachers associated with me presented me a beautiful testimonial in which the scriptural and catholic qualities of my preaching and methods are highly praised. The fellowship with these servants of God was delightful. I state the sober truth when I say that I never enjoyed a meeting or fellowship more in all my ministry. "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

In the 18 districts into which the city was divided, more than 12,000 persons signed cards signifying their desire to live Christian lives, and more than 7,000 conversions were reported. The city was stirred throughout. The meeting was the theme of conversation in cars, on streets, in shops, factories, offices and stores. Requests came for evangelists to speak at the noon hour in all manner of places, and though the men complied and worked to the very limit of endurance, and some beyond it, many calls for such meetings could not be given favorable answers.

The spirit of unity is unquestionably growing in America. Not so long ago such meetings were impossible. Much more recently it was thought that we could not co-operate in them. Still more recent is the opinion that we never would be permitted to do the preaching. Well, we ought not to expect to do all of it; but we are being permitted to do some, and without doubt our share will be a larger one as we use without abusing the opportunities offered us to work in union campaigns. I have already been invited to assist in two or three such meetings next season. Every mention of the ultimate unity of all the Lord's people called forth either hearty "amens" or applause. Oft was the wish expressed by a denominational preacher that the fellowship and unity might go on forever instead of ending in two weeks. The strength of unity was seen and favorably commented on, though one occasionally heard the remark that denominations were necessary. Great good came to the churches and city in this meeting.

From this mount of vision neither can ever return to the old level. The uplift is as enduring as time plus eternity. Its power to enlarge vision, love, fellowship and fraternity cannot be lost but must be a potent factor in the redemption of the race and in the answer of our Savior's prayer for the unity of his followers. There are mountains in the way and the time may be far off, but—

> "It's comin' yet for a' that,
> That man to man the world o'er
> Shall brithers be for a' that."

God speed the day through medium of union meetings as well as other means.

The Chapman Meetings in Denver.

This account of the union evangelistic campaign in Denver, popularly known as "the Chapman meetings," has been delayed that the writer, who was in the midst of the work, might be removed from its incidents and scenes so far as to be able to tell the story of the campaign free from undue excitement. The smoke has, to a degree, disappeared. The time has come when the story ought to be told for the benefit of the readers of the Christian-Evangelist.

Careful and wise preparations were made for the campaign. These preparations were made under the direction of J. Wilbur Chapman.

Denver was divided into ten districts, with a central meeting place in each. All the Protestant churches in the city were united in the work with the exception of the Episcopal, the Unitarian, and the Universalist. Some of the Episcopal ministers expressed in words and deeds their sympathy with the movement. As a part of the general preparations, meetings for prayer were held in the homes of the people, and in the churches, at unusual hours. The money to defray the incidental expenses of the campaign, three thousand dollars, was

Storm Signals in Britain

By William Durban

Parliament is again in session. The king and queen in the pomp of state ceremonial have opened the new political campaign. The king's speech is a very strong document so far as the promises of the Tory government are concerned, but I note that even the Tory organs are frankly deriding the extensive program of Mr. Balfour and his colleagues, and are reminding the prime minister that out of 12 great bills promised at the opening of the last session the government made no attempt to pass more than three. The more sensible party papers therefore are naturally remarking that it would be more consistent and less provocative of ultimate disappointment if a modest and really practicable list of prospective measures had been presented in the king's speech.

Coming to the Parting of the Ways.

I have of late made few allusions in these articles to politics, but I must on this occasion dwell on the momentous tokens of the situation and the outlook. There are signs of an approaching upheaval of the most violent character, and I am of opinion that the political earthquake will be of international effect. Not only will Europe be convulsed, but the whole world is about to be subjected to tremendous disturbances. America has now become an imperial power, and Roosevelt will shortly find his great abilities taxed to the utmost. In the first place, a real revolution is now in process across the channel, of which the world outside of France is taking too little note. The separation of church and state in France is now assured, but this will be an event which will exercise immense influence on public opinion in Britain, while it will send a series of shocks through all the old nationalities of the continent where effete state ecclesiastical establishments are fattening on the communities, together with colossal militarism. For the last generation the great problem of the disestablishment and disendowment of the state church in England, and Wales, and Scotland has been allowed to sleep. This is the question specially dreaded by the Tories. But the movement in France will react on Britain with tremendous force. All through Europe religion and politics are tangled together in a style which is provoking to statesmen. The present conservative government has been playing into the hands of the bishops and the brewers, buying the support of the church and the distillery, in the one case by the appalling education act which has provoked the passive resistance agitation, in the other by the compensation act to drink sellers.

What Balfour has Done.

No greater political prodigal has held supreme office in England for many a generation than Mr. Balfour. This extraordinary statesman is at once the wonder of all parties and the bugbear and bogey of all genuine politicians on each side. His luck has been marvelous, for he stepped into the highest office merely as the nephew of Lord Salisbury, and he has provoked storm after storm only to come safe into port time after time, defying both his direct antagonists and the rebels in his own party. He treats all opposition with good-humored cynicism. He is the mere tool of Chamberlain, and yet coolly professes to have an independent policy of his own. He is a good Presbyterian when at his lordly home in Scotland, but in parliament he is the champion of the High Anglicanism to which Scottish Presbyterianism is the bitterest of all foes. Balfour is the personal paradox of English politics, but his day is coming to an end. He has split his party, or has allowed the ambitious Joseph Chamberlain to do so. He has roused the whole Nonconformist world to a furious sense of the intolerable pretensions of a proud ascendant sacerdotalism. He has converted Lord Hugh Cecil (the talented son of Lord Salisbury, the late Premier) and also the Duke of Devonshire from political friends and allies into uncompromising political foes of his policy. The meeting of Parliament is the signal of a loud outcry for the dissolution of the present House of Commons. The country is ringing with the echoes of this demand. The Irish party is gleefully announcing its determination to take the utmost advantage of the fresh opportunity. This compact and very determined phalanx is taking up a position which is the most threatening factor in the situation. Mr. Redmond is the stormy petrel of Parliament. He has sounded his tempestuous keynote. In one respect at least Mr. Balfour stands unrivaled in our time. No statesman of the last century has done so much to lower the dignity of his office, to degrade the authority of Parliament, and to convert politics into a game of tricks instead of a conflict of principles. Even his fascinating manners and his personal charm have lost much of their influence.

My Impressions of the Revival.

I write this article a few hours after a visit to the Royal Albert Hall, South Kensington, the immense edifice where so many mass meetings are held. Last night I went to hear Dr. Torrey preach and Mr. Alexander sing. The occasion was one that will take its place in my memory with some other special recollections that stand out in bold relief. Amongst these are the first time I ever heard C. H. Spurgeon, the sermon of Henry Ward Beecher at the City Temple, that of Talmage at Wesley's Chapel, the first sermon to which I listened from Dr. Joseph Parker, the great speech delivered in Chester by Gladstone, the first oration I heard from John Gough, and an address in French by M. Sabatier on St. Francis of Assisi. I might also instance the first meeting I attended to hear Moody and Sankey, which happened to be in Dublin. Some of these incidents happened in my early youth, but they are wonderfully fresh in remembrance. The Torrey-Alexander evening at Albert Hall will take its place with them. Alexander is a magnificent singer. He has a very beautiful voice, especially in the middle register. The grand organ was not used to accompany the great choir, but Mr. Harkness sought to compensate for the loss by his gymnastics on the powerful piano. This accompanist is a clever virtuoso on the instrument, but he overdoes his role. During the most solemn hymns he is executing frantic capriccios, rushing up and down the keyboard in cataracts of arpeggios, alternating crashing chords in the bass with nightingale trills in high soprano, and sending out now black thunder and then sharp lightning. I did not much like this factor in the proceedings. But I must give Dr. Torrey credit. He is just the kind of Puritan needed to lash the sinners of the haughty, selfish, mammon-worshiping and hypocritical West End of this awful Babylon. London, like New York, is madly determined to secure for itself endless amusement. London is frivoling with the world, flesh, and devil, and Torrey is the prophet whose denunciations are needed. And he is being heeded. Because I do not entirely like his theology, I am not therefore going to minimize his merits. He aims solely at the conscience, and cares little for anything except to bring to repentance the dissolute, the profligate, the unbelieving, the vicious. He deals in direct terms with sin, with Satan, with death, and with hell. He seems to scorn rhetoric, yet he speaks like a scholar. Moody was innocent of all knowledge of the grammar of the English language. Therefore he never made any impression on the upper classes. Torrey is, in a degree never known before in the case of a popular evangelist, gaining the attention of the higher social grade. Last Sunday the Dean of Westminster and the Archdeacon talked of him eulogistically in their sermons. All honor to this American crusader against unrighteousness. A great revivalist in the fashionable West End is a novelty, and a novelty which the drink sellers, the turf betting men, and the vicious music hall proprietors will abominate And because these pioneers of perdition hate an interloper like Torrey I glory in him.

By F. D. Power

The view this week from our dizzy perch has been a brilliant one. Not less than a half million of people have surged along our historic avenue. Banners and music and marching columns have passed under review for hours. Leaders of the republic, representatives from every state and from our insular possessions, Indians and Porto Ricans, Negroes and Filipinos, cowboys and millionaire clubs, veterans and cadets, above all the people, the plain people, the sovereign people, the many-hued, many-voiced, many-minded masses of the people have interested and inspired us and made an inaugural festival with which no triumph of the Cæsars on the streets of imperial Rome could be compared for a moment.

It was an ideal day. March 4 has too often been a wretched time for the marching thousands and the watching hundreds of thousands. Grant's second inauguration, March 4, 1873, was a time of biting winds that blew a blast from the north which made all men shiver. There were more marchers than people to review them. Ladies wore furs at the inaugural ball and it was said the sneezing in the ball room drowned the sound of the music. General Grant, hardened veteran as he was, had to retire, and all the ceremonies of the occasion were hardships and afflictions which cause men to shiver to this day as they tell of them. Twenty years later at the second inauguration of Mr. Cleveland things were not much better. A fiercely cold wind swept the avenue all day and both marchers and spectators suffered and doctors and undertakers had a busy time afterward. Theodore Roosevelt is a favorite of fortune. With the worst winter Washington has experienced for years the skies clear and the sun shines for this man of destiny, and under most favorable conditions in the physical and political heavens he enters upon his second term.

Pennsylvania Avenue from the Dome to the White House is the great highway of the nation. No other street has such history. Washington traversed it when a woodland patch; John Adams made his way in state through its swamps and big holes; Jefferson set out its trees when the city site had been stripped of forests; and every other President with his escort has passed over it to assume his office. It has seen more of such pageantry than any other thoroughfare in the world, and measured by this, goes back to antiquity. The Appian Way has no such story. With President Roosevelt's, twenty-six inaugurals have taken place here, while twenty-six coronations in England would reach back to Edward III in the fourteenth century. Past its few and scattered houses in 1814 fled the routed forces of the republic from Bladensburg with the red coats in hot pursuit and the Capitol bursting into flames at one end of it and the White House at the other. Down its somber length, covered with emblems of grief, passed the funeral cortege of Lincoln and Garfield and McKinley, all heads uncovered and the drums and bugles sobbing their requiem. Along its highway tromped Sherman's veterans, and up through its thronging thousands came the Army of the Potomac from Appomattox in the great review. Over it will pass many another imperial American to receive the highest honors of a nation. I asked at one hotel for a window on this avenue. "Fifty dollars!" A room, "One thousand!"

It is a good natured cheering aggregation of humanity that comes up to our quadrennial festivities. It seemed more than ever patriotic and pleased on the present ocaasion. This man, Theodore Roosevelt, who came into being Oct. 27, 1858, son of Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, and Martha Bulloch, of Georgia, born in New York, married first to Alice Lee, and then to Edith Carow, author, ranchman, politician, rough rider, statesman, whose doctrine is "Speak softly and carry a big stick, and you will go far," who is at once a Christian and a champion of the strenuous life, has a strong hold on the people. From far and near they came and cheered him. The South had a specially enthusiastic crowd to give him a send-off. Joe Wheeler and O. O. Howard shared equal honors, and sons of Grant and Jubal Early, of Miles and Beauregard, rode in the pageant. Here were his friends the cowboys, fifty of them, dressed as if on the plains, using the lassos, picking up things from the pavement without dismounting, Dick Deadwood and Tex Burgess and the rest. "It was a great success. Great!" he exclaimed, as he left the reviewing stand. "Did you note that bunch of cowboys? Oh, they are the boys that can ride. It was all superb. It touched me to the heart." Here were his rough riders in khaki uniform, guarding his carriage, for extraordinary precautions were taken for his protection. Here were the "big six" Indian fighters in all their paint and feathers, riding up the avenue between the applauding multitudes, Geronimo, the bloody Apache, whom Miles, his captor, called "the human tiger"; and Quanah Parker, a Comanche, blessed with seven wives and fifteen children; and Buckskin Charley, a southern Ute; and Little Plume, a model Piegan who neither drinks nor smokes; and Hollow Horn Bear, a Sioux chief and great orator; and American Horse, an Ogalalla—all seeking to honor the "Great Father." Here were Harvard students in caps and gowns to cheer an old Harvard alumnus; and anthracite miners from Wilkesbarre, carrying their banners with the motto, "We honor the man that settled our strike"; and hundreds of the "President's neighbors" from Oyster Bay; and delegates from the public high schools of twenty-six states. Here were funny fellows dressed as Uncle Sam and William Penn, men with big sticks and with red and white and orange and black umbrellas, and pickaninnies and boys and girls in red, white and blue, and pompous drum majors, Virginia's famous blues and the magnificent West Point cadet corps and Annapolis midshipmen, and Governor Pennypacker and all the rest—all with one intent to hurrah for Roosevelt. It was a great scene.

It was a model inauguration address—fifteen minutes long, spoken in the teeth of the wind. It did not forget to name the name of God, as all inaugurals from the beginnings have done. The ceremony of taking the oath is one of simplicity and dignity. At the stand on the east front of the Dome, the clerk of the Supreme Court advances with a Bible to the Chief Justice of the United States, the clerk opens the book at random, and raising it, the Chief Justice and the President-elect place their right hands on the open volume, the oath is administered, and the President kisses the open page. Much is said of the passages kissed. The clerk can observe it. At Grant's second inauguration it was Is. 2:2, 3. Hayes kissed Ps. 118: 11-13. Cleveland took the oath in both '85 and '93 from a small red Bible his mother had given him when he started out in life. McKinley's Bible the first time was provided by some colored bishops, and the lot fell on 2 Chron. 1:10. The second time it was Prov. 16:20, 21, and by a curious coincidence this was a passage read to Queen Victoria when she assumed the crown. Garfield's text was Prov. 21:1; and Garfield, for the first time it was done by any president in the history of the nation, turned and kissed his mother. McKinley followed his illustrious example. Roosevelt's passage was James 1:2-24.

Then the ball. Ever since Washington's time we have had the ball. Strictly the ball is an inaugural reception, and it is altogether a commercial function. All this arranging for our great quadrennial feature costs money. The ball helps to pay expenses, and any mortal with a five dollar bill can attend. This is not such a distinguished honor after all, and the chief thing told us about it is the usual shop talk of dry goods and jewelry. One correspondent told me she sent out one thousand letters to ladies asking what sort of clothes they would wear! "And will they answer you?" "Answer me! They will tumble over themselves to reply." I groaned.

This is the climax.

Our Budget

—Prof. G. P. Coler suggests that next year's Congress shall devote its sessions to our educational needs and opportunities.

—Columbia, Mo., where the congress convenes next week, may be reached via the Wabash or M. K. & T. railroads, or connecting lines. Columbia lies between the main lines of these roads and the junction stations are Centralia, on the Wabash and C. & A., and McBaine, on the "Katy."

—All who have worked so hard and sacrificed so much to make the foreign offering a success will be glad to know that the latest reports indicate that we have already made a gain of over $15,000 in the receipts over the corresponding time last year. It will be necessary to gain $24,000 by September 30 to insure the quarter of a million dollars. If a good start indicates anything, this will be accomplished. But it is possible to start and not reach the goal—we must remember that. The Foreign Society had already appointed ten new missionaries, to sail in September next. The new living link churches will enable the society to enlarge its forces, and at the meeting of the executive committee on March 10, four more new missionaries were appointed. The most pressing need is a medical man for India. Ten new living link churches have already reported, and at least five more are expected before the close of the year.

—A. L. Martin has resigned as minister at Indiana Harbor to take effect the first of May.

—David Millar, of Jonesburg, Mo., has accepted a call to preach for quarter time for the Two Mile Branch church.

—The church of which T. W. Grafton is minister at Anderson, Ind., is having the best time in its history.

—Hermon P. Williams has been chosen as the living link by the University Place congregation, Des Moines, Ia.

—F. Hey Lemon, of Marshalltown, Ia., has been asked to dedicate the beautiful new church at Oakland, April 2.

—For the third time W. B. Crewdson, of Atlantic, Ia., has delivered his lecture on the Jewish tabernacle, at Corning.

—Ellis Purlee, Coffeyville, Kan., has been called for the sixth year at that point, and has had an increase of $300 in his salary.

—H. C. Varner has organized a church at Roseberry, Idaho, which will need a preacher. A building will be erected this summer.

—The first offering for the foreign work taken at the Soniat avenue church, New Orleans, lacked only $6 of being ten times its apportionment.

—The C. W. B. M. at Wolcott, Ind., has undertaken the support of a helper in the foreign field at $30. The church's March offering was $50.

—Morton H. Wood reports success in Idaho and there are good prospects for a church building at Waverly, Wash., where he also had a fine meeting.

—A sister in Kansas, who does not live near a church, has sent us five dollars for the foreign mission work. This we have forwarded to Brother Rains.

—I. H. Teel has resigned the pastorate at Canon City, Col., and is ready to enter into correspondence with reference to holding meetings, or taking another pastorate.

—We are glad to hear of the good work of Bro. W. J. Hudspeth, who some few months ago took up the work of general evangelist in south Kentucky. From what we learn the outlook is very encouraging there.

—J. Irving Brown takes the work at Sac City, Ia.

—F. A. Higgins has begun work at Benton Harbor, Mich.

—F. D. Hobson, of New Carlisle, Ind., has resigned there.

—W. H. Knapp has gone from Michigan City to Valparaiso, Ind.

—Robt. Simons, of Chetopa, Kan., will take the work at Monett, Mo.

—B. W. Bass has begun work for the Tenth street church, Paducah, Ky.

—J. W. Johnson begins work at once with the wide-awake people at Sterling, Ill.

—J. M. Baker will undertake the work at Andrews, Ind., on three Sundays of the month.

—A new church to cost about $10,000 will be dedicated, it is expected, in May, at Pendleton, Ind.

—The new building at Higginsville, Mo., costing $15,000, will be dedicated in May by F. M. Rains.

—Edward O. Sharpe, Carlinville, Ill., writes that his fifth district board can place a number of good pastors.

—The church at Greencastle, Ind., has provided for a debt of $2,200 and will soon make improvements in their building.

—Carey E. Morgan, who has had such a long spell of sickness, is still at the hospital, but there is some improvement in his condition.

—H. H. Harmon's resignation at the Tabernacle church, Columbus, came as a surprise to the congregation. He expects to return to Auburn, Neb.

—We regret very much to learn of the death of the father of Geo. H. Combs, minister of the Sixth and Prospect street Christian church at Kansas City.

—D. L. Dunkelberger, prominent in the work of northeastern Iowa, will rest for a while from active ministerial labor, and will make Charles City his home.

—The 133rd gift to the annuity fund of the Board of Church Extension has just been received, it being $900 from two friends in Nebraska. This makes $5,200 that they have given.

—The work at Billings, Mont., under John T. Webb, is progressing finely. Building lots have been secured and a house will be erected. The church was organized only a little over a year ago.

—The C. W. B. M. of Great Britain will support Miss M. L. Clark in India in the future, through the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—this, of course, making another living link.

—We learn from the church clerk that Brother Fowler has closed his pastoral work at Lehigh, Ia., where he has done a great deal of good. During the year there were 96 additions to the church.

—B. H. Hayden, of Bowmansville, Ontario, has been called to the Forest avenue church, Buffalo, N. Y., and has already commenced his labors. This is a small church but the outlook is bright for the future.

—W. C. Bartley, of Willow Springs, Mo., has been in the ministry for fifty years. He was married by Alexander Campbell in 1859. Brother Bartley is still active and does good work for the Master.

—The convention of churches of southeast Missouri will be held in Poplar Bluff this year from Wednesday night, April 26, to Friday night, April 28. All are cordially invited.

Albert Buxton, Pres.

—Marion Stevenson, of Irving Park, Chicago, is delivering his lectures this week in Arcola, Ill. Next week he gives them in Taylorville, Ill., before a union meeting of all the churches for the pastors' association.

—Jas. Small is to hold a meeting for the Broadway church, Lexington, Ky., in October.

—The Foreign Society, Cincinnati, Ohio, has received another gift of $500 on the annuity plan. It was given by a friend in Arkansas. This is an attractive method of helping in the world's evangelization, especially to older people.

—R. W. Mills changes from Mercer, Mo., to Lind, Wash., having been called to the pastorate of the church there. S. G. Griffith, state evangelist of east Washington, is to assist him in a meeting during the present month.

—Now that the Foreign Offering has been taken, the eyes of the church should turn at once to the great May Offering for Home Missions. This home work has been so long neglected that every true friend of our cause should plan for its redemption.

—A men's organization will be formed at the Christian church, Albion, Ill., and will include men of any church, and men of no church. Caspar C. Garrigues gave an address on the "Manliness of Jesus" at a meeting for men only on a recent Sunday afternoon.

—Although the building was partially destroyed by fire Feb. 5, and the work temporarily crippled, the offering for foreign missions at Saginaw, Mich., was beyond the apportionment, and the largest in the history of the congregation. J. S. Raum has charge.

—The Central church, Detroit, has reached the living link class, and Brother Tannar reports that independent of the regular offering one of its church members, Miss Nell B. Ford, supports Bruce K. Kerschner in Manilla. He was appointed on March 10 to this work.

—There are signs of progress in the church at Norwood, Ohio. Not only did it more than double its apportionment for the foreign offering, but the attendance at all the services is increasing, a ladies' aid has been organized, and material additions in the shape of a new carpet and piano are assured. Jos. D. Ormistead is the pastor.

—A. J. Campbell, minister for the past year and a half to the Cecil street church of Christ, Toronto, has, at the earnest and unanimous request of his people, reconsidered his resignation, and will remain with this church whose work has greatly prospered under his leadership. An increase of $200 in his salary has been voted by the church.

—Wren J. Grinstead, who recently took up the work at York, Neb., reports that a special appeal and a week's canvass secured $280 to meet two of three outstanding notes. The Christian Endeavor has been reorganized, primary department and teachers' class formed, and a district visitation corps is now being organized. All of which indicates that the work there is prospering.

—H. F. Lutz, who has been in evangelistic work all winter under the direction of our home board, is ill from pneumonia. The doctor thinks that he will be well again in a short time as he is getting along nicely. Brother Lutz has worked hard all winter and has very greatly built up the churches at Waynesboro and Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, under our Home Missionary Board.

—Chicago Baptists and Disciples will meet in social union on the evening of March 20, when the topic for discussion will be "The Union of Baptists and Disciples." Dean Hulbert, of the University of Chicago, is to speak for the Baptists, and it is hoped that F. D. Power and J. J. Haley on their way to the congress at Columbia, Mo., may be present to interpret the attitude of Disciples on this question. A meeting between the Baptist and Disciple ministers of St. Louis is to take place April 3.

—S. M. Bernard gave great satisfaction in his work with the South Broadway church, Denver, during its recent meeting. Brother Tyler has written to the Boulder church, where Brother Bernard is pastor, highly complimenting the young minister, and thanking the church for permitting him to engage in the Denver work.

—J. G. M. Luttenberger was selected by Barnes college, St. Louis, as the representative of its students at the inaugural. Brother Luttenberger reports that the Missouri students had a very hearty greeting from the President, who when he gave them audience, exclaimed, "Three cheers for Missouri!" Brother Luttenberger preaches half time at Bonne Terre, Mo., where there is steady growth in all departments.

—Bro. R. J. Tydings, of Washington, writes that, after an existence of about six weeks beset with adverse circumstances discouraging in the extreme, our little Fifteenth street church took its first offering for missions. There are only about 21 members, and all were not present, but ten dollars was the result. "I think," says Brother Tydings, "this indicates the kind of spirit to be found in this corner of the capital city."

—A few weeks ago we had occasion to refer to the bright outlook at Uniontown, Pa. The church building is entirely too small to accommodate the crowds that gather at the evening services. Bro. Herbert Yeuell has been preaching a series of distinctly missionary and doctrinal sermons, and the offering for the Foreign Society exceeded last year's by fifty dollars. Preparations have been made for a campaign with Evangelists James Small and Leonard Daugherty, who began on Lord's day.

—Work will soon be begun on a new church building at Fitzgerald, Ga., where N. G. Buckley is minister. The house will be built of stone, and the plans will be modern in every particular. The building will be 60x74 feet, at the corner of Lee and Jessamine streets, and the seating capacity will be about 800. This will make it by far the best church building in the city, and one of the best Christian churches in this part of Georgia, and, of course, it will be a boon to our cause in that city.

—George B. Ranshaw, field secretary of the Home Society, will campaign in Indiana attending all the district conventions of the state and visiting as many churches as possible besides, in the effort to arouse the state to the greatest offering ever given to home missions. W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism, will make a similar campaign in Kentucky. Benjamin L. Smith will campaign in Ohio with occasional trips into Pennsylvania, Illinois, Missouri; and John A. Stevens will visit the churches in Missouri; and W. M. Taylor, recently our missionary in Porto Rico, will visit the churches in Texas.

—A. M. Harvuot held the pastorate of the Central church, Cincinnati, for nine years. Miss Charlotte Nichol, his helper, resigned at the same time, and the church and ladies' aid society passed resolutions expressing their regret at the resignations, commending the fidelity, devotion, and efficiency of the pastor and his assistant, and expressing their best wishes for the future of these workers. While he will go into the real estate business Brother Harvuot has decided to undertake the organization of a new church in one of the suburbs of Cincinnati.

—E. L. Powell's church at Louisville, Ky., has just raised his salary from $3,000 to $5,000 per annum. Brother Powell has ministered there for eighteen years, and the stipend which he will henceforth receive is by no means beyond his deserts. When a congregation can afford to pay its minister handsomely they certainly ought to do so, and none of Brother Powell's preaching brethren will grudge him this expression of his congregation's approval. We wish that churches all over the land could be induced to see that the laborer is worthy of his hire. Many a farmer or business man making a large income is content with doing very little towards making life reasonably comfortable for his preacher, who often has the ability, if he pursued other than a ministerial calling, to make a great deal more money than any man in his congregation.

Ministerial Exchange.

Churches wanting meetings write me for particulars. No matter about your financial ability if you will follow instructions, which will not be difficult. J. A. Lytle, 910 W. Green St., Urbana, Ill.

I know of a first-class opening for a bank; also a furniture store for sale—one of the best opportunities in the state. Address G. W. Terrell, Clinton, Mo.

W. H. Rust, pastor of the church at Schaller, Ia., says there is a splendid opening there for a clothing and gents' furnishing store, also a general merchandise store. Schaller is a town of 1,000 people in the best farming district of northwestern Iowa. Address the pastor for particulars.

The Second church at Terre Haute, Ind., desires to employ a minister for full time—one who can and will preach the gospel to save sinners. The church can and will take care of its own flock. What we want of the minister is to bring the world to Christ by preaching his gospel. Only such need apply. The promise of harvest is good. Address J. F. Ashley, Terre Haute, Ind.

Wanted.—Good church workers, desirous to change, to locate here and help build up the cause. Fine climate, good country—cotton, corn, vegetables, fruits. Address with stamp, T. F. Richardson, minister, Box 134, Newport, Ark.

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND NEVER SUSPECT IT.

MRS. E. AUSTIN.

An interesting letter to our readers from Mrs. E. Austin, of New York City.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1902.

A little over a year ago I was taken with severe pains in my kidneys and bladder. They continued to give me trouble for over two months and I suffered untold misery. I became weak, emaciated and very much run down. I had great difficulty in retaining my urine, and was obliged to pass water very often night and day. After I had used a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, which you so kindly sent me on my request, I experienced great relief. I immediately bought of my druggist two large bottles and continued taking it regularly. I am pleased to say that Swamp-Root cured me entirely. I can now stand on my feet all day without having any bad symptoms whatever. You are at liberty to use this testimonial letter if you wish.

Gratefully yours,

Mrs. E. Austin.

19 Nassau St.

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

A Need for Ready Money.

Our National Benevolent Association has been receiving generous annuity gifts of late, but these cannot be used for current expenses during the lifetime of the annuitants. Its homes having all been crowded to their utmost capacity during this severe winter, and expenses having been extraordinarily increased, there is great need for ready money for the proper support of its hundreds of dependent ones in its orphanages, old people's homes and free hospital.

This appeal is for immediate contributions of money for the purchase of food and fuel. It is hoped there will be a generous response at once to this appeal for bread. Remittances may be sent to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Another Great Bequest.

When the will of the late Bro. Claude L. Garth, of near Georgetown, Ky., was probated it was found that he had left his estate of over $200,000 to his wife during her lifetime and had provided that after her death it should all go to the educational fund of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. This will be one of the largest donations ever made by a single Disciple of Christ for educational purposes, and it will be of great benefit in the future to indigent young men who are studying for the ministry. Brother Garth gave $20,000 to this fund about eighteen months ago.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Arkansas.

Two added here Sunday, one by letter and one by baptism. Besides other services of the day, the minister conducted a funeral service and officiated at a wedding. Also another wedding late Saturday evening.

The work here is progresssng very well, considering that we have to meet in the cold, uncomfortable court room, till the new church is finished. We had hoped to have the new building completed before this, but the severe weather stopped the work the first of December. We expect to commence the work again in a few days. We have made a hard struggle to advance since my coming here eighteen months ago. There have been fifty additions to the congregation; the membership now numbers 125. During the past year, there has been paid into the treasury from various sources, $4,398.73.

Northwest Arkansas is a prosperous, healthful and rapidly growing country. It has a delightful climate, 1300 feet above the sea level. It is becoming a great fruit growing country, and may become a leading mineral field in the future. With other attractions, the water, with its medicinal properties, makes it a great summer resort for the people of the south, and a winter resort for those of the north.

We could soon have a number of strong churches in this part of the state, if the right men would take hold of the work. If a man isn't a conscientious, sacrificing, consecrated minister, and comes to this country, he will soon be very sorry of his trip, and will join the hustling class of this country, who are always on the move.

There are a number of towns with congregations that should be doing as great or greater work than is being done here, for instance, Siloam Springs, Rogers, Eureka Springs, Harrison and Springdale. These are all good towns, ranging from 2,000 to 4,000 inhabitants, but for the most part the churches at these places have been unable to have ministers during the past year. Let us endeavor to induce the right men to labor in these fields.

Bentonville, Ark. J. W. Famuliner.

West Virginia Letter.

On last Lord's day we had five confessions and four by relation, at Dean, Wetzel county; this church was closed for about a year. The brethren after building a good substantial church employed a man opposed to a Sunday-school, and his preaching was of such a character as to discourage a congregation from a forward move. A church that is not essentially missionary cannot do any permanent good in West Virginia to-day and the people are coming to realize that more every year.

We have to eat in order to live. Action is essential to life, and if there is no activity the person is either asleep or dead. So with churches; the essential thing is the missing spirit and work. We have some churches almost asleep, and others are almost dead. The only remedy that God has in this great universe, is the missionary tonics.

They will sleep on and take their rest until they hear the missionary gospel. And it will have to be preached by someone that believes it. The hope of sleepy churches is in the fact that a missionary gospel is preached to them. The missionary spirit will enlarge the conceptions of all who study the great problem. It will put us to work for Christ.

Some grand meetings have been held in our state this year. I am at this writing preaching the gospel every night at Shinnston. On Monday, W. M. Long, of New Martinsville, will join me. We are anticipating a good meeting.

W. M. Long has been in a meeting near the Wetzel county seat with ten additions to date.

I recently spent two Lord's days at Follenshee. We appointed Geo. E. Wood, elder, H. Hubert, deacon, and Geo. H. Sharp, clerk and treasurer. Some 22 Disciples were anxious to have an organization. T. H. Proctor, of Bethany, has been employed as pastor. The foreign missionary rally at Moundsville was a great success, A. McLean had charge. The audience was so great in the afternoon that they had to carry in chairs to seat people. A. Linkletter.

Ohio.

M. E. Chatley has had a fine year's work at Ravenna. A recent meeting closed with 52 additions. Geo. Darsie, of Massillon, did the preaching. There have been nearly 100 added to the church since Brother Chatley took charge of the work, and the hearing is splendid.

The Ravenna church entertained the Kent C. E. Society, March 7.

W. F. Rothenberger goes March 1 to Chicago university to take some work. He will be succeeded at Ashtabula by a Brother Hotaling, of Chicago.

P. H. Welsheimer and wife have the deep sympathy of the brethren in the loss of their six weeks old boy.

C. A. Kleeberger is holding a meeting at Greenford, having begun Feb. 19.

The Priest-Bagby-Hackleman meeting at Columbus resulted in about 35 additions to the church. They had bad weather and sickness that almost made it impossible to carry the meeting on. Brother Priest goes March 12 to assist Brother Bagby in a meeting at Washington.

G. F. Crites is in a good meeting in the new house at Blanchester. Chas. C. Smith, the pastor, was called to Greenfield during the meeting to baptize six who had decided for Christ without a preacher being present. Miss Ida Blackwell sang for the Blanchester meeting. She will preach for Lerado church half time this year.

Wilmington now has 700 members and the house is too small. They contemplate a new building.

The Mt. Ephraim church had not met since last June but Evangelist Crites went in and rallied the dry bones and set them going again.

The Fourth avenue church in Columbus, dedicated a new home Feb. 19. The improvement in new building and remodeling the old cost about $11,000. F. M. Rains was there. In the morning service alone they got $6,200 in pledges and cash, or about $1,200 more than they asked for. A great meeting was held in the afternoon when the neighbors came to the housewarming and to congratulate. The building is stone veneer and will seat all thrown together 700. The basement under the whole house is finely finished. It is the best plant we have in Columbus. It has hardwood floor, steel ceilings, fine art glass windows and a good pipe organ. Andrew Carnegie put $650 in the collection basket for the organ fund. The church was organized Aug. 11, 1895, in a third story hall on King avenue, by T. S. Buckingham and W. J. Russell, E. S. DeMiller becoming pastor Dec. 1, 1895. They remained two years in the hall, then built the chapel on Fourth avenue and Neil. This was dedicated Nov. 7, 1897. Brother DeMiller did a most heroic work here. He closed his pastorate in December, 1901. M. E. Chatley followed him and served two years and about nine months. During this time the lot was provided for and the church grew in members constantly. Jan. 1, 1904, S. H. Forrer took the work and is the present incumbent. E. J. Meacham, of Wilmington, is helping in a meeting following the dedication. There were 25 additions Sunday, Feb. 26, and the house filled to overflowing. We know of no finer opportunity in Ohio for a good growing and influential work. May the Lord bless this church and its work.

Ashland, Greenfield, McConnellsville, Stockport, Camden, Lewisburg, Lakewood, Warrensville and large districts in Akron and Lorain have recently gone dry in local option campaigns in Ohio. We now have five whole counties entirely dry. The opposition to Gov. Herrick for re-nomination grows stronger every day and so the good work goes on.

Hiram won the state intercollegiate oratorical contest Feb. 16. This is three out of six they have won and the other three times took second place. They did not get first place last year simply because they thought it would look somewhat suspicious for them to get it every year. Hiram has no Greek letter fraternities and has not gone crazy on football but she does have the best literary societies in the state By their fruits ye shall know them. Hurrah for old Hiram! C. A. Freer.

Collinwood, Ohio.

Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, Letter.

I have neglected to congratulate the Christian-Evangelist sooner on your splendid evangelistic number of Jan. 5. It is a very helpful issue.

Bro. H. G. Kendrick, our neighbor at Hagerstown, Md., had M. E. Harlan, from Brooklyn, in a meeting of two weeks. The writer heard one sermon on "The Church." Our brother from "way down east" spoke with no uncertain sound of the old landmarks. There were 16 additions. Brother Kendrick expects more will be added.

We regret to learn that Bro. H. F. Lutz is ill at his home at Harrisburg, where he recently closed a long evangelistic siege with 23 additions. A United Presbyterian brother whom he baptized during their meeting is a good leader in song and otherwise, and the congregation is faithfully keeping the work going, and has reached its apportionment for foreign missions. As I had an appointment at Ringgold, Md., on Lord's day evening, some of our brethren after young people's meeting went to hear Chas. Scanlon, of Maryland, on "Temperance," and were much pleased with his address. He is kept in the field by the temperance committee of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church. Their minister here informs me they intend to place the temperance work on the same basis as their missionary boards, and send ten men up and down the land all the time in this great work. What are the Disciples of Christ doing in this matter? Most of the preachers among us stand right on the question.

The same evening some of our brethren went to another neighboring church. The preacher was an old man who was asked to preach because it was the fifty-first anniversary of his entering the ministry. After reading his text he began something as follows:

"The Campbellites, who call themselves

Christians, come here where we Reformed and Lutherans and Presbyterians and Methodists are at peace with one another, and disturb our peace by telling us our creeds are wrong. They are trying to unite all the churches by starting another denomination in the community. They say they have no creed. It is the rankest heresy I ever heard. Paul told Timothy to 'hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me.' " He then discoursed on the creed for which he stands. I told our brethren not to be disturbed. That's the kind of stimulant we've grown on. I'm thinking some of the conditions here indicate there was need of disturbing the religious plea of the community.

First, Because a man with the reputation this preacher sustains was permitted to preach in any pulpit in the place.

Second, A leading congregation here with 700 members is building a fine house for the worship of God and one of their plans to get money to build a church that will eclipse all the rest in town, is to have people pay 10 cents for a guess at the number of seeds in a pumpkin. The one guessing the nearest got a fine doll. That is straight gambling, as some of the judges have declared progressive euchre to be gambling, and the organist of one of the churches here is prominent in the Friday club, that gives progressive euchre parties regularly.

A member of another church, who doesn't attend very regularly, had a shock to his faith recently by being invited by the choir leader of his church to go in to the bar and take a drink. A prominent man in another church permits the rent of a room in a building he is part owner of, to a bibulous club, and so we are trying to disturb the peace, and hold up a higher ideal of Christian living, as well as New Testament doctrine. We are not succeeding perfectly, for on Christmas day one of our members partook of an intoxicant, and came to the evening services and created a disturbance, but we gave no rest to the case until he had acknowledged his sin before the church and is at work again. One of our young men, a weak babe in Christ, went to a public sale and got drunk, was arrested and placed in jail. The jail was visited and he has promised when liberated to come back and try again. Thus we endeavor to discipline some of those disgracing our Master, and build them up in the faith. Many of our members are active and earnest, and we are working hard to get a church home. J. A. Hopkins.

Texas.

Howard L. Magee joins the Texas ministry for the present at Pecos. B. F. Wilson resigns at Brownwood and moves to Fort Worth. B. B. Sanders, our veteran evangelist, is bombarding Baton Rouge, La. We have loaned him to this work for a short time. Texas cannot spare him long and only where there is some specially hard work to do.

"A member" gives $600 for Texas missions. The Missouri example is infectious. This is $500 more than was ever before given by one person at one time for Texas missions. Our sincere prayer is that others may speedily follow this example. Let us hope that the day for larger liberality for the state mission work is at hand. We are preaching the gospel in Texas in at least three tongues.

In three district conventions held recently there has been a marked increase in attendance, enthusiasm of the permanent sort, and the pledges have been double the amount pledged in the same districts last year.

Fort Worth will probably be the first of our Texas cities to employ per annum a city evangelist. This move began with the Tabernacle church, S. G. Inman minister.

Dallas is also moving in the direction of a city evangelist, and will prove a close second to Fort Worth in this much needed work.

We now have county evangelists in Collin, Hunt, Dallas and Stephens. Cook county is planning for an evangelist, besides, we have ten organized districts, making fifteen in all affiliating with the state board.

A spring campaign is on in Texas. Arthur W. Jones is in a good meeting at Santa Anna.

The writer is aiding Geo. H. Morrison in a meeting at Oak Cliff. H. S. Saxton and wife are leading the singing.

By the time this is in print we hope to have inaugurated a dozen or more missionary meetings in Texas.

"The Holy Spirit and prayer in evangelism" is timely. We are growing more spiritual and prayerful and less pugnacious, but not less loyal to God's word.

The citizens of Waco are contributing $5,000 toward completing and beautifying our Texas university, already perhaps the most valuable school building owned by the Disciples of Christ.

Now, Mr. Editor, if you would see Texas at its best come over to our state convention, May 15-19, to be held in the university building at North Waco, where your thousands of Texas friends will give you a hearty Texas welcome. J. C. Mason.

Nebraska Secretary's Letter.

The state evangelist's meeting at Kearney closed Feb. 21, with 26 added to the church —a material strengthening. He is now at Elwood in an effort to get that work more firmly established.

The state secretary spent Lord's day, Feb. 26, at Nebraska City and Plattsmouth, talking state work. John T. Smith, one of our veterans, has accepted the work at Nebraska City, and has begun work. This church has been badly run down by lack of pastoral oversight for about a year, and will be a difficult field. We are glad to have Brother Smith working in Nebraska again. Two added there by letter Feb. 26.

D. A. Youtzy is in his sixth year at Plattsmouth. The work there is in fine condition.

The Lincoln First church reports six added to the congregation during February. Northside church, Omaha, had the same number during the month. The latter church is endeavoring to get their building on to a new location.

H. J. Kirchstein, pastor at Northside, Omaha, and R. A. Schell, of Hebron, were in Lincoln Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, on committee work relating to the program for the state convention, Aug. 1-6, 1905. The committee is prepared to say that the program will be the best we have ever had. The details are working out rapidly, and it is expected that we can announce the most prominent features soon.

The committee on dining hall has begun its work, and the house will be built on the best lines for comfort and convenience. The state society will have charge of it for a few years at least, until the structure and necessary furniture are paid for from the profits.

The tabernacle plans are maturing. Our architect has been hindered by sickness from getting out the perfected design.

J. B. White has been recalled for another year at North Bend.

D. S. Domer, of White City, Kan., has entered upon the pastorate at Beaver City. Brother Harris' meeting still continues.

The Burton-Park meeting at Hastings outgrew the house, and they are now meeting in the M. E. house, which was kindly offered to them. With largely increased audiences, due to larger room, the meeting continues to deepen in power. Fifteen were added the first two weeks. H. S. Gilliam is the pastor.

Melvin Putman is at Talmage in an effort to establish the work at that place. We have a successful church in the country, and meeting has been held in the town for some time.

J. E. Wilson reports his meeting at Wray, Col., closed with 11 additions. He is the regular pastor at Bartley and Indianola.

Janes and Lintt are now in a very successful meeting at Marshalltown, Ia., with 32 added the first two weeks. Brother Lintt has been with C. A. Young, at Vincennes, Ind., where Wm. Oeschger is pastor, and with Allan Wilson, at Terre Haute, Ind. He will be with Brother Wilson next at Temple, Texas.

J. S. Beem and wife are at Fall River, Kan., in a meeting. Could be had in Nebraska for a couple of meetings.

H. A. Denton has resigned at Rising City, to take effect April 1. Foreign missions has the right of way this month; $250,000 this year is the mark set by the national convention. This would be 25 cents each member, not quite. The first Lord's day in March is every Lord's day until the offering has been taken. Money should be sent to F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, Ohio. W. A. Baldwin.

SUPERIOR MERIT.

Remarkable Curative Properties of a Remedy for Indigestion and Stomach Weakness.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a preparation for the cure of dyspepsia and the various forms of indigestion and stomach trouble, owes its great success as a cure for these troubles to the fact that it is prepared for disease and weakness of the stomach and digestive organs only, and is not recommended or advised for any other disease.

It is not a cure-all, but for any stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the safest, most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; rest is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the stomach unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist in the digestion of food.

That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do, one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs, or similar wholesome foods, they will digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and rest and nourishment is nature's cure for any weakness.

In persons run down in flesh and appetite these tablets build up the strength and increase flesh, because they digest flesh-forming food which the weak stomach cannot do, they increase the flow of gastric juice and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour watery risings.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

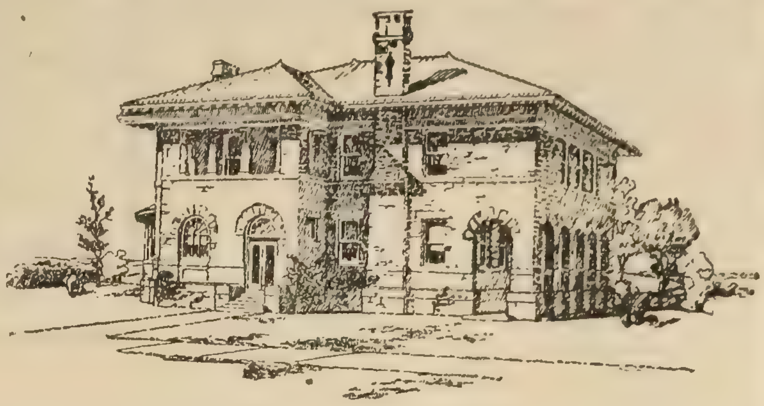
Bible Chair Hall at Kansas University.

We give herewith the architect's design of the new hall for the Bible chair in connection with the University of Kansas, at Lawrence. As will be seen, it is a very pleasing building, and from the floor plans we gather that it will be a very practical and useful one. It is a simple form of Spanish architecture, and it is proposed to build it of local native stone, with a certain amount of trimmings in dressed work. Spanish tiles will cover the roof. It is designed with a view to making a complete and well equipped building in the first instance, and with a possibility of future extension which will add fully one-third to its capacity. It will be finished throughout in hard wood, will have its own heating plant, and will be equipped with all modern sanitary accommodations. The general dimensions are 68 feet in length, and 46 feet in width. The total cost is estimated at $25,000.



On the ground floor there will be a library and study alcoves, two large class rooms, and the office of administration and cloak rooms. The second story will contain two large lecture rooms, each capable of seating 175 persons, and so arranged that they may be thrown together, giving a seating capacity of 350. Two smaller rooms adjoining may be used as studies or in preparation for the lecture work. In the basement provision is made for the custodian of the building, and the lighter forms of gymnastic work, including a bowling alley.

The growth of the Bible chair at Kansas university has been marked. The enrollment increased from 80 the first year to 280 the fourth year. About 700 students have received instruction during the four years. The growth of the work calls for a hall adapted to meeting the opportunities presented. All together $12,668 have been subscribed towards the amount needed. Prof. Wallace C. Payne has charge of the work and will gladly receive gifts or correspond with anyone interested in this movement if he be addressed at 1300 Mt. Oread avenue, Lawrence, Kansas.

As our readers know, this work is a child of the C. W. B. M.

The Florida Convention.

With the Jacksonville church as hostess of the convention, an atmosphere of brotherliness was assured. I have not attended a convention where the fellowship was sweeter.

With F. M. Rains representing the F. C. M. S., Howard Cree the A. C. M. S., C. C. Smith the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, and G. L. Snively our benevolences, the people heard the message they needed about these ministries. The Church Extension Board was not so fortunate, as it devolved on this scribe to exploit its claims.

It was the common opinion that we reached high water mark in the history of Florida missionary work so far as the past is concerned, and the plans laid at the convention insure even greater success the coming year if we are faithful to the vision we have received.

The brethren are especially grateful to the national C. W. B. M. board for the presence and helpful counsel, not only in the specific work of the women but in the work of the general convention as well, of Mrs. Atwater, who proved herself eloquent in speech and wise in council.

There were four new churches organized and $1,000 raised for state work this year. We are sanguine for the future. Three evangelists will be kept in the field, a number of pastors of small churches at strategic points will be assisted, and an earnest effort made to enlist more of the churches of the state in missionary work. J. P. ROWLISON, Cor. Sec.

Kentucky University Letter.

The celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the removal of Kentucky university from Harrodsburg to Lexington, promises to be a big event in the life of the university. The celebration will occur some time during commencement next June. Old students from all parts of the United States will reassemble and be heard on the different occasions during commencement week.

Word was received here several days ago of the destruction by fire of the home of Merrit Owen and wife, of Washington, N. C. Brother Owen graduated from the College of the Bible in 1902, and has many friends here who regret to hear of his loss. Mrs. Owen before her marriage was Miss Katie Lemon, of this city.

Joseph Severance, of Newtown, Ky., has left the ministry and accepted a position with the Hagan Gas Engine Co., of Winchester, Ky. Brother Severance is an old K. U. boy and his many friends regret to hear of his leaving the ministry.

C. C. Redgrave gave his celebrated stereopticon lecture, "In the Footsteps of the Pioneers," at the Broadway church Sunday evening, Feb. 19. It was given again by request in Morrison chapel on Thursday evening, March 2. Brother Redgrave's lecture is interesting, instructive and very helpful.

Jas. L. Kelly from the College of Arts and Jas. E. Thomas, H. F. Ficklin and Harry Shafer of the College of the Bible attended the state convention of the Y. M. C. A. at Owensboro.

The celebration of Washington's birthday by the literary societies was unusually interesting this year. A large crowd was present and the following were the speakers: V. C. Carpenter from Cecropia; Miss Mayme Sampson from Cornelia; R. N. Simpson from Phileusebia; M. L. Hurst from Periclea; Miss Lydia Berry from Alethea; and A. F. Hensey from Philothea.

Pres. J. W. McGarvey was seventy-six years old on March 1. He celebrated the event by an informal reception at his home that evening, at which time he and Mrs. McGarvey received the congratulations and good wishes of their many friends. E. B. B.

A Voice From Egypt.

After ten years in the work in Philadelphia, ten difficult but very precious years, we have located in this pleasant little college town of Albion, which has a population of about 1,500. The five churches are Congregational (100 members), Christian (260 members), Cumberland Presbyterian (200), Methodist Episcopal (150) and Episcopal (about 75). The Southern Collegiate Institute, nominally Congregational, numbers 100 students. Of these students nearly half are Disciples. The principal of this school is one of our strong, active members. One of our opportunities here is to endow a chair for Bible and other work in this institute. A movement is now under way to raise a $50,000 endowment for the school. The success of this movement will mean that at an early date 100 or more Disciples will be numbered among these students.

If You Are Prudent

Why not be insured, and save money at the same time? Our new policy on the endowment plan is the best insurance contract issued, and is meeting with great favor. Our booklet, "How and Why," sent free on request, you will find interesting, and perhaps instructive.

Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co.,

921-923-925 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

We have ten Christian churches in the county. Of these Albion employs a man full time; Brown's, Little Prairie, West Salem and West Village, half time; Bone Gap, Ellery, Kitchen's Bridge, Marion and Shiloh, fourth time. "Organization" and "Co-operation" are coming watchwords. Geo. T. Smith, of Brown's, is president of the newly formed county organization. The April meeting will be held at Albion.

The Albion church is earnest and loyal. All the high days of the brotherhood will be observed. A committee on missions and benevolences is preparing a budget for the year. No interest will be slighted. All will be remembered as liberally as is practicable. The formation of an "advisory council," composed of representatives from each department of our work, marks, we believe, the beginning of a new epoch in this church. The fundamental purpose of this council is to "emphasize each department and to unify all." The first session lasted over three hours. These were three of the most suggestive and thought-provoking hours of our lives.

Education day made an auspicious debut into this congregation. The faculty and students of our high school and the college were our guests of honor. Nearly one hundred of these marched to the church in a body and occupied reserved seats. Each school sang a favorite school hymn. The president, also the principal of the college and the county superintendent of public schools, participated in the exercises. C. C. Garrigues gave the address: "Education: its motive, its process, its result." Four hundred were in attendance and many were turned away.

During the past four months 22 have united with the congregation. The church has spent $500 on repairs and furnishings. A mission study class of 15 has recently been organized. And now "A Christian paper in every Christian home" is one of our mottoes.

CASPAR C. GARRIGUES.

Valuable Information for Advertisers

The well known American advertising agency, Lord & Thomas of Chicago, New York and St. Louis, has issued the 1905 edition of their "Pocket Directory of the American Press." This book is compact and convenient in size and arrangement but none the less complete, comprehensive and correct. It consists of 800 pages, handsomely printed and bound in morocco leather, with gold edges and gold stamping. It contains a vast amount of valuable advertising information together with the circulation claimed and full data on all newspapers, magazines and periodicals published in the United States, all American Possessions and Canada, with the latest Federal Census, also special lists of mediums by classes, such as Agricultural, Religious, Weekly, Foreign and Co-operative Papers. An entirely new and very useful feature is a complete directory of Outdoor Display. Everyone interested in advertising should have a copy of this book because it is a convenient source of valuable information, and clearly points the way to judicious advertising, the aim of every man who is in business to make money.

The Chapman Meetings in Denver.

in the hands of the finance committee before the formal inauguration of the work. The expenses here referred to were the railroad fare of the evangelists and singers, their entertainment at the Adams hotel, and advertising. The preachers agreed to accept as compensation for their services the free will offerings of the people at the conclusion of the campaign. A supervisor was appointed in each district. Every section was reached by this movement, simultaneously. Ushers were selected in the respective districts representing the congregations co-operating. These men and women were personal workers rather than ushers in the usual meaning of the word usher. Much was made of prayer. Singing was a prominent feature of the meetings.

The unity of Christians in this great work was one of the most remarkable features. The pastors were joined together in one mind. They spoke the same things. Not a discordant word was pronounced. The people were a unit and had a mind to work. Ecclesiastical lines were invisible. The evangelists did not reveal their denominational connections. When questioned about their church relations there was no effort to conceal their place in the ecclesiastical geography of the day. There was unity among the pastors, among the churches, among the people, between Dr. Chapman and the various committees, between Dr. Chapman and his evangelists, between the evangelists themselves, and between the evangelists and their singers.

The preaching was simple, earnest, sweet-spirited and, in the main, Biblical. The preaching was sane and symmetrical to a remarkable degree. There was not a crank in the company. No man rode a hobby, and the burden of the preaching was: Man is a sinner. Man needs a Savior. Jesus is able and willing to save all who will come to him. The condition of deliverance from sin is coming to Christ. Whoever surrenders, absolutely and unconditionally, to the Christ, will certainly be saved by him. But little was said on the subject of baptism. One of the preachers, Henry Ostrom, put the place of baptism as well as I ever heard the subject presented. He did it in an effective recital of the story of Philip's work in Samaria. I was told that Dr. Chapman, in his last meeting, spoke in terms clear and strong concerning the duty of baptism and church membership. Not a disparaging word was spoken concerning the churches and their pastors. The tone of the evangelists, at this point, was in strong contrast with the utterances of revival preachers a few years ago. The campaign for the Christ in Denver moved on a high plane. The preachers were gentlemen.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, accompanied by eight evangelists, and as many singers, began work in Denver, Jan. 4, and concluded Jan. 23.

The preparations had been so thorough that the preachers were met the first evening by large audiences. The congregations increased in size and the interest deepened as the days passed. The climax was reached in a midweek Sabbath. This was Friday, Jan. 20. Not less than five hundred business houses closed from 11:30 to 2 o'clock, to give their employes an opportunity to hear the word preached. Not a prominent business house was open. Some saloon keepers closed their places voluntarily! The mayor of the city closed the offices under his control. The state legislature adjourned. The governor of the state and the mayor of the city attended the meeting at the Tabor opera house, and heard Dr. Chapman preach. Sixty of the churches were open at 10 o'clock in the morning of this Sabbath day, to give the pastors an opportunity to meet their people. At noon a half dozen theaters, opera houses and halls were open down town for praise, prayer, and preaching. Thousands of people were on the streets unable to find even standing room in any one of these places. This was an occasion never to be forgotten.

The arrangements for bringing to fruitage the awakened interest were excellent. The following is a copy of the card used in each place of meeting evening after evening.

I have an honest desire to live a Christian life.

Name...
Address..
Church or Pastor's Reference....................
Usher's Name...

The cards that were signed were distributed among the pastors every day. Each person signing a card received a letter in a few hours from the evangelist in whose meeting the signature was obtained, containing a word of encouragement, and an offer of help in every way possible. Each pastor was supposed, in person or by a representative, to see, at once, every one expressing a preference for him or his church. No man or woman, no boy or girl who said, "I have an honest desire to live a Christian life," was permitted to go on unnoticed. This was the plan. I do not think of a better.

It is too soon to speak of permanent results. At a meeting of the pastors of our churches Monday morning, Feb. 27, 239 additions to our five congregations were reported since the beginning of this campaign. This would be an average of about forty-seven to each church. There were about sixty churches co-operating in this work. If this average obtained throughout the city, there have been added to the churches in the neighborhood of three thousand members. I see no reason for thinking that the Disciples of Christ received more than their share of the immediate results of the Chapman meetings. Our pastors were active in the work. Only one, W. Bayard Craig, was prominent. Only one of our houses of worship was used as a place of meeting.

Looking back upon the movement and surveying the field, considering also moral and spiritual conditions, I am prepared to say that the union evangelistic campaign was a blessing to Denver. B. B. TYLER.

Another Successful Meeting at Joplin, Mo.

State Bible-school secretary, W. A. Moore, of Mexico, Mo., and singer, L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., have just concluded a meeting with the south Joplin church, J. W. Baker, minister, which under all the circumstances will rank with our other great meetings recently held in this place. It lasted 33 days and resulted in 121 additions, bringing their total membership up to almost 550. Not more than 10 were from the First church and almost all were grown. About 25 are from various denominations. The first meeting this church ever held was conducted by Brother Moore with 117 added. Never was the simple gospel preached with greater clearness and tenderness. Brother Moore fills the requirement, "speaking the truth in love," as nearly as any evangelist the writer has ever heard. Brother Sprague's work has won him a warm place in the hearts of Joplin people. The remarkable thing was that the audiences and interest continued unabated through the worst blizzard this section has had for over a quarter of a century. It is confidently believed that with fair weather the results would have been doubled. There were 15 added the last Sunday and six at the last service which was in the nature of a farewell meeting. Brother Baker has thus led this church in less than a year and a half to these proportions and his work is only begun. A new modern building and a thousand members is looked for there in five years.

Bible-School Notes.

Jesse T. Craig, the long-time pastor at Poplar Bluff, has been employed as field man for southeast Missouri in place of Brother Head, who has resigned. While many will regret that Brother Head, who has worked so hard and faithfully, has closed his work with the board, all who know Brother Craig will rejoice to know that we have secured him for this very important field. He is now in a meeting at Flat River.

R. B. Havener is at his usual trick again—another building is under construction as a result of his organization.

Let us plan a hundred new schools this spring. W. H. McClain says, "Wherever there are 15 or 20 children there should be a Bible-school." That's right. Now, brethren, don't you know of a place where there should be a Bible-school organized? Write me.

I have closed a meeting at south Joplin with 121 additions. J. W. Baker is pastor. L. D. Sprague led the music. With such men the meeting could hardly be otherwise than successful, even though the weather has been cold. W. A. MOORE.

Kansas Fourth District Missionary Convention.

The fourth district convention will be held at Yates Center, April 4 6. The Yates Center church is making extensive preparations to entertain all delegates free. The new church building just dedicated is one of the finest in the state. The district board has worked hard to make this a great convention and the co-operation of the pastors is asked in securing a number of delegates from every church in the district. Will not every department of each church send a delegate?

Indifference and failure to work up the meeting will insure failure, while enthusiasm and work, bringing out the people, will insure a success that will be a credit to the district and an honor to the cause.

Entertainment free. Send your name to Bro. J. G. Slick, pastor at Yates Center, he will see that you have a home while there.

G. F. BRADFORD, president.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, March 6.—God greatly blessed our meeting of two weeks with the First and Magnolia avenue churches with 81 added, nearly half by baptism. Brother Smither said the attendance and results were the best ever seen in a meeting in the First church. Prof. J. Walter Wilson led the music. We begin at Redlands to-night.—Sumner T. Martin.

Norwalk, March 5.—Four additions by letter and one by confession during the past month.—J. R. Jolly, minister.

CHINA.

Nanking, Feb. 2.—We had 11 baptisms a week ago Sunday. We held a week's meeting in the boys' school recently with the above results. They are fine boys and we expect much from them in the future. Day before yesterday was the commencement of the girls' school. All the exercises were of a high order and the two graduates read essays which showed much thought and research.—Frank Garrett.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, March 7.—The following additions were reported at ministers' meeting yesterday: Ninth street (W. R. D. Winters, assistant pastor), one by letter; Fifteenth street (J. E. Stuart), one by statement; Vermont avenue (F. D. Power), four by letter; H street church (J. Murray Taylor, pastor, and J. J. Taylor, evangelist), 20 additions. E. B. Bagby has just closed a meeting at Columbus where there were 39 additions during and immediately following the meeting. W. S. Priest begins a meeting at Ninth street on March 12. FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg.—We go in a few days to St. Petersburg. We have a little band trying to establish New Testament Christianity in this important center. We ask the prayers of many.—E. L. Frazier, H. H. Saunders.

IDAHO.

Cora, March 3.—Evangelist Morton H. Wood, with Miss Mattie Bennison as singer, just closed one of the greatest meetings in the history of the Disciples, not in numbers but in uniting Christians of all denominations. The meeting was held in a school house in the country ten miles from town. There were only three members of the church of Christ when Brother Wood came; he preached 15 sermons, and there were 28 confessions and 42 baptisms. It was just at the breaking up of winter, and the roads were almost impassable, but there was a good attendance and the best interest. Few of the people here had ever heard the Disciples' plea. At the close he organized with more than 60 members, almost all Christian people in the neighborhood uniting upon the Bible and the Bible alone. We also raised enough in cash and pledges to pay for our meeting.—Anna G. Briggs, clerk.

Freese, March 3.—Just closed a meeting which lasted 13 days at Cora. We started in with two members, the rest of the community being divided into all kinds of sectarianism; but we captured the entire community. There were 67 additions—47 by baptism and 20 by statement from the denominations. Our meeting at Waverly, Wash., closed Feb. 13, having been conducted for four weeks, with 100 additions. They have rented a hall and have organized a S. S. and Endeavor society with an average attendance so far of 111 pupils and the money is nearly raised and the work begun to build a church. We are now in a meeting at Freese for a few days. Have preached two sermons; four added last night. We are to begin at Fairfield, Wash., March 9. I have with me the Misses Bennison, of Waverly, as singers and personal workers.—Morton H. Wood, evangelist.

It takes a good dealer to sell right lamp-chimneys when wrong ones pay so much better.

Macbeth.

The Index tells you, in ten minutes, all you need to know for comfort with lamps and the saving of chimney-money; sent free; do you want it?

Macbeth, Pittsburgh.

Caldwell, March 3.—I have just returned from Roseberry, where I closed a short meeting; I preached nine sermons and organized a church of 40 members—23 by baptism, 17 by statement. They want a preacher and will build a house of worship this summer. Roseberry is located in the center of a beautiful and productive valley on the Payette river and is a fine place to live.—H. C. Varner.

ILLINOIS.

[By Telegraph.]

Paris, March 11.—Charles Reign Scoville and De Loss Smith are here; 101 added in the first nine days, and exactly 200 in the first 17 days. This is the greatest spiritual awakening in the history of the city. No bitter antagonisms, but a great uplift. We look for greater things to follow.—Finis Idleman, pastor.

Champaign, March 9.—Sixty added at end of three weeks, and town deeply stirred by our meeting. The evangelist is John W. Marshall, Waco, Texas, and C. E. Millard is the singer.

Thomson, March 5.—One added by confession and baptism yesterday morning.—Cecil C. Carpenter.

DeLand, March 6.—We had six baptisms at the regular services yesterday. This makes 12 in three weeks. During our meeting recently we had three from the Baptists.—T. W. Lowman.

Rock Island, March 6.—Closed revival meeting with Lockhart and Garmong, evangelists, March 2. Meeting lasted 24 days; 205 added—175 baptisms, 15 from other religious bodies, 15 by letter. Brother Lockhart held fellowship meeting last night and addressed new members on obligations to the church, financial among others—and with urging the new members made weekly subscriptions to amount of $800 per year. Church voted to raise pastor's salary $300 at meeting for church and community.—O. W. Lawrence.

Tuscola, March 3.—Meeting closed here Sunday night with 34 additions. One of the best meetings Tuscola Christian church has held in years. The good work of Brother Davis, pastor, was very beneficial to the church and the membership was spiritually strengthened.—O. L. Parker.

Denver, March 6.—The meeting conducted by G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, closing a little over a week ago, was a success. There were 12 confessions and 11 from other bodies. The congregation gave one-third more for foreign missions than was asked by the Foreign Society.

INDIANA.

Corydon.—Our meeting of three and one-half weeks closed March 1, with 46 additions, 44 of which were baptisms. The majority of these were young men and boys. The minister, Frederick Grimes, was assisted in the meeting by H. Randal Lookabill, of Crawfordsville. This revival, in point of baptisms, was the greatest ever held in Corydon.—Sallie K. Jones.

Laporte, March 9.—Our recent meeting was a great success; 18 were added. The church is hopeful and greatly strengthened. I have decided to remain indefinitely.—Geo. E. Hicks.

Bloom and the church at Rantoul, Ill. The results there were 17 additions.—Guy B. Williamson and wife, singers.

The graduating class of the high school, Brownsburg, attended services at the Christian church, Sunday night, March 5, and heard the baccalaureate sermon by E. B. Scofield. The church gave more than appraisement for foreign missions.

New Albany.—Two more by confession and baptism at regular services.—Wm. A. Ward, Park church.

Kewanna, March 10.—Five baptisms last Lord's day. Meeting of 25 days closed with but six accessions—one by statement. By request I continue here until April 1.—J. G. Shaw.

Noblesville.—The Martin family is engaged in a meeting here, with good interest.

New Albany, March 10.—S. M. Martin has been the occasion of more religious conversation and more Bible reading than any evangelist who ever came to this city. People are interested and are giving up their human creeds for Christ and the New Testament. Five accessions last night, 81 to date.—B. F. Cato.

ook charge, January, 1904.—W. F. Hamann.

Dawson, March 7.—We closed a three and a half weeks' meeting at Hopkins, with 22 additions: 17 by baptism, three by letter and two from the Baptists. The interest was fine, though the weather was bad. We organized a Junior Christian Endeavor, and added 12 members to the C. W. B. M. Frank McCallon is the pastor. We began here March 4 with good prospects.—C. O. McFarland and wife, King City.

Dixon, March 9.—Our meeting here one week old with seven added; crowded house. Brother Couch, one of the Kimberlin Heights' students, is now in Pulaski county, and is doing good work. J. R. Blunt has closed a meeting at Newtown, where he and his brother recently won over a young evangelist of the Congregational church.—Joseph Gaylor, state evangelist.

MONTANA.

Billings, March 6.—The church here was organized a little over a year ago. The first regular pastorate began Sept. 1, when I was called to take up the work. The first annual business meeting has just been held. The reports filled us with joy and pardonable pride. The pastor's report covered a period of six months during which he has served the church. The part relating to membership showed a net gain of over 45 per cent. The ladies' society has increased in number from eight to twenty-two. During the year the society raised over $175. Fine building lots have been purchased and we expect to build this year. Two added by letter last Lord's day.—John T. Webb, pastor.

NEBRASKA.

Valparaiso, March 5.—Since our last report there have been three additions to the church, two by confession and one by letter. All departments doing good work.—J. E. Chase, pastor.

Clay Center, March 6.—Our meeting closed last night with 37 added, 30 by primary obedience, seven otherwise. Much good has been done in every way, and new life instilled into every department. Simpson Ely was our evangelist. The church is in splendid condition. —A. G. Smith, pastor.

OHIO.

Elyria, March 6.—We are in a great revival here with James Small. The meeting is three weeks old and we have had 70 additions. Will continue another week.—John P. Sala.

Garrettsville, March 6.—One confession and one from the United Brethren since last report. —Garry L. Cook, Hiram, O.

Newark, March 6.—Eight added yesterday—five by confession.—H. Newton Miller.

Athens, March 6.—Seven additions at the regular service yesterday.—T. L. Lowe.

Wooster.—The work moves on slowly without special meetings. Accessions are frequent. Since Jan. 1, 1905, there have been 12 by confession and baptism, four by statement and one by letter. House to house teaching is effective.—W. L. Neal.

Columbus, March 9.—The Central church in this city has closed a short meeting which added 49 to our membership, of whom 19 were baptized. E. B. Bagby, of Washington, did the preaching. His presence in the homes of our people was a benediction and a delight. Bro. W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, led. His illness the first week of the meeting greatly hindered him. We had the worst weather of the year, and so many of the church folks were sick that little personal work could be done. The meeting should have gone on two weeks more. We have received 55 since Jan. 1.—Walter Scott Priest.

OKLAHOMA.

Granton.—Meeting closed here March 1 with seven added. Eld. O. A. Walker, Woods county evangelist, led us. Sickness and bad weather hindered.—C. F. Vaughn.

Ingersoll, March 8.—Closed a meeting at Perkins, T. L. Noblitt minister, with 14 accessions, 12 baptisms, two by statement.—M. B. Ingle.

Shawnee.—Sixty-nine additions to the First church. I am called for an unlimited time as pastor.—Granville Snell.

Perkins, March 9.—Our meeting of 36 days' duration, M. B. Ingle, evangelist, closed last Lord's day. Much good was accomplished in the name of the Savior. During the meeting 14 persons became members of the congregation—two by statement and 12 by primary obedience.—T. L. Noblitt.

OREGON.

La Grande, March 3.—Fifty-six added—38 by primary acceptance of Christ and 18 by letter and statement, in a meeting of 18 days. The congregation is greatly encouraged. J. V. Coombs did the preaching. This meeting means much for this mission church.—O. H. King.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Elwood City, March 6.—Our revival began yesterday. There were nine additions, four by confession and five by letter. Great enthusiasm prevails. Bible-school attendance shows nine increase over the previous Lord's day. Our motto is "Each one win one."—F. F. Schultz, minister.

TEXAS.

Weatherford.—Our series of meetings conducted by Evangelist Richard S. Martin, of New York city, came to a close Sunday evening. On Sundays the church refused to accommodate the people, and often as many were turned away as were admitted. The meeting resulted in 24 by primary obedience and very much good every way to the church and city. The Central church has much wealth, and now stands at the very head of all the churches, with an unmistakably bright future.—Ernest C. Mobley.

WASHINGTON.

North Yakima, March 6.—Our great meeting continues, 105 added and many more are deeply interested. Brother Updike is preaching with his oldtime power. The largest theater in the city was thronged last night to hear his great sermon on baptism.—Morton L. Rose.

WISCONSIN.

Milwaukee, Mar. 9.—Our special meetings closed last Sunday evening with 56 additions as follows: three by letter, nine by statement and 44 by primary obedience. Of the last seven are yet to be baptized. Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Powell, of Wabash, Ind., were the evangelists. We all feel that we have had a most excellent meeting and are deeply grateful to these friends for their efficient work in our midst. We shall organize at once a Christian culture class for the new converts and thus try hard to keep the exit door closed. We are looking forward to a fine year's work.—C. M. Kreidler.

Christian Endeavor.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR COMRADESHIP: WITH OTHER CHURCHES AT HOME, AND WITH DISTANT LANDS.—Acts 17:24-28; John 17:20, 21.

For the Leader.

The Christian Endeavorers among the Disciples of Christ stand for certain great principles. Among these is the union of God's people. This has been the special aim of our fellowship all these years. The movement that is to-day known as the Christian church or the Disciples of Christ had its organic beginning in a desire to see all the people who believe in worshiping God recognize their oneness. The divisions grated upon the tender soul of Thomas Campbell. He knew the will of the Lord as expressed in his memorable prayer was that all his followers might be one. He remembered that the Savior desired this as a means of securing belief upon him in all the world. Our young people stand to day for this plea for the union of Christian people. So let us to-night look over the field as it presents itself to us at the beginning of the twentieth century.

For the Members.

1. Jesus prayed first for his apostles and those who are preaching his gospel. He wanted them to be one. This is important. Often we hear it charged that the people would soon come together if the preachers would let them. Is this true? One can hardly accept it as true. It is not true as stated, but there is no doubting the fact that the preachers are not always as willing to have union realized as many of the laymen. May they be leaders in this as in other matters spiritual.

2. Jesus prayed for those who should believe on him through the apostles' preaching. He prayed that they might be one. That unity such as characterized the relations between the Savior and the Father might obtain between all believers. There were many reasons then why they should be united. In unity there is strength. But the chief reason, and the one given in the prayer of Jesus, was that the world might be led to believe on him. It follows, then, that a divided church and a divided ministry is a source or a cause of skepticism. Jesus' word for it.

3. As a cause of unbelief we note its work in our own land. We are often confronted with a statement that there is no way of telling whether Christianity is right or not; that there is no way of finding out what the Bible really teaches, for those who believe it do not get the same message out of it. And why are not the views of some one not following the Bible just as much entitled to recognition? This is a use made of the divided state of Christendom, whether it is sincerely made or not, it is made. It could not be made if the churches were united as Jesus wants them to be. Upon the mission field division is still more confusing to unbelievers. The use made of it there by the opposition is more telling than that made at home. Let us do all we can to remove this stone of stumbling and rock of offense.

4. Among the agencies that have wrought for the union of the people of God none has been more successful than Christian Endeavor. It is God's great unifier in the modern world. Have we not seen its blessed work in the great union conventions? Not only a unifier of divided churches, but of the races of the world and the nations of men. Here is a great consecration meeting at the close of an international convention. The roll of states is called. They stand from all the states, every Protestant creed joining in the service. The lands afar are called. From England, Ireland, France, Germany, Holland, Scotland come responses—a song, a testimony, a prayer. Then the oriental nations are called. Will there be anyone from there? Yes. India responds, then China, then Japan, and then Persia is called. There is a pause. Is it to pass? Just now two women rise far back of the choir and sing a consecration. Yes, it is calling the nations to walk in the ways of the Lord.

Quiet Hour Thought.

What have I been doing to answer the prayer of my Savior?

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Golden Text.—But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.—John 20:31.

The first step in the preparation of this review lesson should be to read over, at one sitting, the first nine chapters of the gospel of John. Not simply the selected verses which form the text for the lessons, but the whole nine chapters. They occupy about thirteen pages in an ordinary edition of the Bible. You would not be content to read so short a portion of a novel, or even of an interesting history or biography, at a sitting. Read it two or three times.

By reference to a good harmony of the gospels (for example, Stevens and Burton's,) or to a chronological outline of the life of Christ, such as is found among the "Helps" in a teacher's Bible or at the beginning of Dowling's "Christian Lesson Commentary," get a clear view of the relation of the events which the lessons treat to other events recorded in the synoptic gospels and to the general course of Christ's ministry. Did the incident of the woman at Sychar occur early or late in the ministry? What was the chief purpose and burden of Jesus' teaching in the period within which the conversation with Nicodemus falls? The feeding of the five thousand led directly to the great crisis and turning point in the ministry. What events led up to it and what followed in sequence from it? Such questions as these are important to a true understanding of the life and teaching of Jesus, and they demand that the incidents shall not be studied separately.

Note that in these lessons from John, Jesus himself is always the central figure. The interest is centered not upon what he says but upon himself. The other gospels, especially in their earlier parts, represent Jesus as a great teacher of profound truths about God and man and human duty and the art of right living. It would be possible (not profitable, of course,) to separate the messenger from his message and value the message for its own sake. So with the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, for example, or the teaching about the Sabbath, about fasting, about the nature of the kingdom of God and the manner of its coming, about God's care for lost men. But with John, the messenger is the message. It is impossible to separate them. Perhaps it was because John wrote after a longer interval than the other evangelists that he had come to realize more fully, through his own experience and through his observation of the history of the church, that safety lies in exalting Christ and that the faith is safe so long as he is supreme. His words might be variously interpreted, or misinterpreted, but his character and his power to uplift men cannot be misunderstood.

WHY $200,000 FOR HOME MISSIONS?

BECAUSE—We should correct our neglect of this great work.

BECAUSE—It is the ripest field in the world.

BECAUSE—It is our base of supplies. The Missions receiving assistance from our Home Treasury sent $2,340.66 to our Foreign Society in 1904.

BECAUSE—Our own brethren—our own flesh and blood are asking help to establish churches—we should certainly hear and heed their cry.

BECAUSE—The Home Board did more work last year than any previous year in our history—165 churches organized and 16,861 additions by our Home Missionaries. This work is a success.

BECAUSE—It is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ—to win souls in America. We should be about the Lord's business.

Ask your minister about the Offering the first Lord's Day in May. Full supplies of envelopes; literature, papers, etc., sent on application to the Secretary.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

March 22, 1905.

HOW MAY I KNOW THAT I AM A CHRISTIAN?

Wherefore, if any man is in Christ he is a new creature: the old things are passed away; behold they are become new.—2 Cor. 5:17.

1. THE EVIDENCE.—1. The Testimony of Jesus (John 8:32; Mark 16:15, 16); 2. The Testimony of the Apostles (Acts 2:38; Acts 16:31; Rom. 8:1-6; 1 John 4:7; 1 John 5:1).

2. THE FRUITS.—1. Unity and Fellowship (Acts 2:44-47); 2. Purity of Life (1 John 3:1-4); 3. Freedom from Sin (Rom. 8:1-6); 4. Newness of Life (2 Cor. 5:17; Col. 3:1-3); 5. Love for One Another (1 John 2:14).

It is important to remember that the first disciples of Christ did not know much about what it meant to be a Christian when he called them to follow him. It was not necessary to know very much before becoming his followers. But after doing this it was of the greatest importance that they should "grow in knowledge." The scripture passages to which we make reference above indicate some of the ways by which we may know the Christian or the follower of Christ. After all, these may be resolved into the essential question of obedience. Love for Christ is a primary quality of discipleship, but "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments," he says.

A beautiful story of glad and hearty obedience to the words of Christ is that of the traveler who was lost in Chili. After hours of wandering he was captured by Indians. His captors were on the point of putting him to death when suddenly all fell with their faces to the ground, then rising one by one they mounted their horses and rode away. The traveler was alone and safe. But why?

He wandered on and after dark reached a cabin where he begged for shelter. But his reception was hostile. Food and a place to rest were refused. Weapons were brandished and he was glad to depart. But before he had gone many rods the weapons were thrown down and the natives ran to him, embraced him, and begged him to enter the hut and receive the best they had. The night was passed in safety. But the traveler could hardly sleep for curiosity. What was the cause of this second change in the attitude of foes, a change as sudden and mysterious as the first, when his life was saved.

Next day he went on his way. It was not long before he fell in once more with the Indians who the day before had threatened his life. Instead of meeting him with hostile demonstrations they were ready to worship him. They loaded him with gifts which he did not wish to take until he saw the happiness with which the gift was made. A child offered him a fine opal and as he took it from her hands he was surprised to note the beatific expression of her face.

More curious than ever he demanded an explanation. Then he learned the reason for the mysterious salvation from death, the cordial reception at the cabin, the load of gifts. At the moment his life was sought, as at the moment of his turning away from the hut, the natives had heard a peculiar bird cry. According to their superstitions this was the cry of a night bird which no one had ever seen—an angel bird sent by Christ. The bird's cry is the voice of Christ; and that cry will, on the instant, stop a battle, a dance, anything. It is a command and must be obeyed. Furthermore, when the bird has called it turns into a traveler, and the traveler is Christ. Whoever sees him must load him with gifts and every gift will bring a blessing from heaven to the giver. It is only a fable of the superstitious people of Chili, but what a commentary on the teaching of Christ.

Many men say and perhaps even believe that their difficulties are intellectual, when they are moral. Carlyle says that doubt of any kind cannot be removed except by action and he says, "Do the duty which lies nearest thee." This was Jesus' solution: "If any man willeth to do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it is of God." And yet how supremely difficult it is for many of us to simply cling to his cross! We want guaranties of security. A truly religious life is closely identified with the intellect, but let us beware lest we give a one-sided preference to knowledge, feeling, conscience or action. The evidence of our being Christians is our attitude to our Master. Let us obey his commands as instantly, cheerfully and completely as the ignorant Indians of the story obeyed what they took to be the voice of Christ, although that voice demanded hard things.

> "If our love were but more simple,
> We should take him at his word,
> And our lives would be all sunshine
> In the sweetness of the Lord."

Prayer. Our heavenly Father, we have heard of thy goodness to sinful men. Our hearts are first struck with unbelief. May this never come to disbelief. Help us to appreciate more clearly and appropriate more fully thy written word. Thou hast the words of eternal life. May we seek to know thy will and strive daily to do it faithfully. Then may we have our feet established and forbid the seducer when his appeal is most eloquent. In his name. Amen.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

CHAMBERS.

Adaline Chambers was a charter member of the Division street church at Auburn, N. Y., in 1845. She continued an active, faithful member until her death, Jan. 25, 1905. She was interested in all church work both local and general. She was a member of the auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. from its organization in 1882, and was a contributor to all missionary calls. In her will she generously remembered the C. W. B. M. and made the local church her principal beneficiary. A long life of service endeared her to the church and the church to her. She loved all the children of God of whatever creed. She died full of faith and hope.

D. H. Patterson.

CHAMBERLAIN.

After a life of 89 years, mostly spent in the Master's service, my wife's mother, Grandma Chamberlain, died Feb. 28. For the past 35 years most of her time has been with us. She leaves an unmarried daughter in Kentucky and my wife here. She rests now and we can go to her later. We buried her at Cameron, Mo., after a beautiful service conducted by Brother Bricker, the pastor.

Kansas City, Mo. T. W. Cottingham.

DICKERSON.

Zerilda Dickerson, one of our faithful members, died at Lawton, Okla., Feb. 19, 1905, age 68 years, five months and 14 days. She had been a Christian ever since she was 15 years of age. Besides a host of friends, she leaves six children: George E. and Wm. Dickerson, of Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. W. E. Vinien, of Taylorville, Ill.; Mrs. W. H. Tincher, of Lawton, Okla.; Mrs. C. H. Carter, of Kankakee, Ill.; Mrs. Mora Wood, of Decatur, Ill. The funeral was at the Christian church, Taylorville, Ill., Feb. 22, Z. Moore officiating.

FIELD.

After an illness of two weeks from bronchitis Mrs. Catherine Field passed away from this life Sunday, Feb. 19, at the advanced age of 82 years, 10 months and three days. She was born and reared in Lexington, Ky. Her maiden name was Coffman. She united with the Christian church early in life, and always lived devoted to that church, though for a long time she was debarred the pleasure of attending church by failing health. She was married to Archibald Morrison in Kentucky and came to Missouri. He died during the civil war. She was married the second time to Judge Robert Field, who died 15 years ago. God gave six children to the first union, all surviving her. She was tenderly cared for in her old age by her daughter, Miss Alice Morrison. She was partially paralyzed for several years and almost helpless. She was possessed of Christian virtues that make noble womanhood and hers was a strong character and a busy life. As a mother she was wise and tactful, loving and kind. As a Christian she was faithful and constant. The funeral services, held at her daughter's, Mrs. W. M. Wilhite, with whom she lived, were conducted by Rev. Hall, of Slater.

ISRAEL.

Maria Gregg Israel, born near Belmont, Belmont county, O., Aug. 11, 1838, died at her home near Morristown, Dec. 1, 1904. The deceased was the wife of J. C. Israel and for many years was a faithful member of the church of Christ. A chosen servant has been called to her reward.

SAPPINGTON.

Our friend and brother, Elder James W. Sappington, has passed to his final reward. Brother Sappington died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary Bybee, five miles southwest of this city, on Lord's day morning, Feb. 26, 1905. He had been in poor health for more than a year, and his death was not a surprise to his family or his friends. He was a grand man. His intellect was of rare quality. His thought power was profound. His heart was full of love for God and his fellowmen. His life was rich in fruitage of works of faith and labors of love. He was phenomenally fair and just in his judgments of and dealings with others. He was a man of God, in the truest sense, among his neighbors. He has left the impress of his unique personality upon this entire community.

James W. Sappington was born in Madison county, Ky., Oct. 8, 1821. His parents moved to St. Louis county, Mo., in 1823. In the early 30's the family moved to Cooper county, Mo., and in the early 40's to a farm near what is now Clarksburg, in this (Moniteau) county. Captain Sappington, as he was called by many of our citizens (he was a captain in the Federal service during the civil war) was married in 1846 to Susan Woods, a noble Christian woman who is still with us. In 1850 these two settled on the farm where they have lived almost ever since and where he died. Besides his wife six children survived him: Mrs. W. J. Fulks, of this city; Mrs. Margaret Bybee and Mrs. Mary Bybee, of this county; Mr. Howard Sappington and Mrs. J. A. Hill, of Miller county, and Mr. Sebastian Sappington, of Kansas City, Mo.

Brother Sappington was a preacher of power, but his influence extended far beyond the field of his ministerial labors. Twice, in 1863 (under Governor Fletcher), and in 1873 (under Governor Woodson), he served this people as their representative in the legislature. While he was a supporter of the U. S. Government during the civil war, he was a friend in need to his neighbors who loved and had espoused the "Lost Cause." Our old settlers well remember his journey to Washington, D. C., in 1865, when he interviewed the great Lincoln on behalf of some of his neighbors who had served in the Confederate army and were, at the time, held as prisoners of war at Rock Island, Ill. This and other deeds of kindness cause him to be held in loving remembrance by scores of our people. After a long and useful life he has passed to the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

The funeral of Brother Sappington was attended by a great company of sympathizing friends. The services were conducted by the writer and Elder B. F. Hill, of this city. We laid the wornout body away in the Sappington burying-ground on the old farm.

The noble spirit has returned to God who gave it.

"It is little matter at what hour of day
The righteous fall asleep. Death cannot come
To him untimely who has learned to die.
The less of this brief life the more of heaven;
The shorter time, the longer immortality."

The Charge of the Bargain Brigade.

Half a league, half a league,
Half a league onward!
Quick to the bargain sale
Rushed the Six Hundred.
"Forward, female brigade!
Charge the dress goods," she said.
To the department store
Surged the Six Hundred.

"Forward, female brigade!"
Was there a soul dismayed?
Hopeful, but yet afraid,
Counters were plundered!
Theirs not to make reply;
Theirs but to dress and fly:
Theirs only but to try
To get there first or die!
Quick to that bargain sale
Tore the Six Hundred!

Silks to the right of them,
Ginghams to left of them,
Linens before them,
Floor-walkers wondered!
Quizzing the tired clerks,
(You know just how it works,)
Pawing with frantic jerks,
Remnants all sundered.
Bravely they rushed and well,
Hither and yon, pell-mell,
Without a breathing spell,
Crazy Six Hundred!

Flashed fingers here and there,
Snapping up bargains rare,
Each seeming not to care
That the clerks wondered.
Right down the line they broke,
Grabbed remnants—holy smoke!
Bargain sales are no joke!
Every one blundered.
Fought for the choicest goods,
Frantic Six Hundred!

What a clean-up they made
At that wild bargain raid!
"Will the goods wash, or fade?"
Each woman wondered.
Honor the nerve displayed
Over each nine-cent trade.
Whether 'twas charged or paid,
Tired Six Hundred!

How She Was Murdered.

By Josie Ballou Sherman.

It was after five o'clock, on an evening of November. The first snowflakes of the season were falling mistily through the evening air, covering hill and vale, trees and housetops, while the far-off light in the west did its utmost to give light to a mere slip of a girl as she hurried home through the evening twilight. Amy Barton had just been to the post office and had received a letter from her sister, Marion, Farmer Barton's eldest daughter, who had married a rich lawyer and moved to the city years ago, and who was old enough to have been the mother of the blue-eyed darling of the farmer's old age.

Amy had read the letter and her heart was so light over what it contained that the picturesque beauty of the surrounding landscape, the lowing of the cattle at the barnyard gate, the bleating of the sheep as they followed the tinkle, tinkle, of their leader to the sheds for the night—all was unobserved, forgotten. This was something unusual, for she was a country girl, born and bred thus far in the country and the sights and sounds of farm life had always been full of interest to her, for they were a part of her very self.

"A winter in New York," she repeated over and over. "If I only could!"

As she neared the home of her childhood, she waved the letter to her father at the barn. He dropped the pitchfork and hurried to the house to see from whom it came. The mother read it through and as Farmer Barton came in and sat down on the lounge by the window, she handed it to him, while Amy crept close to her father's side, her eyes all aglow, her lips radiant with smiles.

"Only think of it—a winter in New York, and the child hasn't been out of Pine Hills in all her days!" said Mrs. Barton the second. Amy's mother had died when she was a tiny baby, yet a strong tie of love lay between these two.

"May I go, father?" Amy faltered pleadingly.

"Do you want to leave your old father, Puss?" His voice seemed husky in spite of the joking accent he meant to give it.

"No, oh, no! That isn't it, father. But I would so love to visit Marion and see the great beautiful city."

"Not so beautiful a place as you may imagine, my little girl. But no doubt I would have thought the same at your age. There's no putting old heads on young shoulders and I don't know that I would like the arrangement if there was. How much will it take to fit the child out, mother? Will a hundred dollars do?"

A hundred dollars! Amy clasped her hands in breathless surprise and delight at her father's liberality.

"Why, father, I shall be dressed like a queen."

When the time approached for departure, Amy visited all the animals on the place. She followed her father more closely than usual in his routine of daily chores. She went to the bars by the creek where so often she had gone to let the cows in at milking time. She drew water for the horses at the old well curb; the old mill close by, the bench by the river, the mill pond and even the maple sugar camp, which was cold and untenanted, she visited to say good-bye.

And in spite of all her raptures, Amy Barton cried heartily when she bade her father good-bye at the depot, with the buffalo draped cutter standing by and old Doll rubbing her shaggy mane against her shoulder as if she too were sorry at the thought of seeing her little mistress no more.

"Oh, now do not make your pretty eyes red with crying! Just think of the new silk dress and the white kid gloves that were a dollar and a half a pair," said her father cheerily.

And Amy was laughing through her tears as the cars bore her away through the winter twilight.

Her tears indeed! What were they compared with the scalding drops which stood on the old man's cheeks as he drove back through the dusk to the home which seemed doubly desolate now.

Marion was much pleased with her little rustic blossom of a sister.

"Why, my dear, you remind me of one of my tea rosebuds. Just wait till I get you something decent to wear and I'll have you in the fashion at once," said the elder sister.

"Oh, Marion, I have some beautiful things already. Just see!" And Amy continued to lay out one garment after another, holding them up for Marion's approval. But none came and Amy's heart sank a little as her sister tossed her head and gave a little shrug of her pretty shoulders and said: "A country dressmaker and goods half a season old."

"But Marion we can't afford"—"I'll see to that," said Marion, taking her in her arms and kissing her passionately.

Something to love and caress, something to lavish her care upon, was the aching void in Marion Felton's home. Amy satisfied this longing. No children had ever come to this home. There was no time for children; no room for children. A continual round of suppers, receptions and teas used up all the time which God intended to be given to the care of his heritage—children.

Amy had not yet reached her eighteenth year and to her pure, honest heart, this new opening seemed like a glimpse of fairyland. The profusion of flowers, the brilliantly lighted rooms, the adoration of those about her, almost turned her pretty head.

Some of the manners and customs of city life jarred on her sense of right.

One evening, she sat in front of the grate, the firelight heightening the color of her cheeks, the richness of dress and jewels with which her sister had decked her gleaming with a beauty bewildering. Marion's wrapt look of admiration was met by a serious, questioning glance from Amy.

"What is it, Amy? A proposal?"

"No, Marion," said Amy slowly. "It doesn't seem quite right for me to be dancing with a gentleman's arm so tight about my waist. I'm really afraid mamma might not like it."

"You little innocent, doesn't everybody do so?"

Amy bowed her head, looking still into the grate.

"Then of course it's right."

"But, Marion, some of the young men with whom I come in contact make me shiver. They are elegantly dressed, and they seem to please others, but to my country mind they seem coarse and I tell you, Marion, they make me shiver." And before Marion could answer, Amy had buried her face in her hands and was weeping.

Marion wrapped the girl in her arms and soothed her by telling her she had danced too much and had been bored and that when rested she would be all right. That night, or morning, rather, she dreamed of the woods cool and silent, of the evenings spent in the old farm house reading to her dear old father, and she awoke sad at heart because it was not true.

"Amy," said Marion one afternoon after a matinee, "go to your room and sleep, for I want you fresh for the evening." Mr. Dunlap will call for you at eight o'clock."

"I'd rather stay at home, Marion, but I will try to go if you wish me to," said Amy.

"Of course you must go to-night. The swellest banquet of the season," and Marion playfully chucked her under the chin.

"I say," said the husband to Marion, after Amy had left the room, "you are going too fast. Don't you see she's losing all her rustic roses?"

"Oh, but she's so much admired!" And Mr. Felton gave way to his wife's superior knowledge.

That night as Amy came down dressed in a rich gown of spotless white, with twining trails of clematis wreathed in her golden hair and pink spots on her cheeks, Marion told her with a proud kiss that she had never looked so pretty in all her life.

"I love to please you, Marion, dear; but I don't believe I care so much for these things as I did. I feel nowadays as if I would like to see father and mother and the dear old home," said Amy sadly.

"Homesick?" asked Marion.

"No, Marion, not exactly homesick, but oh, so tired!"

Marion took no notice of Amy's words then, but they came back to her with a pang when, amid the gilded splendor, Amy was carried fainting from the oppressive heat of the ball-room. It was so like death — the closed eyes, the pallid cheeks. Marion thought of her father.

How could she render up her trust to him if Amy should return in the spring pale and drooping? Old Dr. Brengle was called the next day. He talked gravely of pulmonary predisposition and tubercular tendencies and the result of the interview was that Marion wrote to her father.

"Amy is not seriously sick," ran the eldest daughter's letter, "but just a little indisposed. If you choose to run up the latter part of March she will no doubt be able to return home with you. Our little Amy, the doctor tells us, has not a strong constitution naturally."

As if Farmer Barton would have waited a day, scarcely an hour, after this epistle came like a bombshell of ruin into the solitude of his home! He packed his carpet bag straightway and took the first New York bound train. He arrived in the metropolis just as the morning sun was peeping above the roofs of the houses and to his surprise the entire household were astir; Marion herself met him on the stairs.

"Is she worse?" gasped the old man.

"No—that is—we hope she is not seriously worse. A sudden bad turn—that's all." And Marion threw open the door of the apartment, where, like a snowdrop veiled by the drifts of December, Amy lay among her pillows.

She had been muttering all night about father—the apple trees—the seat by the spring—old doll—and in her wanderings was at home among the scenes she loved so well.

She opened her eyes at the sound of the familiar footsteps.

"Oh, father, I am so glad you are come. I only wanted to see you just once more, father. Now I can go in peace."

And Amy wreathed her arms about his neck for an instant and then they fell back on her breast.

"My child—my Amy!" cried the broken-hearted old man.

But the sweet lips closed would never speak more.

"My dear sir," said Dr. Brengle solemnly, forcing the old man away from the bedside where only a lovely statue remained, "there is really no one to blame. A little indisposition—slight cold rendered obstinate by neglect—a delicate constitution. He hath given, my good friend, and he taketh away."

"It's a lie—a blasphemous lie!" said Farmer Barton, and, pointing his finger at his eldest daughter, his voice tremulous with emotion, "You have murdered her!" he cried.

And Marion felt that the words of the frenzied old man were but too true. She hid her eyes from his piercing gaze and her body shook with sobs. She had meant naught but tenderness, she had loved the girl as dearly as herself, but she knew hers had been the hand that had led her on to death, garlanded and jewel-decked like the sacrifices of old.

Truly war hath killed its thousands, and pestilence its tens of thousands, but what are they compared with the victims which fall daily beneath the wheels of the great Juggernaut of Fashionable Life?

Gleanings from Magazines.

W. T. Stead on the Welsh Revival.

I went down to South Wales in the middle of December to see for myself what was going on. I was profoundly impressed.

"The British empire," as Admiral Fisher is never tired of repeating, "floats upon the British navy." But the British navy steams on Welsh coal. The driving force of all our battleships is hewn from the mines of these Welsh valleys by the men among whom this remarkable religious awakening has taken place. On Sunday morning, as the slow train crawled down the gloomy valleys—for there was the mirk of coming snow in the air, and there was no sun in the sky—I could not avoid the obvious and insistent suggestion of the thought that Welsh religious enthusiasm may be destined to impart as compelling an impulse to the churches of the world as Welsh coal supplies to its navies. Nor was the force of the suggestion weakened when, after attending three prolonged services at Mardy, a village of five thousand inhabitants, lying on the other side of Pontypridd, I found the flame of Welsh religious enthusiasm as smokeless as its coal. There are no advertisements, no brass bands, no posters, no huge tents. All the paraphernalia of the "got-up job" are conspicuous by their absence. Nor is there any organization, nor a director—at least, none that is visible to human eye. In the crowded chapels they even dispense with instrumental music. On Sunday night no note issued from the organ pipes. There was no need of instruments, for in and around and above and beneath surged the all-pervading thrill and throb of a multitude praying and singing as they prayed.

The vast congregations were as soberly sane as orderly, and at least as reverent as any congregation I ever saw beneath the dome of St. Paul's. But it was aflame with a passionate religious enthusiasm, the like of which I have never seen in St. Paul's. Tier above tier from the crowded aisles to the loftiest gallery sat or stood, as necessity dictated, eager hundreds of serious men and thoughtful women, their eyes riveted upon the platform or upon whatever other part of the building was the storm center of the meeting.

There was absolutely nothing wild, violent, hysterical, unless it be hysterical for the laboring breast to heave with sobbing that cannot be repressed, and the throat to choke with emotion as a sense of the awful horror and shame of a wasted life suddenly bursts upon the soul. On all sides there was the solemn gladness of men and women upon whose eyes has dawned the splendor of a new day, the foretaste of whose glories they are enjoying in the quickened sense of human fellowship and a keen glad zest added to their own lives.

Employers tell me that the quality of the work the miners are putting in has improved. Waste is less, men go to their daily toil with a new spirit of gladness in their labor. In the long dim galleries of the mine, where once the hauliers swore at their ponies in Welshified English terms of blasphemy, there is now but to be heard the haunting melody of the revival music. The pit ponies, like the American mules, have been driven by oaths and curses since they first bore the yoke, are being retrained to do their work without the incentive of profanity. There is less drinking, less idleness, less gambling. Men record with almost incredulous amazement how one football player after another has forsworn cards and drink and the gladiatorial games, and is living a sober and godly life, putting his energy into the revival. More wonderful still, and almost incredible to those who know how journalism lives and thrives upon gambling, and how Toryism is broad-based upon the drinking habits of the people, the Tory daily paper of South Wales has devoted its columns day after day to reporting and defending the movement which declares war to the death against both gambling and drink.—From "The Great Religious Revival in Wales," by William T. Stead, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for March.

Lhasa The Golden.

Perceval Landon, the correspondent of the London Times, has written a summary of his forthcoming book on the Younghusband expedition into Tibet, for the March World's Work. From the mass of interesting mysteries revealed, we quote the following:

THE FIRST SIGHT OF LHASA.

You may see from afar the spot at which the first glance of the vast home of the Grand Lama at Lhasa may be obtained. Beside a barley field is a great heap of stones. There is not much else to mark the place. Then it came as we rode on. In the far, far distance, across and beyond flat fields of barley, and, here and there, the darker line of low-wooded plantations, a gray pyramid painfully disengaged itself from behind the outer point of the gray concealing spur—Lhasa.

Here, at last, the never-reached goal of so many weary wanderers, the home of all the occult mysticism that still remains on earth! The light waves of mirage dissolving impalpably just shook the far outlines of the golden roofs and dimly seen white terraces.

From end to end, the plain around the capital is almost without exception a water-sodden morass on which it is almost impossible to travel for a hundred yards without encountering a quagmire. The road by which one approaches the capital is a causeway built four or five feet up from the surface of the marsh, and pierced a dozen times by culverts through which brown, peaty water flows apace. In length the Plain of Milk, in the middle of which Lhasa lies, is about 15 miles. In width, it varies from two to five miles. And in upon it from all sides strike the spurs of vast mountains, which even then, in July, were snow-capped in the morning hours.

Lhasa would remain Lhasa were it but a cluster of hovels on the sand, but the sheer magnificence of the unexpected sight which met our eyes was to us almost a thing incredible. Lhasa is a city of gigantic places and golden roofs, surrounded by wild stretches of woodland, acres of close-cropped grazing land and marshy grass, ringed and delimited by high trees or lazy streamlets of brown, transparent water, over which the branches almost meet.

Between the palace on our left and the town a mile away in front of us, there is this arcadian luxuriance, interposing a mile-wide belt of green. In this, Lhasa has a feature which no other town on earth can rival. Between and over the glades and woodlands the city itself peeps, an adobe stretch of narrow streets and flat-topped houses, crowned here and there with a blaze of golden roofs or gilded cupolas. But there is no time to look at this; a man can have no eye for anything but the huge, upstanding mass of the Potala palace to his left. It drags the eye of the mind like a lode-stone, for, indeed, sheer bulk and magnificent audacity could do no more in architecture than they have in the palace-temple of the Grand Lama. Simplicity has wrought a marvel in stone, 900 feet in length and towering 70 feet higher than the golden cross of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The Inefficient Mistress.

The domestic employee as she is to-day is in part the product of inefficient, inconsiderate and indifferent employers. I have experienced all three, and may have a choice as to which I should prefer; but the question here is not one of personal choice, but what sort of domestic employees will these different sorts of employers produce.

Take the inefficient first, and let the girls themselves answer the question.

"She don't know anything about keeping house, what's the use of trying to do it right?"

"The idea of her givin' us orders when I know it all, and she don't know no more than a baby."

"Mrs. B. thinks she can cook, but she says, 'Ann, take a little of this, an' a pinch of that, you know how, I want it to taste right!' and I don't know what she means."

Under such employers, maids grow careless, contemptuous and impertinent, three very unpleasant characteristics, for which they are not wholly to blame.—Jane Seymour Klink, in the March Atlantic.

The Czar's Soliloquy.

The March number of the North American Review opens with a grim and saturnine criticism of the Czar from the pen of Mark Twain. Mark's pen seems to have been dipped into vitriol for the purpose, and every word burns. As may be inferred from the title, "The Czar's Soliloquy," the criticism is put into the mouth of the "Little Father" himself. The place where the soliloquy occurs is in the Czar's dressing room, and the time is the hour immediately following his morning bath, which, according to an English correspondent, it is the habit of the ruler of the Russias to devote to meditation. Viewing himself in his pier-glass before he has begun to dress, he flouts himself as "a lank, skinny, spider-legged libel on the image of God," and confesses to himself that the hundred and forty millions of his devoted subjects do not worship such a spectacle as that. They bow down to the clothes which cover and conceal his uncomely nakedness, and to the high-sounding titles which give meritricious dignity to actual nonentity. The imperial soliloquist even despises his people for their loyalty to such an object, and expresses astonishment at the plea of the moralist that it is wrong to use violence against himself and his family—since being above the law, they are outlaws, and outlaws are a proper mark for anyone's bullet. The soliloquy proceeds:

"There is no power without clothes. It is the power that governs the human race. Strip its chiefs to the skin, and no state could be governed; naked officials could exercise no authority; they would look (and be) like everybody else—commonplace, inconsequential. A policeman in plain clothes is one man; in his uniform he is ten. Clothes and title are the most potent thing, the most formidable influence, in the earth. They move the human race to willing and spontaneous respect for the judge, the general, the admiral, the bishop, the ambassador, the frivolous earl, the idiot duke, the sultan, the king, the emperor. No great title is efficient without clothes to support it. In naked tribes of savages the kings wear some kind of rag or decoration which they make sacred to themselves and allow no one else to wear. The king of the great Fan tribe wears a bit of leopard-skin on his shoulder—it is sacred to royalty; the rest of him is perfectly naked. Without this bit of leopard-skin to awe and impress the people, he would not be able to keep his job."

Making a Lawn.

Four things are required to make a good lawn: time, soil, climate and intelligent labor. In England they have a saying that it requires a hundred years to make a lawn, and two hundred years to make a good lawn. In this country, where we are trying to make suburban homes while you wait, and where a month or two seems a very long time, people are too impatient. It speaks well for their ambition that they want lawns as soon as they move into their houses, but they are really expecting too much. At the very best, it requires no less than three years to make a presentable lawn, and five or ten years to make what we uncritical Americans call a good lawn.—From the Garden Magazine.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE SECOND DAY.

When Mr. Tumbleton had been persuaded, not without difficulty, to go away till after breakfast, the Woodney family prepared to accept the invitation of the three Miss Days. They were greeted at the front door by Miss Lizzie Day, the youngest, who being only thirty-eight was looked upon as a child, indeed, by her elder sisters. Her face was mild and pleasant, and a welcome shone from her blue eyes which charmed Mace. The eyes of all the sisters were blue, but the expression of each was different. That of the oldest, Miss Polly, was grave and thoughtful; that of Miss Susie had the alert and keen sparkle common to people who "speak their own minds." Breakfast was ready and the family were at once conducted to the table. On the way, Mrs. Woodney's eyes fell upon a book which lay on a small table. "Oh!" she cried. "There is a book I never saw before, yet I have heard of it all my life, 'Ramona.' "

"I like it better than 'Romola,' " said Miss Lizzie, handing it to Mrs. Woodney, "because Romola married a man totally unsuited to her nature. I think it best to marry a man congenial to you, even if he is an Indian."

"I did not like Ramona's marrying an Indian," said Miss Polly, seating herself at the head of the table.

Mrs. Woodney, who still held the book, turned over the pages, glancing here and there at the conversation. "I should think not!" cried the elder Mrs. Woodney. "An Indian, indeed!"

"Still," said Miss Lizzie, "Ramona was part Indian herself, you know."

"Then the part of her that was not Indian," cried old Mrs. Woodney, "should have spent its time trying to cover up and hide the Indian part. What is to become of us if we do not hold up our families?"

"Why should we think so much of our families?" inquired Miss Susie; "I notice that our families spend precious little time in holding us up!"

"Mamma," whispered Mace, "you will get 'Ramona' in the gravy if you aren't careful." She was cutting her father's meat for him, and her mother had drooped the volume in that direction.

"It looks very interesting," murmured Mrs. Woodney. "You will lend it to me? Thank you. Benjamin, suppose we don't go on with the unpacking to-day. Would it not be well to rest a period, then begin with renewed energies?"

"Just as you please, my dear," rejoined her husband. Mace took his hand, and putting the fork in it, moved it here and there, saying in a low voice, "On this side is your steak; at this place, the fried potatoes; biscuit; butter; salt; hominy."

"All right, Mace," he whispered, "I'm located."

"We couldn't live in all that muss," objected old Mrs. Woodney. "Besides, company would come. We'll have to unpack enough to cook our meals, anyway."

"We'll begin with the books," said Mrs. Woodney. "After the most important things are opened, we can consider what's to be done." She closed Ramona and held it between her knees under the table.

"Miss Polly," said Mr. Woodney, "is there a church in the village?"

"Our church burnt down a year ago," replied the oldest Miss Day. "Nothing remains of it but the ashes."

"No doubt it will be rebuilt?"

"I don't think so, Mr. Woodney. There was such a trouble over it. It was a union church and belonged to four different denominations."

"I'm glad it burnt up," said Miss Susie. "If Christian people have to disagree and quarrel and be at dagger's point, let them not be so in a house of God."

"But why disagree?" objected Mr. Woodney. "Wasn't there room enough for everybody? Didn't each denomination have a separate day?"

"They did," said Miss Susie; "but what about the denominations over and above the four which owned the church? Had they no rights? There are seven denominations in town, and only four Sundays, or, at the very best, five, to a month."

"You surprise me," murmured Mr. Woodney. "I had no idea it was such a large place."

"There are thirteen houses in town, counting the school and the ice-house and the ruins of the church," said Miss Lizzie. "It just happens that hardly two families agree in their religion. Then, many country people drive in to meeting, and most of them have different faiths. It wouldn't have been so bad had they been content with their creeds, but each seemed to hold as the first article of his creed that he ought to fight other creeds."

"We must try to get that church rebuilt!" cried Mr. Woodney in a resolute voice.

"I don't see how it's to be done," said Miss Polly. "No one will want to subscribe unless you give his denomination one Sunday in the week, and there is scarcely more than a handful of each denomination."

"We must all meet on some common ground," said Mr. Woodney earnestly. "Cannot we make Jesus the rock of our faith? We all believe in him, and in the Bible, and surely we can worship him together, and with the same book. How beautiful it would be to see all the denominations side by side every Sunday! I can't imagine myself saying to a brother man, 'This is our Sunday to have the church; it's not your Sunday!' Dear me! Have we a right to withhold Sundays from our brethren?"

"Are you a minister?" asked Miss Lizzie.

Mr. Woodney replied in the negative. "I was a farmer—last," he said.

"Papa," said Mace, her eyes shining with girlish enthusiasm, "I tell you what we'll do; you and I will get that church rebuilt! Will it not be grand?"

Mr. Woodney laid his hand on the girl's head and turned toward the direction whence Miss Susie's crisp tones had issued. "Do you say we can't do it?" he cried, his face lighted up.

"I say this," remarked Miss Susie, who was past girlish enthusiasms, "that if you had all our denominations corralled in one meeting house, there'd be very little worship. You have no idea how bitter some

PILES CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE

Fistula, Fissure, Bleeding, Itching, Ulceration, Constipation and all Rectal Diseases a Specialty. Cures Guaranteed. Send for Booklet. DR. M. NEY SMITH, Specialist, 800 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo. Established in St. Louis in 1888.

The Editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST knows of his personal knowledge a number of persons who were severely afflicted with rectal troubles whom Dr. Smith has cured. He is personally acquainted with the Doctor, and has no hesitation in commending any sufferer thus afflicted to him.

of the people are with each other. There are quarrels that have lasted for years. You couldn't get some Christians into the church, if they knew other Christians were coming. Brother Walker and Brother Fencer are that way, and both belong to the same creed. When one saw the other coming in, he would get up and leave the house. One day they held a sort of truce, and for all I know, under a white flag; and they agreed on which Sundays each was to come to church so there couldn't be a conflict. That made it so that they got to come only six times in the year, and I think the religion of both has run down a good deal; but their quarrel is as strong as ever."

"We are deeply indebted to you for this delightful repast," said Mr. Woodney when they rose, "and I only hope (but do not expect) that we can some day offer you one as acceptable. And I have enjoyed our conversation. You have inspired me with a new purpose, and it shall be my work here to get a church above those blackened ruins. With such a lieutenant as Mace, I am sure of victory!"

When they were gone, Miss Susie remarked to her sisters, "To think of a blind man expecting to heal the troubles that thirty years have produced! He couldn't do it, if he were Samson. Well, it will give him something to think about, poor gentleman! I believe his wife would rather read a novel than eat. And the old lady is so stiff with family responsibility, I don't think she is enjoying life. Poor Mace! I fear it'll be a lonely home for her. There are five or six girls here, but none of them suitable. Some will hold themselves too high. By the way, I wonder if they are any kin to the Woodneys, here?"

That was the very question Mr. Tumbleton asked Mr. Woodney as he helped unpack the large boxes of books—the family owned more books than anything else. "I reckon you ain't no kin to G. C. D. Woodney?" remarked Mr. Tumbleton.

"Oh, yes," responded Mr. Woodney, "he is my first cousin."

"Who—G. C. D. Woodney?" cried Mr. Tumbleton, dropping a book in his astonishment. "You mean the Woodney that owns the land on both sides this town, and the biggest house in it, and has over fifty thousand dollars if he has a cent?"

"That is my cousin," said Mr. Woodney, with the utmost calmness. "That is George Woodney."

"I never knowed his name was George," said the other. "He don't give out nothing but his initials to us pore folks. And you're his cousin! Now I never even thought to ast you before, it seemed so unlikely. And his daughter, about Miss Mace's age, she's your cousin, too, then!"

Mr. Woodney did not care to pursue this subject. He broached that of the ruined church.

"I don't want to never have nothing more to do with building new churches," said Mr. Tumbleton emphatically. "The wrangles we got into over the one that's gone—and it's better gone—still lasts, though the church is ashes. And how could you git us together? It's all very well for you to talk about our worshiping the same God, and our loving Jesus. But what is far more important than that is organs and baptism and such subjects that just starts a blaze when you drop a spark into 'em. Now with me, it ain't no great matter. I'll tell you. It's this way. I've been sprinkled and I've been immersed, and I hain't no prejudices agin either. I've belonged to four of the seven denominations they have here, Mr. Woodney, and I knew the weaknesses of all of 'em. I was raised a Methodist, and I raised myself a Baptist, I stepped upward into the Episcopalians, and when I became a Presbyterian, I thought I had found peace, but it wasn't there."

"May I ask what you are now, sir?"

"You may, Mr. Woodney, and I'll tell you. I'm a Come-Outer. I'm the only one in these parts, but they's some up in Gentry county. We just got naturally dissatisfied with all churches, and we come out, and we banded as Come-Outers."

"I am interested!" exclaimed Mr. Woodney, who had never before heard of this sect. "What is your peculiar faith, Mr. Tumbleton?"

"Our faith is that other faiths won't do," said Mr. Tumbleton. "We haven't reached no settled ideas except that other people's ideas won't do. We are just simply Come-Outers."

"I must ask you all to come out of this room," said Mrs. Woodney, appearing with a skillet in hand; "we'll have early dinner so we can get the things put away before anybody comes." The house was now in the wildest confusion. It was almost impossible to step on account of the books which had been sorted in so many separate piles that they resembled the Christian denominations of the town. The gasoline stove was lighted, and some dishes were set on a bare table. In the next room Mr. Tumbleton continued to unpack books. He would read the title of each and Mr. Woodney would tell him where to place it. This necessitated a separate trip for each book, and Mr. Tumbleton enjoyed his labors, as a great deal of conversation was possible. Mace was busily washing the windows, hoping to finish by the time the meal was ready, and Mrs. Woodney, very much flushed from the cooking and from having to step over Webster's dictionary every time she passed from the stove to the table, kept an eye on old Mrs. Woodney, who stood guard at the front door. "I know I am a perfect fright," exclaimed Mrs. Woodney, as she turned out the back-burner where the potatoes were done, and set the dishwater over the front-burner.

"Indeed, mother," said Mace, hastily wiping the last window pane, "your hair is all loose and looks very bad."

At that moment old Mrs. Woodney burst through the front door excitedly. "Company is coming—two ladies—and dressed so stylishly—grand people, I am sure."

Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, at these words, snatched up "Ramona," which lay at a convenient spot, and rushed through the house toward the rear, calling in a hoarse whisper as she darted past her husband, "Good-by, Benjamin!"

Concerning Local Checks.

A large number of our friends and patrons send us their local checks as remittances. Your local check is satisfactory if you add 15 cents to the amount to pay cost of collecting through our St. Louis banks.

The banks of St. Louis adhere strictly to the rule of charging not less than 15 cents for each local check which they collect. What is classed as local checks are those payable any place except St. Louis, Cincinnati, Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Louisville, Kansas City, Baltimore. We trust our friends will take note of this matter, and will see that the cost of collecting a small check is quite a large per cent on the face value. For instance, if a local check for $1.50 is sent us this would cost us 10 per cent to collect. If more convenient to send local check, do so, but do not forget to add 15 cents for cost of collecting.

ENOUGH

Mark Wayne Williams

To live, not merely get a living;
Be to thine own faults less forgiving.
Shoot aspirant tendrils toward the new,
Yet rootlike cling to that proved true.

To love the garb and grace of Work,
For Doubts and Rights oft cloak the shirk.
To make life brother to cloud and clod;
Spend less on self, and more on God.

To yearn for flower and sea and sky,
For pictures and music and poetry;
Yet live 'mid the city's muck and roar,
And be a Christ to the callous poor.

To know sin more, nor love man less,
And still a full chalice of gladness press
To lips that bless and lips that curse,
Alike for the good and the worse than worse.

To pass forgotten, and never touch
The hem of the beauty you love so much.
To lift earth skyward a little a day;
To pay as you preach, to live as you pray;

Though little indeed all this sufficed,
Enough to have lived in the life of the Christ.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,

For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

The Colorado Case. The Colorado General Assembly, sitting in joint convention in judgment on the gubernatorial election contest, has declared James N. Peabody (Republican) elected. Mr. Peabody has resigned according to previous agreement, and Jesse MacDonald, Republican candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, has succeeded to the office. It is a triumph for peace in a very threatening situation, but otherwise a very shady procedure. The history of the case in brief is this: In the November election, Governor Peabody was defeated for re-election, largely on account of unpopularity acquired by his severe handling of the union miners in the strike. His Democratic opponent, Alva Adams, received a plurality of 9,774 votes on the face of the returns. Two days after the election, Peabody filed a contest on the ground of fraud in the election. He gave up the office under protest, and Adams was inaugurated as governor on Jan. 10. The legislature on Jan. 17 appointed a committee of eighteen Republicans and nine Democrats to take testimony bearing on the contest. The committee, after hearing both sides at length, reported back to the legislature on March 3. Since then, both contestants have, by their attorneys, argued the case before the legislature. There is a Republican majority of 35 on joint ballot, but many of the Republican members refused to vote for Peabody. Finally Peabody agreed to resign if elected, and that proved the solution of the difficulty.

An Evasion. Probably nobody will ever know whether Peabody or Adams was really elected governor of Colorado. The elections, especially in Denver, have been unfathomably crooked. But the task set for the Colorado legislature was to find out who was elected. If it could find that the Democratic candidate was the beneficiary of frauds in excess of 9,774 votes (net), it could of course declare Peabody elected; but not otherwise. The business of the legislature was not to elect a governor, but to find out who had been elected by the people. One member proposed that the legislature declare the election void and seat the Republican lieutenant-governor, but the supreme court pronounced this plan unconstitutional. But in effect, that is exactly what was done. Certain members who were determined to vote against Peabody, voted for him when he had promised to resign. But his promise to resign could not possibly bear upon the only question which they had any constitutional right to be voting upon—namely, the evidences of fraud in an election last November. We are not prepared to say that justice has not been done in a certain free-handed, cross-lots fashion. Perhaps it has, and perhaps not. But it is pretty clear that the legislature, by a subterfuge, did what the supreme court said it had no right to do, for to seat a candidate on condition that he resign within twenty-four hours does not differ materially from declaring the office vacant. The striking thing about the whole contest is that party loyalty and the personal attitude of members toward Governor Peabody seemed to cut a much larger figure in determining the result than did the evidence which was supposed to be the only thing under consideration. But then the electoral commission of 1876, composed of fifteen perfectly honorable and fair-minded men, voted eight to seven on strictly party lines. Why should one find fault with Colorado?

A Logical Development. A newspaper dispatch tells of a family of Christian Scientists who, when their house caught fire, made no effort to extinguish the flames, but prayed that their property might be saved by divine power. We have not investigated this report, but it seems reasonable. Why not? The destruction of one's home by fire is an evil. This Christian Science family must have considered it so or they would not have prayed to have it stopped. One does not invoke divine aid against things that are either good or indifferent. But evil is unreal and non-existent, it is error, it is a mere delusion of mortal mind, according to Mrs. Eddy. It is to be overcome by denying it. "Until the fact concerning error—namely its nothingness—appears, the moral demand will not be met, and the ability to make nothing of error will be wanting." (Science and Health, 224th edition, page 258.) Quite so. The ability to make nothing of error will be wanting until the nothingness of error appears. It could scarcely be otherwise. That fire in the body which we call fever—itself, of course, an evil and therefore mere nothingness—is to be cured by discovering its non-existence. "Fevers are forms of various types. The quickened pulse, coated tongue, febrile heat, dry skin, pain in the head and limbs, are pictures depicted by mortal mind on the body. The images held in this disturbed mind frighten conscious thought." And so the thing goes on until it "ends in a belief called death." (S. and H. page 378.) Why then shall it not be said that the fire which destroys our property, being evil, is also a mere delusion, and that the rising temperature, the flames, the ashes, the charred ruins are but images which frighten conscious thought into the belief that a real calamity is transpiring. The theory is, you remember, that nothing exists except mind; the cure of disease by correcting one's belief occurs not because mind and matter are intimately connected in the human body (for this is denied) but because only mind exists, in the body or anywhere else. Since mind is the only existence, mind should be the only means of doing anything that needs to be done—whether curing a fever or putting out a fire. This family whose house was on fire certainly had the courage of their convictions. But the sad part of it is that the house burned down. Perhaps that was on account of the overwhelming belief of the neighbors that it would do so. But it makes no difference. The ruin is no more real than the fire. We are wondering whether they will collect insurance and if so on what ground.

The Proper Mixture. The following comment in the daily press on the incident above referred to suggests the old and good advice to "trust in God and keep your powder dry."

> A Marion, Ind., family, believers in Christian Science, fell on their knees and prayed when they found their house in flames. They made no effort to rescue their property and threw no water on the fire. The family is now homeless. This family didn't work its Christian Science just right. The way to put out a fire with Christian Science is to use lots of water with it. Christian Science, with medicine and a good doctor to go with it, will do wonders in the way of curing the sick. You can make a good garden with Christian Science if you, also, use the hoe and sprinkler. With a good stove in the room you can keep warm through Christian Science. In fact, Christian Science will accomplish almost anything if it is mixed with the proper ingredients.

Roosevelt on Motherhood.

The President's address before the National Congress of Mothers a few days ago contained a good many old-fashioned truths, such as he might have been expected to utter before such an audience. It may be doubted—and it is doubted by some—whether it is any proper part of a President's business to give advice, however excellent, on these topics. But it is a confirmed habit with Mr. Roosevelt to say the thing which he thinks needs to be said, without stopping to debate with himself or with any one else as to whether or not it is his special business to say it. We quote a characteristic passage. The sentiment in the latter part of it must be very painful to Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman and others of the sort who believe that the "accident of sex" should not doom any person to the drudgery of household tasks. Mr. Roosevelt said:

> No piled-up wealth, no splendor of material growth, no brilliance of artistic development, will permanently avail any people unless its home life is healthy, unless the average man possesses honesty, courage, common sense and decency, unless he works hard and is willing at need to fight hard; and unless the average woman is a good wife, a good mother, able and willing to perform the first and greatest duty of womanhood, able and willing to bear, and to bring up as they should be brought up, healthy children, sound in body, mind and character, and numerous enough so that the race shall increase and not decrease.
> There are certain old truths which will be true as long as this world endures and which no amount of progress can alter. One of these is the truth that the primary duty of the husband is to be the home-maker, the breadwinner for his wife and children, and that the primary duty of the woman is to be the helpmeet, the housewife and mother. The woman should have ample educational advantages; but save in exceptional cases the man must be and she need not be, and generally ought not to be, trained for a lifelong career as the family breadwinner, and, therefore, after a certain point, the training of the two must normally be different because the duties of the two are normally different. This does not mean inequality of function, but it does mean that normally there must be dissimilarity of function.

An Awful Peril.

President Castro, of Venezuela, though not in the ranks of professional humorists—unless the presidency of a South American republic should be considered as essentially an engagement in opera bouffe—contributes more than his share to the gaiety of nations. A few days ago a pamphlet was issued by one of Castro's officers, presumably with his sanction, but of course so that he is not officially responsible for it, urging an invasion of the United States by a Venezuelan army. The capture of New Orleans and the domination of the Mississippi Valley by Venezuela would, he thinks, wipe out the insults which his country has received from ours. The particular insults are not specified, but they must be very serious. The English language cannot by any perversion be made sufficiently bombastic to carry the full fragrance of this heroic. Venezuelan jingoes speak, think and act in Spanish. But here is a feeble representation of a paragraph of the document:

> Perhaps 30,000 Venezuelans bearing the glorious national banner, that very banner whose floating iris illuminated the waters of La Plata with the splendor of the Venezuelan fatherland to the echoes of the carions of Carabobo, of Bombona and of Ayacucho, would to-day be sufficient to wash away the insult which our glorious flag has received from North America, in the very waters of the Mississippi. Cunduncurca is not more distant from Venezuela than the hostile land, and the territories which we have to cross in order to arrive there are almost all of the same fatherland.
> Colombia, the first of these, will readily open its frontiers to give passage to the sons of Bolivar, as well as Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Mexico, the fatherland of Juarez, the feared by France and by Europe for his formidable and terrible patriotism. There can be no doubt that our Latin brothers would willingly open the way for the army of Venezuela in order that the sons of Washington should not be allowed to believe themselves more valiant and warlike than the sons of Bolivar. This may seem to many a utopian vision, but when we reflect that the North American squadrons can not operate in the forests, and that traders will always be traders and cowardly in feats of heroism, our hearts swell within us, and we are willing to take our stand in the vanguard among the distinguished heroes of the new world who are called once more to prove that Venezuela is immortal and is the first to take up the glove which is thrown down to-day to the whole of Spanish America.

No, Senor Castro, the fact that Japan seems to be getting the best of it over Russia does not necessarily prove that any small nation can defeat any large one. Besides, Venezuela is not Japan.

The Japanese Advance.

The armchair critics, who have been pointing out Gen. Oyama's great mistake in failing to follow up the Russian retreat from Mukden, will have an opportunity to revise their opinions. Gen. Oyama did not fail to follow up this retreat. A large portion of his army disappeared from the ken of the press correspondents shortly after the occupation of Mukden and it is now reappearing far to the north to cut off the retreat of Kuropatkin's diminished column. Tie Pass, 40 miles north of Mukden, has been taken and also Kai Yuan, a point on the railroad still farther north. There seems now to be no great reason to doubt the Japanese prediction that Harbin will be captured on or before April 10. As Harbin is the point at which the Siberian railroad divides, one branch running east to Vladivostok, and the other south to Port Arthur, the control of this point will mean a complete control of Russia's holdings in Manchuria. Nine months ago an enthusiastic Japanese who was lecturing in this country declared that the war would go on until the victorious Japanese army standing on the shore of Lake Baikal, would shout defiance to the Czar and declare to his armies, "Thus far shalt thou come, and no farther!" It seemed a wild dream at that time but no one will now be surprised if it comes true.

Missouri's New Senator.

The senatorial deadlock in the Missouri legislature has been broken by the election of Major William Warner, Republican. On joint ballot there was a Republican majority of ten in the legislature. The Republican caucus made Mr. Niedringhaus its nominee, but the Kerens forces refused to vote for him. The faction in the party created a deadlock during which 67 ballots were taken without reaching a choice. A number of Republicans threatened to vote for Cockrell, the Democratic nominee, if the Kerens men held out against Warner, who had succeeded Niedringhaus as the choice of his party. Five Republican votes would have elected Cockrell. At the last moment and amid wild uproar, the followers of Kerens went over to Warner, and a majority was secured. Thus, when the Senate convenes its next session we shall see for the first time since reconstruction days a Republican Senator from Missouri. But the party had, during the long years of its minority, so far forgotten how to conduct itself and how to subordinate private ambitions to public good, that it almost lost the fruit of its victory.

A Rebuke From Their Leader.

Mr. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Engineers, will have the approval of the public in his reprimand of the members of the organization who participated in the Subway strike in New York. A contract between the company and the engineers was entered into last September which will not expire before September, 1907. No complaint is made that the Sub-way company has not lived up to its part of the contract. Yet the workmen, at the orders of their local leaders, went on a strike. Mr. Stone, the national leader of the engineers, has withdrawn the charter of the local organization. We are not entering into the merits of the particular question. Some of the striking workmen may have had sufficient excuse, but it does not seem that the whims of certain leaders should be allowed to inconvenience the great public. The word of an organization must count as well as that of a man, or where would we be? Grand Chief Stone has a level head.

Christian Unity a Growth.

Recently we saw an article in the Morning Star (Free Baptist), referring to the proposed union of that body of Christians with those known as Disciples of Christ, in which the writer seemed to fear that something might be done precipitately, or the union be effected before the people interested were ready for it. Nothing of this kind, we judge, is likely to occur. The work of education must be carried on among the people of the two bodies interested until they can see not only the desirableness but the duty of union and co operation. Union to be permanent must be based on unity, and unity is the result of growth in Christian ideals.

It is a matter of history and of common observation that the lower down in the scale of intellectual and spiritual development you find people, the more difficult it is to unify them in any common work. Look at the bitter prejudices that divided Jews and Samaritans, Jews and Gentiles, Greeks and barbarians, before Christ came. Just as men were brought under the influence of his teaching and towering personality, their narrow provincialisms and petty prejudices gave way before the bond of a common love that bound them in allegiance to a common Master. In Christ, says Paul, there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female.

There is a tendency among Christians to magnify the importance of certain doctrinal opinions, or beliefs if you prefer to call them so, above the plain teaching of Christ and his apostles concerning unity. It would be strange if this disposition were not manifested by some among Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ. In a recent issue of the Christian-Evangelist a brother expresses his surprise at the statement of another that difference of opinion concerning the design of baptism should not hinder union between Baptists and Disciples of Christ. He wants to know if the scriptures are not plain in their teaching that baptism precedes remission of sins. His inference is that if they do teach that plainly to us we ought not to unite with other baptized believers until they can agree with us that baptism precedes pardon! And this among us who have been pleading for union on the basis of faith in Christ and obedience to his commandments!

If such ideas prevail to any limited extent among a people who have been making a specialty of Christian union from their beginning, we ought not to think it strange if we find others thrusting their opinions and interpretations into their basis of union. All this means that the work of education and the process of Christian growth must go on until we have reached the plane where the great unities of the gospel will be so apprehended and appreciated that our individual opinions and interpretations will take their proper place, which is subordinate to the unification of believers. If believers, equally Christian in character and equally loyal to Christ's commands, should happen to differ in their interpretation of certain passages relating to the connection between baptism and remission of sins—though both have been baptized and have received remission of sins—who would dare to interpose this difference in understanding on this subject as a barrier to their union and co-operation?

While we are sure, therefore, that Christian unity is a matter of growth, and that there can be no permanent union until we grow up to it, by growing up into Christ, who is our living head, it does not follow that we may fold our hands and simply wait for Christian union to come about. It is our plain duty, who believe that God wants his children to be united, to do what in us lies to promote such mutual acquaintanceship between Christians and such education in the nature and conditions of Christian union as will hasten that consummation. A conscience must be created in favor of union, stronger than the conscientious scruples which bind men to opinions and practices which hinder union.

Order of Faith and Repentance.

Peter Ainslee, minister of the Christian Temple, Baltimore, has an admirable article in The Watchman (Baptist) of Boston, reviewing in a fraternal spirit the paper by Dr. C. F. Winbigler, of Washington, D. C., recently read before a joint meeting of the ministers of the Disciples and Baptists of Baltimore. In commenting upon the points of difference, as suggested in Dr. Winbigler's paper, Brother Ainslee says:

> "The Baptists and the Disciples do differ in the order of faith and repentance, the Baptists contending that a man must repent before he can have faith, and the Disciples contending that a man must believe before he can turn from his sins."

We have had occasion frequently to point out that there is no necessary antagonism between the two positions as stated above, each being but a partial statement of truth on this subject. It is true that Jesus and his apostles taught that wicked men, whether Jews or Gentiles, sinning against what light they had, should repent of their sins that they might believe the gospel. "How can ye believe," said Jesus, "who receive glory one of another, and the glory that cometh from the only God ye seek not?" Paul preached, both to Jews and Greeks, "repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." There is no man who does not believe in God, or at least in the eternal distinction between right and wrong, and who does not feel the moral obligation to do right. The first thing for a man to do who finds himself condemned by his own standard of morality, is to repent, and bring his life into harmony with what he believes. He may not believe in Christ, but he probably does believe in a God who is righteous, and who wishes men to be righteous. At the very least, if he is a normal, sane being, he believes in truth and righteousness. That belief ought to cause men to repent, so far as the gross sins of immorality are concerned.

But it is equally obvious that repentance, in a Christian sense, is only possible to one who sees his life and its shortcomings in the light of Christ's life and teaching, and only a believer in Christ gets the benefit of this light. Men may turn away from the grosser sins without faith in Christ, and many do so; but faith in Jesus Christ opens up to such persons new and deeper meanings of repentance, because it reveals sins of the heart that were not recognized before. Indeed, repentance is not an isolated act, but a series of acts following each known violation of God's law; and each advanced step in our enlarging faith, making Christ more real and his life more winsome and attractive, naturally leads to the bringing up of our ethical standard to correspond therewith. A deepening faith requires a deepening repentance.

In the case of innocent children, reared in an atmosphere of Christian influence, it may be that faith in Jesus Christ is the first conscious religious experience. But in the case of adult sinners, we should think this would rarely, if ever, be the case. If we carefully analyze our religious experiences most of us would find that our first feeling was one of unworthiness, a sense of guilt for past sins, and sorrow therefor, followed by the decision to confess Christ and commit our souls to him. It was this consciousness of sin that prepared us to accept Christ, who, when accepted, has given us a new conception of life and led us to put away many things from our lives which we at one time had supposed to be harmless.

Baptists are right, then, in holding that there is a repentance ordinarily preceding Christian faith; but they are wrong in not seeing that this repentance is the product of belief in some moral standard. Disciples are right in holding that repentance in a Christian sense, is preceded by faith in Christ; but they are wrong in so far as they do not recognize any kind of repentance as preceding Christian faith. It takes both their positions, with the misconceptions eliminated, to make the whole truth.

Most of our differences are the result of partial knowledge. "We know in part, and we prophesy in part." But, unlike Paul, many of us take our partial knowledge for the whole truth, and in our relations with others who do not see with us, we often manifest a lack of that charity or love which is greater than knowledge, as it is greater than faith and hope. In the absence of perfect knowledge let us cultivate love.

Notes and Comments.

Dr. Osler has pronounced judgment upon all men over forty years of age. But before he found newspaper notoriety, we had all heard of a "dead line" in the ministry. Since Dr. Osler got funny, some members of an official board in the Christian church have "gone one better." For they, in considering the kind of man they wanted to fill the vacancy in their pulpit, came to the conclusion that he must have the following seven qualifications: Must be over 35 years old; must be married; must be an evangelist; must be a lodge man; must be a mixer; must be a crank, and must be willing to assume the burdens of the flock.

Now did not this official board advertise for a "crank" we would presume that their dead line was about 36 or 37 years, for how a preacher can spend his evenings at the lodge, be a "mixer" during the day, and take the burdens of his flock on his shoulders and then preach such evangelistic sermons as will win souls, after he has reached forty is something of a problem. We remember these lines of Cowper—

> "A kick that scarce would move a horse
> May kill a sound divine."

Bro. S. S. Lappin has made a witty "application" for this vacant pulpit where the chairman of the board says, "It takes a crank and a mixer to move things." In his letter he says:

> "I am an evangelist. I served one year as state evangelist in Illinois, and nearly killed myself. I always hold my own meetings where I am pastor if I feel like it and the church will let me. It has been a rule with me never to turn any away if they wanted to join a church where I was preaching, especially if I had reason to believe that they were in earnest."

And he is a lodge man. He belongs to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, and he would not object to joining some more, provided the brethren will pay the admission fees and keep up the dues.

> "I am a little in doubt about the next question, for you do not define what you mean by a 'mixer.' I rather guess that I would fill the bill, though, for I on several occasions have shown myself a master hand at getting things mixed. Maybe you mean socially inclined? If so, I am your man, for the person who comes near the church where I preach anywhere near service time must be keen of scent and fleet of foot if I don't make him shake hands before he gets away. Social? Well, I should say so. Many's the time I have waded across a muddy street to speak to a man who owed me."

Brother Lappin is "keen of scent and fleet of foot," but in the right direction. Doubtless he recalled Bacon's dictum that a natural and secret hatred and aversion towards society, in any man, hath something of the savage beast.

Further S. S. Lappin declares himself a crank:

> "Not a fool, understand, but the kind of a crank that 'moves things,' as you suggest. Things do move where I preach. If I can't make them move, I can generally get some of the cranky brethren or sisters to lend a hand till the thing starts. On several occasions I have succeeded so well in moving things that my family, household goods and all were moved into another pastorate.
> "Now, as to being willing to assume the burdens of the flock. I had best be a little positive in my answer, for I am not sure what you mean by that. I don't propose to take care of pocketbooks of the brethren while they go fishing, or to speak knowingly about the bigness of the hats worn by the good sisters at Easter time. I will not engage to salve the consciences of the brethren who hurrah for Jesus and vote for the devil, and I will not usher any such up to the pearly gate. I will not engage to write or deliver eulogies for those members who regard their religion as a kind of spiritual life insurance with a brimstone clause, paid up at baptism for all eternity. About this last I am particular. If members won't come to church till they are brought by their friends in a big black wagon, I may happen to be absent then. If I can't preach to people while they live I don't care to preach about them when they are dead, unless I could say what I please, and that isn't considered good form at funerals."

There is a whole lot of "horse sense" in this retort. The good brethren who in solemn conclave discussed the kind of a preacher they wanted doubtless had no thought of the possible outside effect of their deliberations. They do not seem—at least the newspapers say nothing of this—to have given much thought as to whether the preacher could show them "the steep and thorny way to heaven." They did not ask for a preacher like Richard Baxter who "preached as never sure to preach again," so that fools who came to scoff might remain to pray. If they did they did not emphasize it enough. For after all the pastor that a church needs is he who can give the Bread of Life, no matter what his age or his freedom from crotchets.

The Baptist Argus of Louisville, Ky., is publishing a very liberal part of our Symposium on the Holy Spirit and prayer in relation to Evangelism, simply with the view, as the Editor writes us, to let his readers know what our representative men think on this subject. This is most commendable and in striking contrast with a certain class of papers who never quote anything from any of our papers except some extreme or erratic statement from some extreme paper that does not represent the prevailing thought among us. We have never cared what narrow and extreme men in any religious body are saying. That doesn't count for much. We like to know what those men are saying whose statements represent the real genius of the people for whom they speak. If there is ever to be Christian unity it must come about through a better acquaintance with each other's spirit and teaching, and the course of the Baptist Argus looks in that direction.

The Word and Way remarks: "Oh, that some pastors knew how to resign without bringing hurt and reproach to the cause of the blessed Christ!" That is only another way of saying, Oh, that some pastors knew how to practice what they preach; or possessed the mind of Christ which they have commended to others! No preacher having the spirit of Christ will resign in a way that will bring hurt and reproach to the cause of Christ. It is one of the severest tests of a preacher's character.

Methodists are looking toward the establishment of a Bible chair at the seat of the University of Illinois and Presbyterians have appropriated $40,000, from a gift of $50,000 to found a theological seminary near the City of Mexico. Union theological seminary has just received an anonymous gift of $1,100,000, making it the richest divinity school in the world. As a brotherhood we have yet much to learn from the denominations. We must pay for our religion the full price and not be satisfied to throw around our small change when we can spare it.

The Word and Way (Baptist) tells of a lively tussle its contributors have been enjoying of late over that familiar battle ground, John 3:5. It seems that a great variety of interpretations have been given, none of which were satisfactory except to their authors. What is the trouble with that passage, anyway, that makes so many otherwise sensible people say the most absurd things in trying to tell what it means? It seems to be a case of religious hydrophobia. On its surface the passage seems simple enough. A Jewish rabbi, apparently convinced of the divine mission of Jesus, seeks him to announce that fact, and probably to signify his readiness to accept the baptism of John and thus be in readiness for the Messianic reign. Being not only a Jew but a Rabbi as well, what else could he need? "You must be born again," said Jesus, and this birth from above is not of water only, but of water and the Spirit. Now, if John baptized in water and Christ in the Holy Spirit, what could be more natural than Jesus' statement emphasizing the agency of the Spirit? The point which Jesus was emphasizing was not the importance of baptism, but its insufficiency without the life-giving agency of the Spirit to make one a citizen of the kingdom of God.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Nothing can be more delightfully tranquil than early morning down here in semi-tropical Florida. The tall pines stand motionless, lifting their topmost boughs toward the cloudless sky, as if offering incense to the God of nature. The sun raises his head in the glowing east and looks across the key and over the bay, whose quiet waters reflect his smile. Down through the aisles of the pines are seen the tufted tops of the cocoanut palms and the broad leaves of the banana giving a tropical touch to the scene. The birds feel the inspiration of the morning scene, and, led by the mocking bird, they have been rendering an impromptu musicale. Out yonder on the bay stand a number of sail boats, motionless, but in readiness to catch the morning breeze when it rises. It is a picture of peace and rare beauty, or rather it is the real thing from which pictures are made. War may rage between Russia and Japan; men of the cities may get excited and bawl around the stock market, on change, and "society" may be in a flutter over some social event, but Cocoanut Grove, and especially this nook in the bay south of it, maintains its air of serenity and peace. The waves of tumult from the great outside world, break and lose their fury long before they reach this peaceful abode.

Then, of course, the reader thinks, the place must be dead, and real estate without value. But the reader who thinks that overlooks the fact that this age has a large number of people who are seeking refuge from its excitements, its noise and tumult, and are on the lookout for just such quiet, peaceful places, where they may have a chance to rest body and brain and think of the unseen world and its great realities. This class of people are coming here, and they keep desirable property in good demand at steadily-increasing prices. The great wealth of Florida is not in its oranges, grape fruit, lemons, limes, mangoes, pears, cocoanuts and other semi-tropical fruits, but in its delightful climate which makes these things possible, and in addition, makes it possible for people to live here with some comfort who cannot live in a more rigorous climate. This is the one thing that is going to cause Florida to be in increasing demand as a winter resort for the years to come. After all we are here on or near one of the great thoroughfares of the world's travel. The steamers pass in sight to and from Havana and the West Indies, arriving and departing, daily, from Miami. Yesterday Bro. Oreon E. Scott and wife, of St. Louis, who have been cruising in the West Indies, blew in on us, looking as brown as the natives of that tropical clime. We had a brief but delightful visit with them and they went on northward, by easy stages, minding to stop at several places, between here and St. Louis. This way lie Cuba, Porto Rico, the West Indies and Panama.

Speaking of peace, there has been stopping here with us one of those sweet and sunny old ladies whose presence is a benediction in any home. Although in her 75th year, she is younger in mind and spirit than many persons at forty, whom we have known. She is a northern woman who has been spending the winter south. She is well posted on nearly every subject of general interest, but her specialty is botany. She is out every day in the woods gathering specimens, and is much delighted in finding a new flower. She has made it a point, all her life, she says, to keep some study on hand, so as to keep her mind fresh and vigorous. We wish we could convey the benefit of this object lesson to all the readers of the Easy Chair. Do not allow yourselves to lose interest in life. Read what the world is doing. Keep your mind at work. Never think you are "too old to learn." Do not become so attached to old ideas that you refuse to abandon them when you find they are false. Keep some fresh study on hand, so as to prevent your mind from growing rusty and becoming diseased by sheer disuse. Keep sunny. Open your heart to God's love, and to all the beauty in God's world. Help to make others happy. Get out of the miserable habit of living for self, which has dwarfed and embittered so many lives. So shall you flourish like a tree planted by the river side, and bring forth fruit even in old age.

So far at Cocoanut Grove. Since the foregoing was written we parted from our friends there, and, missing connection at Jacksonville for the north, we tarried there most of a day and a night. This gave us the privilege of hearing Brother Harlow at the First Christian church, where he is in the first week of a meeting with Brother Boone. He is assisted by Bro. Le Roy St. John as singer. When we say that St. John sings as effectively as Harlow preaches, the reader will readily draw the conclusion that they make a very efficient evangelistic team. We were glad to find a good audience filling comfortably the now completed and beautiful auditorium of the new church building. We had thought some of running off on a tangent from Jacksonville and paying a brief visit to Kissimmee and Eustis, but as Paul had to hurry by Ephesus to be at Jerusalem on Pentecost, so we had to forego the pleasure of visiting these places in order to reach our Congress at Columbia. The churches at the places mentioned will, no doubt, excuse us in view of this apostolic precedent! C. C. Smith and family, and Carey E. Morgan are at Eustis, which made it harder to abandon this side visit.

The misconnection at Jacksonville made it necessary to spend Lord's day on the train, in order to be at Jerusalem on Pentecost. It is a pleasure to say that only a few people are on the train, and that we are having a quiet Lord's day, and have tried as far as possible to make the Pullman Sleeping Car a sacred place. Most of the day we have been running through Alabama and soon we shall invade Tennessee, our ancestral state. In no other state in the union have the churches of the Reformation been so largely dominated by a mistaken conception of Christianity as in this goodly state. This mistake, in a word, is, that the New Testament not only furnishes us the facts, truths, principles and precepts of the gospel, but the methods and minute details of how that gospel is to be extended throughout the world. One religious journal is chiefly responsible for the prevalence of this false idea in Tennessee, and eternity alone can reveal the harm that has come to our cause from it, here and elsewhere. It is a form of Jewish legalism which exalts the letter at the expense of the spirit of the gospel. We are glad to know that through the faithful and patient labors of A. I. Myhr, assisted by an increasing number of brethren and churches in the state, this form of bondage is giving place to the liberty wherewith Christ makes men free.

All along the way, coming north, we noticed the ground becoming more barren, and the trees less green. But Spring is on her triumphal way from the South, decorating the landscape with green, and sending a thrill of life through the veins of all living and growing things. Never has her advent been more welcome in the past, perhaps, than it will be this year after our severe winter. We reached St. Louis, where this last paragraph is written, under dripping clouds, with a chill in the atmosphere which we had not felt since leaving for the South less than three weeks ago. It has been a flying visit, but it has served to give us a change and keep us in touch with Florida, which is now closing one of the most successful seasons in its history. Great throngs of people now visit that state each year, most of whom are elderly people. They renew their youth in a measure, and thus keep on the sunny side of life.

Is the Pulpit Losing Power?

By W. T. Moore

Perhaps this question does not state the matter in the best form. The pulpit may not be losing power, and yet it may be feeble when compared to what it ought to be. It is probably true that the power of the pulpit to-day is as great as it has been for even a century. Of course, in such estimates, we must take into consideration the number of pulpits which now exist as compared with former times. The pulpit as a whole to-day ought greatly to exceed its power in any other period of the church's history. Is this true of it? I think not. There is no doubt about the fact that even the feeble pulpit of modern times is exerting a very considerable influence upon the thought and life of the twentieth century. But I am bound to believe that its power for good is nothing like what it ought to be, and what it certainly would be, if it were not bound hand and foot by stereoperfunctity. It needs freedom. Not simply freedom of expression, or freedom to say things that may be contrary to the stereotyped creeds of the churches, but freedom to court investigation, and opportunity for the expression of contrary opinion. Some of us pretend to go back to Christ and his apostles for guidance with respect to all religious matters. But it may be seriously questioned whether we are always willing to do this when Christ and his apostles would lead us contrary to our established habits and customs. There is scarcely anything so imperious as custom, and a slavish subservience to modern custom is precisely what is the matter with the pulpit to-day.

In the first place, the pulpit is protected against any questions. This is very different from the method of Christ and his apostles. They courted reply and discussion at every meeting they held. Each meeting was for the purpose of enlightening the people, and was open for inquiry, reply, or any form of investigation that would help to inform the hearers. Everywhere the apostles went they held themselves ready to hear all objections and to answer these on the spot. Indeed, their most signal triumphs were gained by this free platform.

No doubt this method had some apparent disadvantages. It sometimes produced considerable confusion; but even this was far better than the "ease in Zion" which now prevails in most of our churches. A little stirring up would be a great relief to those who attend our religious services from week to week, and are compelled to hear sermons which are often cut by the theological pruning knife and then dried in the furnace of sectarian enthusiasm—an enthusiasm which has its center and circumference in the maintenance of creedal shibboleths.

Is there any salvation from this questionable use of the great privilege of preaching? I am inclined to make a suggestion or two even at the risk of being regarded as an iconoclast.

(1) Let there be an open meeting held on every Lord's day for the proclamation of the gospel and for hearing objections and answering them on the spot, or else answering any that may be left in the question box during the week. Let there be the most perfect freedom granted at these meetings for inquiry, objection or discussion, within reasonable limits. This will at once bring to the meetings the very people who have need of them. Thousands now stay away from our Lord's day religious services for no other reason than the failure of the pulpit to touch the actual needs of the people. The sermons may be excellent of their kind; they may do for church members and persons well-disposed to religion, and so far as these hearers are concerned, accomplish a great amount of good, but if they miss entirely the unconverted masses, then it must be confessed that the power of the pulpit is limited entirely too much.

Probably the plan I have suggested would be subjected to considerable abuse. It might be that the meetings sometimes would not be as quiet as a graveyard, but they would, even at their worst, be better than a graveyard meeting. Life needs agitation, and friction is generally the best evidence that things are not dead. I have never had any fear of free discussion, but I have always greatly feared the suppression of it. Evils may come with the former, but untold evils are sure to come with the latter.

But I do not believe that the freedom I have suggested would run away with itself, if properly managed by a wise presidency. Of course much would depend upon the presiding officer, who should usually be the pastor of the church. If he should announce the subject for discussion beforehand, and let it be known that it will be open with reasonable limitations to all comers, in my judgment the church would soon be surprised at the number of people who would be attracted to its services who now never enter the church building at all.

(2) Of course I do not mean that every public meeting of the church should be a "free for all" in the style I have indicated. Church members should have a special meeting for worship, for mutual edification, and for the study of the scriptures with respect to the development of the spiritual life. This, in most churches, should occupy the morning service, though sometimes it may be better to have it at another hour. The time, however, is a matter of mere detail and does not affect my general contention. No one believes in the importance of a quiet, restful, devotional service more than I do, but I believe that this cannot be secured, in the best sense, unless the meetings are practically confined to the church members, and hence without any outside interference. At present our Sunday services are held without any discrimination between the world and the church. Indeed, if there is any emphasis it is on the worldly side and not on the church side. "The world expects us" to do certain things and to have certain things done in our Lord's day services, and to meet this expectation we go on with our enumerations until the world practically takes precedence over the church in our Lord's day worship. The sermon is often a sort of medley without any very specific message for either saint or sinner. In an attempt to meet the case of both classes it has little or no power for either. But by the plan suggested all this lack of directness could be avoided. Will our churches have the courage to give up what is simply nothing more than a stereotyped formality?

(3) Much could be said about the character of the preaching of the present day which has distinguished it from that of apostolic times. But I need now say very little with respect to this. It may be well to notice the fact that the apostles, in all the great assemblies which they addressed, gave special prominence to the gospel message as the power of God into salvation, and so far as we can determine the matter, they seem to have thought that it was no special part of their mission to consider side issues, such as ordinary education, civilization, etc. They evidently regarded their mission as ended when they proclaimed the message of salvation. This message was first and last with them. They followed strictly the mission of their divine Master. He came to seek and to save the lost. This was the burden of apostolic preaching.

The modern church seems to have lost the vision of the apostles. A great deal of the preaching at the present time is to entertain, to instruct with respect to much that has little to do with the salvation of souls. All this may be well enough in its place, but when it occupies the chief place in modern preaching the pulpit may still be powerful, but it will not be unto salvation. And yet salvation was the one thing aimed at by both Christ and his apostles.

A Three Months' Missionary Campaign

By A. McLean

For three months I have been out among the churches in the interest of the March offering for foreign missions. Stephen J. Corey, of New York, was with me for one month. Cecil J. Armstrong, of Winchester, Ky., was with me for nearly three weeks. Prof. G. A. Peckham, of Hiram, and J. L. Garvin, of Youngstown, O., were with me in four or five rallies each. W. E. Rambo, of India, was with me a considerable portion of the time. These men were heard with delight and profit. Their addresses will bear fruit for all time to come.

The rallies were well attended. In some cases as many as five or six hundred were present. Owing in part to the extreme cold, in a few places the attendance was less than was confidently expected. All things considered, however, there is abundant reason for gratitude that so many found it in their hearts and in their power to be present and to assist. When the nature of the service is considered, the attendance is remarkable. A rally is unlike any other service. It is a council of war. There is no thought of amusement or entertainment. There is no applause. People come together to think, to speak, to hear, to pray, and to sing about world-wide evangelism. All the powers of mind and heart are concentrated for the day on this single topic. Information is given in the hope that it will generate interest and enthusiasm, and interest and enthusiasm are generated in the hope that they will lead to more numerous and liberal offerings.

While on this campaign several things were suggested to my mind.

First, it is as plain as daylight that the missionary spirit is extending itself in ever-widening and in ever-deepening circles. Such rallies as were held this year could not have been held ten years ago. Then there were not so many men able to speak intelligently on the subject. Then the missionary atmosphere was lacking in the churches. Then the people would not attend. The interest in missions now is much stronger than it was then. It is no exaggeration to say that in hundreds of churches there is an earnest desire to support a missionary. It is almost certain that before the present decade closes hundreds of churches will be doing this. The living link idea is gaining ground every day. It haunted some church officials so that they could not sleep.

Second, the people are hungry for missionary information. There was the closest attention to every speaker who had a message to deliver. If a man should attempt to give an address that did not cost him anything, or a liberal section from an old sermon that had nothing pertaining to the subject in hand in it, and that had not even been warmed over, it is likely that the interest would flag perceptibly. But one who had made careful preparation and had a message that stirred his own heart was sure of a most appreciative hearing. The audience drank down his words as a thirsty ox drinks water. It was curious to see how they listened to a man who had been at the front of the battle, and who knew as others could not the truth of what he affirmed. He left them in tears.

Third, a campaign reveals the strange power of a preacher. Wherever a man wanted a great service and worked for it, he had it. There was no exception. In not a single instance was the program carried out exactly as it was planned. Lovers were inconsiderate enough to plan for their weddings on the very day set for the rally, and it was necessary for the preacher to remain at home. Others sickened or died, and that interfered with the service. In some cases half or more than half the speakers did not appear. In spite of all interferences, when the preacher in whose church the rally was held exerted himself to the utmost, the attendance of both speakers and people was most gratifying. His enthusiasm was contagious and affected those near and far. So it came to pass that many of the rallies were as largely attended as a state convention, and were quite as enjoyable and quite as helpful. When the service was eminently successful the lion's share of the honor belonged to the men who acted as host.

A. McLean.

Fourth, many strong churches have yet to learn to give on a scale worthy of their numbers and resources. They are timid and afraid to venture in faith. Some churches of a thousand or more members think they cannot support a missionary. They are abundantly able to support two or three. They could do that easily if they were willing to undertake it. They make much of their current expenses. They have to pay the minister and the organist and the chorister and the janitor. The difficulty is in getting the consent of their own minds to attempt some large thing. They do not appear to have learned that it is far easier to do a handsome thing than it is to do a petty thing. More persons respond, and they respond more liberally, and they feel more self-respect and more joy when it is done. Most of the churches have yet to learn what it is to have fellowship with Christ in his sufferings.

Fifth, many do not yet understand what a rally is. Men and women will leave home for several days and spend considerable money to attend a state or national convention, and think nothing of it. These same people do not often think it worth while to attend a service of equal value at their doors. They do not spend even an hour at the rally. It will be different as time goes on. They will come to know that they cannot afford not to attend such a service. Lovers will understand that the rally has the right of way, and will arrange their weddings so as not to conflict. Every speaker who is necessarily detained will endeavor to send a substitute, so that the program may be symmetrical and complete. No one who accepts a duty on the program will fail to appear except for a sufficient reason.

Sixth, no one who is acquainted with our churches can fail to feel that we are living in the roseate dawn of a better day. The signs of prosperity and promise are numerous and unmistakable. Better houses of worship are being provided. The ministry is better equipped. The people are more hopeful. They are thinking and planning for larger things. The churches are becoming aware of their power and of their opportunity. Like young Samson, when the Spirit of the Lord moved upon him, they are coming to feel equal to any task to which they are called.

Seventh, if the preachers will stand together they can do anything. They can haye a great rally anywhere. They can enlist thousands of churches that have never as yet done anything for this cause. The power in their hands is all but unlimited. If the six thousand men who preach the gospel would all co-operate there would be at least six thousand co-operating churches. In each church there would be at least one contributor. In every church there are those who would place liberal offerings beside the liberal offering of their minister. It is example that counts. Self-sacrifice in the pulpit is sure to call out self-sacrifice in the pews.

By F. D. Power

The pageant of the Inauguration has passed and all things have resumed their normal condition at the capital. We miss the noisy House, but the stately Senate for a time abides. The most sensational feature of the dying Congress was the attempted mileage grab—the most scandalous thing for many years, but the upper house had the virtue and the lower house did not get away with the swag. The House of Representatives had impeached before the Senate a judge on the charge of inflating his expense accounts, and just before the vote was taken had exercised its ingenuity in framing legislation to prevent such constructive inflation on the part of judges, and then proceeded to commit the same sin in the most aggravated and wholesale fashion by voting themselves $109,000 for expenses they never incurred. The judge traveled, and charged the maximum expense allowed by law—ten dollars a day; the House did not budge from beneath the Dome between the special and regular sessions and voted itself mileage as if its members had gone all the way home and back again. It is reasonable to expect that some of these honorable gentlemen will hear from the country. Such inordinate greed and glaring inconsistency deserve a rebuke that will be remembered.

The Inauguration brought a number of our brethren to Washington, among them J. G. M. Luttenberger, President R. E. Hieronymus, S. M. Hunt, Hon. W. H. Graham, and Hon. Oliver Marshall. The Vermont avenue church is always a sort of Mecca to visitors on such occasions, and we had a generous share, representing every section of the country. Two very sad incidents for us were connected with this festival. Capt. O. C. Pinney, of Cleveland, one of our brethren, who had visited us and arranged for quarters for his command, was one of the victims in the wreck at Clifton; and William P. Luddington, another of our people, from St. Louis, a young civil engineer, formerly from Muncie, Ind., was taken with the smallpox and died here, and it was my sad duty to conduct his funeral last week in this city. His wife reached him before the end came. It was a distressing case which called forth universal sympathy. The death of Senator Bate, of Tennessee, was directly traceable to exposure on March 4. The other Senator from that state, Hon. E. W. Carmack, is a Disciple and attends the Vermont avenue church. Hon. Benton McMillin, who was with us some years ago, is talked of as the successor of Senator Bate.

Our brother, Judge A. R. Webber, of Elyria, O., did excellent service for the cause of Temperance in connection with the Inauguration. Representative Babcock, of Wisconsin, proposed to permit licensed establishments to remain open on Sunday, and debauch the crowd as usual, when Judge Webber brought in a resolution to the contrary effect and defeated the move. There was unusual drunkenness on Inauguration day, but on Sunday all places were closed. Our Anti-Saloon League had a large number of workers on the watch for any violation of the law, but the city was dry.

In church circles there is unusual activity. Lenten lectures, mission services, and protracted meetings are on. E. B. Bagby returned from three weeks' work in Columbus, O., where he conducted a revival at the Central church with 39 additions. He found Boreas combined with that old trio of adversaries, the world, the flesh and the devil, in opposition to him. W. S. Priest, in turn, is holding evangelistic meetings at our Ninth street church with fine prospects and fair weather. W. R. D. Winters is in charge of the music. J. J. Taylor closed a very useful and successful series of services at the H street church, where he was assisting his brother, J. Murray Taylor. There were 34 added and the church greatly encouraged. The evangelist did excellent service and large numbers attended the meetings. Eight united with the Vermont avenue church the past month. J. E. Stuart is getting hold of the work at our Fifteenth street church with vigor. The outlook in that needy section of the city is every way bright and hopeful.

Our historic Beaver Creek church met with another great loss recently in the death of Miss Ellie Newcomer. She was born in the old Newcomer home July 14, 1827, and entered into rest February 22. From her birth her vision was impaired, seeing only the dimmest outlines of things, but this affliction seemed to call into play energies and virtues of the rarest and richest quality. As a noble Christian woman she was known and loved far and wide and her influence for good felt as that of few people who have enjoyed the fullest possession of all the senses. Active as a member of the church in all its departments of service, she has been from the beginning the teacher of the primary class in the Sunday-school where all the little ones knew and loved her as "Aunt Ellie"; she was the leader of the woman's missionary work and of the children's band, and an active Christian Endeavorer. Our Lady Bountiful, she was generous to the poor and needy, and a liberal supporter of the local church; she provided for the education of young men for the ministry, and our General Home Missionary Society received $3,000, and the Church Extension Fund also $3,000 of her bounty, and she presented the Beaver Creek Sunday-school a well selected library which has proven a blessing to old and young. Possessed of unusual qualities of head and heart, well educated, and versed in the best literature, she was a writer of both prose and verse, and always delighted and instructed her readers. Best of all, an earnest Christian of the most pronounced spiritual and devotional, and yet lovable, wholesome, and happy type, with the word of God dwelling in her richly, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith, she indeed adorned the gospel of God her Savior and served well her generation. With the beloved and venerated Aleck, her blind brother, who preceded her but a little while, she spent her long and useful earthly life, and in the heavenly mansions they are again united. What a lesson in these two beautiful lives! How useful and memorable notwithstanding their limitation! What a rebuke to those who, equipped with all their faculties, are yet idle and unfruitful! Blind Homer, blind Milton were no greater in their sphere than these two loyal souls and can stand no higher now with their darkened eyes opened.

While I remember those who are passing on, let me speak of J. G. Burroughs, one of our preachers, who died at Berkley, near Norfolk, Va., Feb. 24. He was from Illinois, and was 67 years of age. Educated for the ministry, he also studied medicine, and practiced that profession. At the time of his death he was pastor of the Twenty-fifth street church, Newport News. Dr. Burroughs moved to Berkley in 1889. For several years he conducted a newspaper known as the Saturday Graphic, and wrote several books. He was specially interested in prophecy. His widow and two children survive him. A man of ability and character, he served faithfully. One more prominent in the public eye, who often worshipped with us here, and whose wife was a faithful Disciple, was Hon. John H. Reagan, of Texas, who fell asleep in Christ in his 89th year at Palestine. Judge Reagan was the last member of Jefferson Davis' cabinet, in which he served as post-master general. He was a member of the House of Representatives before the civil war, and after, and served also in the Senate. As a constructive statesman he ranked high, and was not only a great man, but a historic figure. I never knew a more prodigious worker, or a kindlier man. As a youth he walked all the way from his native Tennessee to his adopted home. When in Congress he lost a child and I knew him to walk the floor all night with the sick little one in his arms and then labor all day at his congressional duties. A modest gentleman, a devout spirit, a faithful and diligent servant of the people, he was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing his autobiography. It would be a volume of great value.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 10, 19—.

MY DEAR NEPHEW:—I have been thinking, and not without concern, about what you say of the demands made on you by some of your congregation. I threw out a hint in a former letter at the social dangers that would confront you in Belleview, but I scarcely thought your own church would be so exacting. If it is expected that you attend every social function that goes on among your people; every service of the church; represent your denomination at divers and sundry union meetings; attend to your regular pastoral duties and then preach two edifying, uplifting and convicting sermons a week—if, I say, you, a sort of ministerial yearling, are expected to do all this and do it well, then —pardon my Bostonese—you are up against it in dead earnest and I can see your finish right now.

Lowell once said of Wordsworth, alluding to that poet's prolificness, that he tried to make "Jove's eagle do the service of a clucking hen." I've been wondering if I could strike off some sort of a parallel expression to describe the preacher who tries to spread himself out over so much territory, but I can't exactly hit on one, other than to put it this way: the fellow who attempts it is ticketed for a trip over the "dead line route," beyond the peradventure of a doubt.

There are some things the preacher should not permit. Kindly but firmly he should insist that he must have hours for study that have to be respected. I once incurred the practical ill-will of a good but thoughtless woman because I absented myself from a birthday party which she gave in honor of her five-year-old daughter. Strive to keep your study hours inviolate. Do as Dr. Cuyler used to. Pin on your study door the "very busy" sign which will ordinarily keep away those who have no real business with the pastor. There are a few people who have no adequate idea of the value of the preacher's time. Good but sadly mistaken folk they are.

An erudite, not to say pedantic, fellow at "R," where I was located for five years, used to drop in on me two or three times a week to discuss "evolution." He was the veriest crank on the subject I ever met. The "Darwinian theory" was his special hobby and he never lost an opportunity to mount it with much eclat. The poor fellow met his Waterloo, however. At the hotel where he boarded, one day two or three traveling men were present with him at the dinner table. By and by the unwitting victim got on his hobby and was soon in a gallop. "Do you know, gentlemen," he said, "do you know that I am ready to confess that perhaps I descended from the monkey?" Quick as a flash a red-faced, twinkling-eyed salesman for a hat house, who sat directly opposite, blurted out: "Well, my friend, some things are so obvious that a confession is entirely unnecessary!" It was heroic medicine and it cured, too.

Of course, you ought to be ready and willing at all times to succor the needy and to go on errands of mercy. But there's a vast difference between doing this and trotting your legs off to please and blarney everybody. Be busy, but don't make a fuss about it. Don't tell everybody you see how very busy you are. That's out of place, too. Simply be soberly and earnestly industrious.

Be sure to consider the interests of the young men in your congregation. If I were to live my life over again I would do even more than I have done to encourage young men for the ministry. I would make my study after work hours a veritable rendezvous for them. One reason why there is such a dearth of talented young men for the ministry is because ministers as a class haven't warmed up sufficiently toward the young fellows. I have had several of my preacher friends to tell me that they would never encourage young men to become ministers, believing they ought to take up that career sort of spontaneously and so on and the like. Just as long as such a feeling is manifest among preachers to any extent at all, just so long will candidates for the ministry be as scarce as hen's teeth. Pick out the manliest, brightest and best fellows in your flock and get them interested in the minister's high calling. Next to winning a soul for Christ this winning a young man for the ministry ranks in blessed importance. You can't do too much of such glorious work and I bid you God speed in using your influence in this way on the splendid young fellows in your church of whom you write so enthusiastically.

Coming back to the matter upon which I touched in the beginning of this letter, let me suggest, Will, that you set about in the gentlest and sweetest way to get all the time you can for good solid preparation for your pulpit. I predict things will then adjust themselves properly. "Drifting with the tide" may do well enough for the title of a song, but it's a bad principle to direct one's life. Then let me advise, too, that you take this problem, as you should take all problems, straight to the Father in prayer. I put this last by way of special emphasis. Affectionately your uncle,

WILLIAM PRENTICE.

The New Evangelism.

By Charles Forster.

To have a new evangelism we must have a new conception of the meaning of salvation through Jesus. We must feel that the truth as it is in Jesus, when understood more truly, will form a message of salvation that fully meets the needs of our present age.

To my own mind Christ's true salvation contains no idea of a vicarious or substitutional atonement, but that a man is saved when, by a divine influence, he is attracted unto high and holy views of life. The lower life becomes mean and low in the dazzling radiance of the higher. His whole being longs and strives after a higher life. Such a man is saved.

How can men be thus attracted? The answer to this question is the new evangelism. As we look at Jesus, especially at his cross, we see an aspect of manhood so high and holy that as we reflect upon it it retreats farther and farther into the depths of the divine, and draws us with a peculiar power. It reveals unto us our unworthiness, and saves us from low and sordid views of life. What power there is in the cross! "The sky was dark, and the earth, as in all the environs of Jerusalem, was dry and gloomy. For a moment his heart failed him; a cloud hid him from the face of the Father; he endured an agony and despair a thousand times more acute than all his torture. He saw the ingratitude of men; he perhaps repented suffering from the vile race, and exclaimed: My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken me! But his divine instinct still prevailed, and in the degree that his life became extinguished, his soul became clear, and returned by degrees to its celestial origin. He regained the idea of his mission; he saw in his death the salvation of the world; he lost sight of the hideous spectacle at his feet, and profoundly united with God, he began upon the Cross that divine life which was to live in the heart of humanity throughout infinite ages." The Cross!

"I take, oh Cross, thy shadow for my abiding place;
I ask no other sunshine than the sunshine of Thy face.
Content to let the world go by, to count no gain nor loss,
My sinful self my only shame, my glory all the cross.
"Upon that Cross of Jesus mine eyes at times can see
The very dying form of One who suffered there for me;
And from my smitten heart, with tears, two wonders I confess:
The wonders of his glorious love, and my own worthlessness."

By beholding the Cross we are attracted unto a divine life—a life which it is possible for us to try to live. We can long and strive to get our lives closer to the meaning of the Cross, and it is by doing this that we are saved.

Retiring and Tiring

BY F. M. GREEN

I am now fully at the close of fifty years of public life, of which forty-two have been spent in the ministry and eight in the school-room. Teaching and preaching have been my delight since as a young man I first entered the school room. These fifty years of continuous and often strenuous life have not yet tired me out, but I have realized by many signs that my generation is nearly passed and another generation is now the vanguard in the marching columns of progress. I have no sorrow that it is so. It is God's way and I am satisfied. I am not yet tired of the labor in the vineyard of my Master, though I find I cannot do what I once could; and I find myself on the edge of a *re*tired experience. While I am not able to take up any heavy burdens, I still will not refuse to do what I can do at the call of my brethren. During the winter I have taken a "vacation"—the first one in fifty years. So far as possible I have been visiting among the churches "to see how the brethren do." My first visit out of Ohio was to Washington, the capital of my country and nation. Twenty-five years had passed since I was there last and saw things "from the dome." There is no city like Washington among the great cities of our country. It is the only city whose growth marks nearly every feature of the greatness and wealth and splendor of the great Republic. It is the only city that each citizen can call his own. I go among its mighty buildings, and along its streets, and around its circles and monuments, and I say—"These are mine." The world is represented here as well as the greatness of the nation. I spent three weeks in the study of many matters to me of great interest. Of course I looked in on Congress, the Supreme Court, many of the public buildings, and departments, and did not fail to meet and receive the cordial greetings of my President. But while all these evidences of material greatness and power were interesting to me, I was more interested in the expression of the religious condition of the city. My interest was first special, then general. I had the pleasure of meeting the ministers of the Christian church in one of their regular meetings for conference. F. D. Power, J. Murray Taylor, Walter F. Smith, Claude C. Jones, E. B. Bagby, and J. E. Stuart are the good men who are now leading the various congregations of Disciples in the city. Brother Power is the oldest in service and in years of this goodly company. There are few, if any, pastors in Washington who have been so long in service with one congregation, and he is beloved by all who know him from the great President to the humblest citizen. Brother Bagby comes next with a record which commends itself to all. The others are younger in their service but are winning the hearts of many and the good will of all. In some respects the growth of the church in Washington in the last twenty-five years has been rapid and remarkable. When I was in Washington last there was one congregation on Vermont avenue; now there are six churches all growing and vigorous. Then 350 represented the extreme "number of the Disciples"; now there are about as many thousands as there were hundreds then. The church and Sunday-school membership of the various churches is about as follows: Vermont avenue, 600 church members and 300 in the Sunday-school; Ninth street church, 1,089 members, and Sunday-school, 824; Whitney avenue church, 200 members, and 160 in the Sunday-school; H street church, members, 250, and Sunday-school, 120; the Thirty-fourth street church has 64 members and 80 in the Sunday-school; in the new church on Fifteenth street there are to-day about 20 members and over 100 in the Sunday-school. All of these churches and schools are active and growing. I met, with the other preachers, William T. Laprade who at present has no station where he does special work.

The various religious phases of belief are represented in Washington. In the church announcements for February 5, 1905, I find religious services announced as follows: Protestant Episcopal, 16 churches; Methodist Episcopal, 21 churches; Presbyterian, 13 churches; Baptist, 20 churches; Christian, six churches; Congregational, four churches; Lutheran, six churches; Adventists, two churches; New Church, two churches; Unitarian church, one congregation; the Catholic body has numerous congregations, and "National New Thought Center," whatever that is, Spiritualists, United Brethren, Friends, Secular League, The Brethren, Theosophy, Reformed, Christian Science, Christadelphian, Vedanta, Universalist, Divine Science, Millennial Dawn, and a miscellaneous lot whose names I couldn't get, represent the mix-up. Mighty is division! It is as good as a shotgun to scatter abroad the seeds of fads and fancies and real beliefs in soil into which it would not go otherwise. But amidst this diversity, with its babel voices, the note of unity is being sounded and the ugly contentions of the years of my boyhood are giving way to melodies of peace.

I left Washington well pleased with my visit and am now among my friends in Wilmington, Ohio, with no prospect of getting away soon unless I run away in the night. With my best wishes.

Heart Suffering.

By Simpson Ely.

In Gethsemane our Savior was in such agony of soul that great drops of sweat like blood stood upon his brow. The cup of the world's sins—your sins and mine—were pressed to the lips of him who knew no sin, and in whose mouth no guile was ever found. It threw him into an awful paroxysm of anguish. It was here that he fought the supreme battle of his life, and here he won his greatest victory.

Jesus was a great sufferer upon the cross. The crown of thorns pressed upon his head caused great pain. The nails that pierced his hands and feet were most cruel. The burning thirst was awful to endure. But this was physical pain; and not to be compared to the agony in the garden of olive trees.

There is no suffering like heart-agony.

A mother never regrets any physical pain she has endured for her loved ones. It is the anguish of the heart that kills her—anguish caused by their ingratitude and wrong-doing.

A saintly old woman—now in heaven—said to me, "When our children are small they trample upon our toes; but when grown up they trample upon our hearts." That was the cry of a broken heart. She had a drunken, debauched son who had squandered her money, forged his father's name, and disgraced the family.

That mother complained not of any physical suffering she had endured for her boy. She had gone down into the very jaws of death, almost, to give him life; but the pain was swallowed up in joy when she pressed the new-born child to her heart. Through years and years she had ministered to his wants. She had spent sleepless nights over him when he was sick. Her hand had soothed his brow and her feet had been quick to go upon errands of love for him. In pain, and watchfulness, and weariness, she had cared for him; but never a murmur fell from her lips. It was a joyful service.

But his waywardness broke her heart.

Doubtless we meet with people every day who have their heart-throes. We jostle them upon the streets, and they greet us with smiles; but in their hearts they carry coffins which contain buried hopes, loves, or ambitions. May God enable them to say, "Thy will be done." With J. W. Carpenter may they be able to sing:

"Sometimes I pray 'neath clouded skies,
Within mine own Gethsemane;
I cry aloud, and God replies,
'Fear not, my child, cling fast to me.' "

Joplin, Missouri.

Christianity may produce agitation, anger, tumult, as at Ephesus, but the diffusion of the pure gospel of Christ and the establishment of the institutions of honesty and virtue, at whatever cost, is a blessing to man.—Albert Barnes.

The Rational Basis of Obedience

By H. C. Garrison

III. The Spiritual Necessity of Repentance.

God commanded all men everywhere to repent. Why should such a command be given, and man's salvation made to depend upon obedience to it? Why not save all men, the penitent and the impenitent, the obedient and the disobedient? Why put before men so difficult a task that multitudes fail to perform it, and hence fail to enter into life?

Repentance is no arbitrary demand made by sovereign authority, but a spiritual necessity growing out of the very nature of sin and salvation. The spiritual law underlying this command and making it necessary is tersely expressed by Paul in his Epistle to the Galatians: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." To unfold the thought of this passage is to explain the necessity of repentance.

The text is based on the well known duality of human nature. Man is an animal; he has essentially the same physical materials, organic structure and bodily appetites and passions as other animals. But man is more than an animal. Into him was breathed God's own breath of life, spiritual life. Man was made after God's own image—not physical form, but spiritual likeness.

Between these two parts of our being there is a conflict. Paul describes it as a "warfare"—"The law in my members warring against the law of my mind." The flesh clamors for gratification, for indulgence; the "inward man" delights in the law of God. In the light of this duality it is easy to see what he means by sowing to the flesh and to the Spirit. Yielding to the flesh is sowing to the flesh; yielding to the Spirit is sowing to the Spirit. Every deed done is in obedience to the one or the other.

The text compares a deed done to a seed sown. It links eternity onto time by the same law that binds the harvest to the seed. It connects destiny with conduct as effect is connected with cause. Actions are the seed; character is the grain coming to maturity; destiny is the harvest. The reign of God means a reign of law.

Time was when rewards and punishments were regarded as arbitrary. God was regarded as a judge clothed with absolute authority. We as criminals are summoned before the bar of judgment. What shall the Judge do? He may impose a fine; sentence to a term of imprisonment, or hard labor; or he may exercise judicial clemency and let us go entirely free from punishment. So the destiny of men was supposed to hang on the arbitrary decision of a sovereign God. He might save all, or many, or few, or none. He has, however, decided to prepare a fearful fate for the wicked; a lake of fire unquenchable, presided over by a fiendish fallen angel; a malicious, omnipresent and all but omnipotent immortal; a fearful "goblin that gits you if you don't watch out." Likewise, he has prepared for the elect a celestial city with golden streets and pearly gates, whose blessed inhabitants attend one eternal prayer-meeting. Our peace or our punishment, our weal or our woe, depend upon the place to which he decides to send us.

No argument against such a view of God's character should be needed at this time. A closer study of God's Word and of God's ways has led us to see that there is a reign of law in rewards and punishments. The God of the natural world is the Ruler of the spiritual also, and his conduct in one is no more orderly and invariable, no less arbitrary and capricious, than in the other. The body belongs to the natural world, the soul belongs to the spiritual world, and both belong to God's universe and are subject to the laws which he hath made.

To violate the natural laws governing the body brings certain penalties. These are not arbitrary punishments; they are effects with adequate causes.

Precisely so are there spiritual laws governing the soul. At the risk of being charged with uttering commonplace platitudes let one of these laws be mentioned, with its counterpart: Sin produces misery; or working in the opposite direction: Righteousness produces peace. The law of gravitation is not more certain or invariable than this law of our spiritual nature. "The way of the transgressor is hard." Who has not felt the operations of this law in his own experience: the pangs of remorse, and the sweet peace of a clean conscience? "First pure then peaceable" is the scriptural order.

Paul boldly pushes that relation between sin and suffering as cause and effect—and that of purity and peace also as seed and fruit—out into eternity, and assures us that the laws are there also. Sowing to the flesh, or sin, is the seed which ripens into destruction. As James tells us, "Sin when it is full grown bringeth forth death." Sowing to the Spirit likewise has as its harvest "eternal life." It is not a question of place, but of condition.

Without congeniality, there can be no pleasure in any companionship. A man whose habits were grossly immoral was thrown for a few hours into the company of several preachers and other Christians. It is needless to say he was ill at ease, and his significant remark, when he had escaped into more congenial society, was, "Boys, I would rather be in hell than among preachers." He spoke more truly than he knew. Take such a character, with such tastes, unreformed, just as he is, into the presence of God and the angels and redeemed saints, would he find peace and joy there? Heaven would be the worst hell to him; where he must endure the light which exposes to the eyes of purity all his corruption. It is, therefore, an act of mercy, and the best that divine love and wisdom can do for him, that he is separated and sent into "outer darkness." God will do the very best he can for every soul in that day. His verdict will be satisfactory to all. The wicked would separate themselves if he did not do it. "Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man," is the natural cry of a guilty conscience. That men shall call upon the rocks and hills to fall upon them and hide them from his presence is simply because they cannot endure his presence.

IT'S FOOD

That Restores and Makes Health Possible.

There are stomach specialists as well as eye and ear and other specialists.

One of these told a young lady of New Brunswick, N. J., to quit medicines and eat Grape-Nuts. She says:

"For about 12 months I suffered severely with gastritis. I was unable to retain much of anything on my stomach, and consequently was compelled to give up my occupation. I took quantities of medicine, and had an idea I was dieting, but I continued to suffer, and soon lost 15 pounds in weight. I was depressed in spirits and lost interest in everything generally. My mind was so affected that it was impossible to become interested in even the lightest reading matter.

"After suffering for months I decided to go to a stomach specialist. He put me on Grape-Nuts and my health began to improve immediately. It was the key-note of a new life. I found that I had been eating too much starchy food which I did not digest, and that the cereals which I had tried had been too heavy. I soon proved that it is not the quantity of food that one eats, but the quality.

"In a few weeks I was able to go back to my old business of doing clerical work. I have continued to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and evening meal. I wake in the morning with a clear mind and feel rested. I regained my lost weight in a short time. I am well and happy again and owe it to Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Martin, who has been doing some fine work in California, writes us from Redlands that, owing to local conditions in some of the fields in which he was to have held meetings, he now finds that he can get away by May or June, and will be ready to accept work either as pastor or evangelist after that time.

—Jas. Sharratt recently returned from an evangelistic trip along the Pacific coast where he held some successful meetings, and has since then been in meetings at Plainwood and Anita, Ia., and Camp Point, Ill. He is now desirous of entering upon regular pastoral work or continuing in the general field as call may come. His address is Lees Summit, Mo.

—C. C. Rowlison, pastor at Kenton, O., has been elected president of Hiram college. He begins his duties as such May 1. —Dean Haggard hopes that a day may soon be set to break ground for the new Bible building at Drake university. The daughter of Bro. G. W. Mapes, one of our devoted preachers, purposes to raise a fund of not less than $500 and have a memorial room in the new building. Another room is to be dedicated to the memory of N. A. McConnell, and another to the memory of B. W. Johnson.

—Probably few if any churches among us have made a better record during the past three years than the First church, Lincoln, Neb., which in 1901 was being aided in supporting its pastor by the help of the missionary boards. By May 1, 1905, this church will have paid in full $4,000 to the Church Extension Board for a loan granted them. The church is now a living link in the Foreign Society and will support its own missionary on the foreign field. N. S. Haynes, well known to our brotherhood everywhere, is the enterprising pastor.

—The California brethren have arranged to send some brethren to the east to advertise the great convention to be held there August 17-24. The railroads of the Central and Transcontinental association have granted a low rate for the round trip for this great gathering. It will make a most delightful trip. We hope that our churches who love their preachers will plan to send them to this national convention. It will do both church and brethren good.

—Reports from Denver, Col., indicate that the Broadway church continues in fine condition. Brother Tyler began his fifth year there October 23, 1904, since which time there have been 144 additions—89 of these were confessions, and three confessed Christ who took membership with other churches. The Sunday-school attendance now averages 400. The debt which in 1893 was $22,000 is now $4,000, and the interest has been reduced from 10 per cent to five per cent. It is interesting to see how the people place cash in the treasury when they are interested in spiritual things. For successive Sundays after the first Sunday of February the collections of South Broadway have been $122, $144, $100, $191, $153. These offerings were made without special solicitation.

—Wallace Tharp, who is pastor of the First church at Allegheny, which has always been a liberal contributor to foreign missions, and has its own representative in the field, in a letter to his congregation says: "I had much rather have $1,400 given by the 1,400 of us than to have $1,500 given by 100 of us. I am seeking your good in this matter; not your goods."

—We are informed by C. E. Pile, of Parsons, Kan., that Wesley T. Hunt, who was for 17 years a preacher among the Disciples of Christ, passed away at the home of his only brother, Jno. A. Hunt, near Galesburg, Kan., on March 9. He was well known in the west, and some further account of his life will appear in our columns. Brother Pile conducted the funeral services at Galesburg, where the interment took place.

—We are sorry to learn that Bro. J. W. McGarvey has recently been somewhat indisposed, but as our readers will note from his brief biography of Brother Garth, who has made what is certainly the largest gift to education at a single time ever announced in our brotherhood, he is at work again. Brother McGarvey will, it is hoped, be able to deliver a course of lectures at the University church, Des Moines, about May 22.

—Prof. G. P. Coler of the Ann Arbor Bible chairs, suggests that the next congress of the Disciples be devoted entirely to our educational needs and opportunities. The different phases of the subject which he suggests could be profitably treated are: the home, the Sunday-school, our young people, our press, our colleges, preachers' reading courses and preachers' institutes. In view of the magnitude of the educational problem as it presents itself to us to-day, this seems to us a wise suggestion, and we commend it to the committee that may be appointed to prepare the next program.

—A very unusual sight was the baptism of a number of Chinese which took place in the First Christian church, St. Louis. The church has a Chinese Sunday-school class conducted by Mrs. Jno. L. Brandt, wife of the pastor, and on Lord's day evening a week ago nine members of this class were baptized. This makes a total of 19 Chinamen who have now united with the church. The probabilities are that special work will be undertaken among the Celestials, who are quite numerous in St. Louis. Brother Brandt has been engaged in a meeting at Sandoval, Ill. The First church was never better attended than it now is.

—The East End Christian church at Pittsburg, Pa., has just passed resolutions in reference to their pastor, Wm. J. Russell, who is about to leave for another field of work. These resolutions are, as we would expect, highly complimentary of the great ability and fine devotion of Brother Russell. "He has watched over our homes with unwearied affection, visited the sick, comforted the sorrowing and hallowed the joys of festal occasions; in season, out of season, showing his supreme concern to be for the advancement of saints, and the salvation of sinners." Sister Russell also comes in for a loving word. Now that Brother Russell has undertaken another responsible charge we shall all "follow with solicitous love and earnest prayers" him and his wife in their new work.

—The women's edition of the Sapulpa Light was published in the interest of the building fund of the First Christian church of that territory town. For ten cents a copy of this edition will be sent to any one who makes application. The site of Sapulpa thirteen years ago had on it a log cabin. To-day there are 3,500 busy, progressive people there. Other churches had neat buildings, but the members of the Christian church had to gather in a hall, though they had secured a nice lot. It was for the purpose of providing a church here that the women of the little Creek Nation town undertook to get out this special edition which gives a great deal of information about that neighborhood. In our advertising columns will be found a communication from the president of the ladies' aid society.

—We have already announced the handsome bequest of Brother Garth for biblical education. The beneficiaries of the fund are to be selected, and the sum to be assigned to each is to be determined by the faculty of the College of the Bible, Lexington. We very cordially commend the example of Brother Garth, though we believe that it is better not to handicap a college by limiting the usefulness of a bequest to a specified purpose. More and more as we come in contact with the rank and file of our brotherhood are we impressed with the educational needs. Too many of us are content with being "babes in Christ," and never growing either in knowledge or in grace. We imagine it would be a very illuminating investigation if we could discover just how many of our preachers and church members have not read a single new book dealing with any religious question during the past year. Brother Garth desired that young men should have an opportunity to broaden their knowledge and increase their spiritual perceptions and he has provided so that many a young man, worthy and promising, shall not now be forced to leave college for want of a little money.

—The members of the First church, Bloomington, Ill., were greatly surprised when their pastor, Wm. Ross Lloyd, announced from the pulpit that he had tendered his resignation, to take effect the first of June, which will be the end of his pastoral year. The understanding between pastor and board has been that on three months' notice their contract could be terminated at any time. We are not informed as to the cause of the resignation other than a newspaper report, which would seem to indicate that some of the official board were dissatisfied. On the other hand, the pastor, in the conclusion of his statement, exhorted the brethren not to regard the pastor as a hireling simply to preach sermons to please them; he must be free to preach and teach the gospel of Christ, without attempting to cater to the whims or opinions of individual hearers. Brother Lloyd has been quite successful, seemingly, in his present pastorate, there having been 200 converts added to the church during the 21 months of his charge, while the offerings to missions have been three times as large as they have ever been in the history of the church. He has held pastorates at Lexington, Ky., Nashville, Tenn., Richmond, Ky., and Youngstown, O., and studied at Canton and Kentucky universities.

—For some months past we have all had our thoughts centered on the foreign mission work. Our own country now demands our attention. The great opportunities before us may be seen from one example just reported. Haskell, I. T., is one of those new towns which is growing so rapidly. It is 20 miles west of Muskogee, in the Creek nation. It was established only about eight months ago, yet has a population of about 600 already. There is no church building in the town yet. Bro. Wm. C. Thompson went there two months ago, found a few Disciples, got them together, organized a church, secured an excellent building site, and, with the foundation already in, and the building under way, we will have a neat frame building ready for service within 60 days of date. Brother Thompson is giving his whole time to the work, without financial remuneration, for the present, and it is confidently expected that our membership will be increased ten fold before the close of the present year. That is what we could do in hundreds of new and rapidly developing districts if we had the financial means to support the right preachers in the field. It is not everybody who can go to a new town and support himself for two months or longer, with the expectation of an ultimate support from his brethren. We commend the spirit of Brother Thompson and wish we had hundreds like him. The Home Board could find many men both competent and devoted if they could give them reasonable support.

WHY $200,000 FOR HOME MISSIONS?

BECAUSE—We should correct our neglect of this great work.

BECAUSE—It is the ripest field in the world.

BECAUSE—It is our base of supplies. The Missions receiving assistance from our Home Treasury sent $2,340.66 to our Foreign Society in 1904.

BECAUSE—Our own brethren—our own flesh and blood are asking help to establish churches—we should certainly hear and heed their cry.

BECAUSE—The Home Board did more work last year than any previous year in our history—165 churches organized and 16,861 additions by our Home Missionaries. This work is a success.

BECAUSE—It is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ—to win souls in America. We should be about the Lord's business.

Ask your minister about the Offering the first Lord's Day in May. Full supplies of envelopes; literature, papers, etc., sent on application to the Secretary.

Another Generous Gift.

I am just back from a visit to St. Joseph, and while there, Bro. M. M. Goode and myself visited Bro. J. C. Wyatt, and he told us to put him down for $1,000 for the permanent fund. This is as it should be. Our business men are coming to our assistance. It is a gracious deed for which we are exceedingly grateful, and we trust to receive many such before the year is out. T. A. Sapulpa, Ind. Ter.

Assist a good cause and at the same time learn all about Sapulpa, Ind. Ter., by sending 10 cents for a copy of the Woman's Edition Sapulpa Light. The money will be used for the building fund of the First Christian church of Sapulpa. Address,

Mrs. D. A. McDougal,
President Ladies' Aid.

Hurry! Hurry!! Hurry!!!

The terrible weather all through February made it impossible for many of the country churches, especially, to have any meeting at all. Quite a number of them had arranged to take the offering then for state work, and of course could not. Now the March collection for foreign missions is with us, and all this means that funds for state missions have all but ceased to come in. With many of our churches it is possible to send their money for state work at any time; to these we make special appeal to hurry their funds to us at once. Let us plead with you for immediate responses of the most generous character; the work is going on gloriously, let it not lag for want of means at this critical time.

Only a little more than three months now to the state convention and over half of the churches that gave last year have yet to respond. Surely there is need for haste. The King's business demands it. Hurry! Hurry!! Hurry!!!

Claude L. Garth and His Noble Bequest to Education.

By J. W. McGarvey.

This noble brother is one to be held in lasting remembrance—and he will be. He was a modest, unpretending, but well educated Kentucky farmer. He had spent his whole life on the farm which was his home at death, having inherited it from his grandfather. By economy and good business management he accumulated a fortune estimated at about $200,000. Being childless he left it all to his excellent wife during her natural life, after which it is all to be devoted to the education of indigent young brethren for the ministry. This is the largest donation ever made to such a purpose by one of our brethren unless it has been exceeded by the gifts of General Drake to the university which bears his name.

Brother Garth became a Christian while quite a youth, and he maintained an unblemished reputation as such to the day of his death. His life was spent, we may say, as a member of the church at Newtown, Scott Co., Ky., within a few miles of his farm. This church was founded by Bro. John Allen Gano, of blessed memory, whose home was near by, and he continued to minister to it as long as he lived. Brother Garth was a true child of his in the gospel. In his later years he was first a deacon and then an elder of this church, and in every way he was one of its most substantial pillars. He was never behind in any gift or any work. He was a close and constant student of the Bible, and his family altar at home was never neglected. His widow, who bitterly feels his loss to her, was brought up in the same neighborhood, and no woman ever had a husband who loved her more devotedly or cared for her more tenderly. His last illness was comparatively brief, and as it affected his brain, his mind was too much clouded for such communications as he would doubtless have made to his friends. He was only fifty-nine years of age, and all felt that his departure was premature, while no one who knew him had the slightest thought that he was unprepared for the call of his Lord. God grant that many, many other men of large means shall be moved by his example.

New Santa Fe Lines in the Southwest

The Santa Fe system is building several new lines this year in the Southwest.

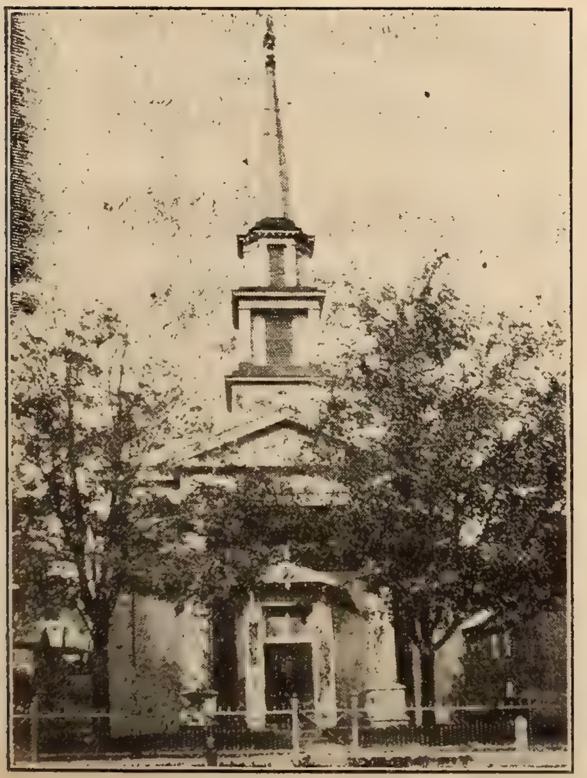
The branch from Kirbyville, Tex., east 45 miles to DeRidder, La., a point on the Kansas City Southern, is being rapidly completed. It will penetrate the Louisiana pine belt. Contract is now being let for the big bridge across the Sabine river.

Grading has been done on an extension of the Phoenix & Eastern from Winkelman to Dudleyville, in the Salt River Valley, Ariz. Near Dudleyville is the noted mountain pass for which the Santa Fe and a competing railway have been contending in the courts.

The Indian Territory branch from Owasso to Tulsa will be opened this spring. Although only 13 miles long, it will give the Santa Fe access to a very rich territory.

The Arizona & California Ry. is now building west from Wickenburg, Ariz., a station on the Santa Fe south of Prescott. The track has been finished for a distance of 17 miles. Grading has progressed 28 miles further. This branch will open up a valuable mining district, whose development has been retarded by poor transportation facilities.

Other lines have been surveyed in Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, but the above are the only ones where dirt is actually flying or rails have been laid. Part of the recent $50,000,000 bond issue of the Santa Fe may eventually be used to build some of the new links which are needed for a more economical handling of overland freight, such as the Abo Pass cut-off near Albuquerque. The problem is to get lower grades without increasing the distance too much.



At Plymouth, Pa., is one of our strongest congregations in the east. Some account of it was given by F. D. Power in his "As Seen From the Dome" February 9. On this page we give an illustration of L. O. Knipp, the pastor, the old structure which was built in 1857 and the building as it now stands, entirely remodeled at a cost of $20,000. Brother Knipp is a Hiram graduate, and a wide-awake preacher. He raised all the money needed before the dedication service.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Voice from the Southland.

Having accepted a call extended by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions we found ourselves on the first day of November in this beautiful capital of South Carolina. I know of no other city in the country for which nature has done more than for this one. Columbia is situated at the junction of the Broad and Saluda rivers where they unite their waters to form the Congaree. The latter is at certain seasons navigable to this point. The elevation of the city affords splendid drainage. The soil is such that very good streets and walks are made simply by grading them and adding either a little sand or clay, according to which of the elements may be found in excess at the point being worked. There has been very little mud although we have had some hard rains. After a rain the streets look as if they had been scoured. Most of the streets are broad, many of them having three rows of trees in them. The climate is mild. Our coldest day was 12 degrees above zero, which is said to be colder than they have had for several years. While our friends in Indiana, Ohio, and New York have been writing us about snows and zero weather we have seen our neighbors sitting on their piazzas enjoying the sunshine. We are told that the heat during the summer is not excessive, the hottest day last summer being 98 degrees.

Within a few years this city has grown from a country town of 6,000 inhabitants to about 30,000. Business of every kind seems to be prosperous. Traveling men tell me that next to Atlanta, Ga., this is the best commercial center in the southeast section of our country. Rents are as high as in some cities with five or ten times the population of this place. The chief manufacturing industry is the making of cotton cloth. There are six mills here, employing 6,000 laborers. The Olympia mill is said to be the largest of its kind in the world under one roof. Among the other industries are a glass factory, an iron foundry, three cotton seed oil mills, two fertilizer factories, and the Southern R. R. has shops located here.

Several of the state institutions are located here. Among them are the penitentiary and the hospital for the insane. The state college of South Carolina, one of the oldest educational institutions in the south, has just celebrated its one hundredth anniversary and is planning for a wider usefulness in the years to come. Among the educational institutions are the Presbyterian theological seminary, the Presbyterian college for women, and Columbia college for women, a large Methodist school. There are also two large schools for the colored people, Allen university and the Benedict school.

Religiously the people are conservative. The liberalizing influences that have made themselves felt in the eastern, central and western states are unknown here. Among the churches are three Episcopal, three Methodist, two Presbyterian, two Baptist, and two Lutheran congregations, all having good church homes that are accessible to those who may wish to attend their worship.

Three years ago the Christian church made its first effort to establish itself here. Our Church Extension Board, realizing the importance of the field, purchased a lot and work was begun by Bro. M. B. Ingle. A rough tabernacle, without floor and having a tar-paper roof, was erected for a temporary home, but which with few changes yet serves as a meeting place. The work began with some promise of success, but the congregation was not able to sustain Brother Ingle and he was compelled to leave. For more than a year they were without a preacher. Upon the appeal of the small congregation the C. W. B. M. decided to make this one of their mission points, and when I reached here I found a little band of about 20. Some were discouraged and others indifferent. They have not been able to pay the Extension Society even the interest on their loan. So here we are in the midst of this conservative people meeting in a house that is not as good as many barns. In fact the boys on the streets call it the barn. They wanted to know of one of our boys "how many horses we kept in there." Even with a comfortable church home we might not be able to reach many of those who are already established religiously, but there is coming into our midst a mass of population which we might reach if we had a respectable place to which we could invite them, where they could hear the simple gospel plea.

In this entire state we have only about 35 struggling congregations. Not a single one of them has a good church home and is self supporting in the employment of a preacher for all of his time. The total membership is only about 1,600. Think of it! You talk of neglected fields! Where is one more neglected? In Kentucky we are told that there is one Disciple to every 18 of the population; in Indiana, one to 21; in South Carolina we have one Disciple to every 795 of the population. In Kentucky and Indiana there are single congregations with nearly as many members as there are in this state. My native state, Indiana, has 130-000 Disciples and 950 churches. Indianapolis, the capital, has 15 churches, or one to about every 11,000 of its population. Here in this capital we have 30,000 to be reached by a single congregation which is weaker than the feeblest one in the Hoosier capital.

Columbia is the key to the Palmetto state. A congregation established here will make its influence felt throughout the state. To Columbia come the business men of South Carolina to buy their merchandise. To Columbia come her legislators. To Columbia the people of this state send their sons and daughters to be educated.

What we need is $12,000 or $15,000 to give us a respectable church home. But where is this to come from? Our little congregation here has not got it. Our members are so few in the state that we cannot expect much assistance from them. We believe that there are among our stronger churches of the north and west friends who can and will come to our relief. We are here as servants of the churches of Christ. We can serve you more effectively if you will give us the needed equipment. In the west we might struggle along for a few years and hope to get a footing, but here we are late comers on the field and it will take a larger expenditure of money and time to bring results. A respectable church home will put our work forward 10 or 15 years in this city and mean much to the Master's work all over the state.

Forty years ago two armies overran this section. Our fathers thought no sacrifice too great for the maintenance of their political beliefs. Mothers of both north and south gave up their sons, wives gave up their husbands in that awful struggle. Are we to-day as anxious to establish the church of the New Testament as they were to protect their ideas of government? Shall we show our faith by our works?

Columbia, S. C. Stanley R. Grubb.

Northern California.

The evangelistic wave which is sweeping England, Wales, and some of our eastern cities, has reached California. Fresno, Oakland, Los Angeles and several other places are in the midst of union revival meetings. This bodes good for Christian union.

T. H. Lawson is in a meeting at Brentwood. W. W. Pew is in a tent meeting, full of promise, at Porterville. C. W. Jopson is in a meeting at Stockton, with D. W. Horn assisting. J. B. Askew is assisting W. T. Lambert in a meeting at Galt. Many other meetings are planned.

L. W. Klinken, of Des Moines, is in the state with a view of locating.

R. N. Davis, of Santa Cruz, has been up at Chico setting things in order.

Eureka, Wheatland and Colusa, we understand, are soon to vacate.

Our Christian colony has passed the experimental stage and is now an assured success. The writer sees an opportunity here to found a work or make practical a movement that in a few years will largely stop the great reduction to our numbers annually by "scattering" Disciples, which scattering makes such great inroads on our gains each year. To this end I have resigned the state secretaryship which I have held for over two and a half years, and from now on will push the idea of Christian colonization.

May the Lord grant to raise up a wide-awake man in every state to select suitable locations for Christian colonies.

Preparations are now starting in earnest for our greatest convention at San Francisco, August 17-24. Come and see us.

Acampo, Cal. J. P. Dargitz.

Empire State Notes.

D. C. Tremaine, pastor at Williamsville, has just closed a good meeting with home forces. There were over 20 additions.

Allen Wilson soon begins a meeting at Jefferson street, Buffalo. This church has recently had a very successful month of "tithing." It was in the nature of an experiment, and now the people who tried it want to continue. The finances for the trial month were more than doubled.

Brooks Brothers, of Indiana, are in a good meeting at Troy with G. B. Townsend. They had over 20 additions the first week.

The Tabernacle church, North Tonawanda, has just closed a fine meeting; 92 were added. H. H. Moninger, of Steubenville, O., assisted the pastor, W. C. Bower. This is one of our best young churches.

I am helping the pastor, R. P. McPherson, in a meeting at Dunkirk. We have had 24 added so far. Fine interest. This is one of our newest mission churches. Brother McPherson, their first pastor, is just finishing his first year. He has done a fine work. His splendid personal work is winning him a warm place in the city. One hundred were present at Bible-school Sunday. The next step will be a church building; the people are now meeting in a hall. McPherson is one of the men who enjoys taking a work at its beginning and staying with it till established. Dunkirk is a city of 15,000 in the famous "Grape Belt" of America. The Brooks locomotive works, employing nearly 4,000 men, are located here. I will go to Upper Troy next, beginning a meeting there March 19.

We need a response from those churches, Christian Endeavor societies and Bible-schools that have not yet sent in an offering for state work. The treasurer has been obliged to borrow money. Stephen J. Corey,
Sec. Evangelist.

An Evening in Drake Laboratories.

Recently the professors in the department of science in Drake university invited the rest of the faculty to spend an evening with them in the laboratories; and quite a large number of teachers of various branches assembled in the Science Hall, where they received a most delightful entertainment. They were first invited into the rooms of electric experiments, and after some preliminary explanation of simpler electric machines, the working of which was exhibited, a most astonishing exhibition with strong electric currents was presented. The college has the benefit of a very heavy current from the city electric plant, and after the professor had explained how this current could be vastly increased by means of a huge induction coil which he used, he exhibited in several forms the tremendous power thus produced. He explained that electricity is measured by volts, and that a few hundred volts were sufficient to run the large street cars throughout the city. About six hundred volts are sufficient ordinarily to kill a man, and a thousand volts will usually kill instantly. By means of the induction coil he was able to produce a current of 50,000 to 100,000 volts. He used instruments to show that a piece of metal charged so heavily as this imparts the current to the surrounding atmosphere by shooting forth beautiful bright and purple flames in every direction. If a person with a piece of iron in his hand were to hold the iron very close to the metal thus heavily charged, he would receive into his body the entire electric current. The astonishing thing is that while a few hundred volts will kill a person, more than 50,000 volts can be discharged into the human body without harm. The professor and one of the students again and again exposed themselves to these heavy charges of electricity and felt no injury.

In the effort of the university to keep quite abreast with the age in electric appliances, it is provided with complete apparatus for illustrating wireless telegraphy. The message is transmitted by means of a succession of heavy electric sparks given out in such order and time as a person notices in the clicking of a telegraph instrument, and the atmosphere is charged by these sparks in every direction from the instrument.

The visitors were taken into another room where a receiving instrument was located, and although there were two thick walls of brick between them and the transmitting room, the receiving instrument clicked off the time of the electric sparks made by the operator. Had the receiving instrument been situated ten or even forty miles away, it would have promptly responded to the sparks made by the instrument in the other room. By this it is seen that it is not necessary, in transmitting comparatively short distances, that the instruments should be located on very elevated positions. The transmitting instrument may be placed in the basement of a building and surrounded by thick walls, and yet the air is electrified by its messages for many miles in every direction.

The teachers were next invited into a reception room where the professor of biology, using a fine electric lantern, gave a very interesting exhibit of magnified cross sections of various parts of animal bodies. It was far more satisfactory than looking at anatomical specimens through the microscope. Exhibits also were given by the lantern showing certain photographic pictures recently made by the professor of astronomy and his class. Drake university is fortunate in having the best telescope in Iowa and one of the most successful instruments for photographic work in the country. It has been but a few years since efforts to photograph groups of stars and nebulæ have been successfully made, and our professor has been fortunate in taking some groups in the very best form. He has a very fine photograph of the nebulæ of the Pleiades, which will soon be prepared for publication. The photograph of Orion with contiguous stars and nebulæ manifested the presence of innumerable heavenly bodies which could not even be seen by an observer looking through a telescope. In making a photograph an exposure of several hours is required; and this demands very patient labor on the part of the operator. He must sit constantly by the instrument with his fingers on the regulator, so as to keep the instrument pointed precisely in the same direction. This is no easy task; for the constant movement of the earth, an occasional jar by a passing street car or heavy wagon upon the street, or even the slamming of a door in the building, may turn the instrument aside from its proper course, and a few moments' exposure with the telescope out of line will be sufficient to mar the picture. So trying is this on the nerves of the astronomer that he is able to sit by the instrument only a short time, and then he must close up the camera for a brief period of rest. If he chooses he can wait until the next evening or some time later for further exposure and the finishing of his work.

The visitors were not only greatly entertained by the exhibits of the evening, but were delighted to see the progress that the scientists of the university are making. After some very delightful refreshments, served in one of the operating rooms, in the midst of various chemical and biological apparatus, and on dissecting tables, the company were adjourned, feeling that they had rarely engaged a few hours more profitably and pleasantly.

India's Doings.

By Walter G. Menzies.

Just now we are experiencing some of the coldest weather that we have yet had on the plains. We rose the other morning to find that the tomato vines and other plants had been killed by a heavy frost. Such weather is very trying on the natives and we missionaries do not take to it very well. To-day I sit penning these words with my overcoat on and do not feel any too warm.

While India has its sunshine it also has its cold spells that those who have left their native land may have an opportunity of putting on their warmest clothing brought out from the homeland. The cold weather months of November, December and January in India help us to forget that in April, May and June India's heat will be oppressive. So there are compensations even in India's weather.

GEROULD MEMORIAL BUNGALOW, RATH, INDIA.

Just at the present writing a large number of workers connected with the various mission boards are out touring in India's villages, urging thousands to accept the "Light of the World." There is hope for India's villages, for, broadly speaking, the despised of Hindu society dwell in these wayside hamlets. The despised classes in Judea were attracted to Christ by the fact that he showed them sympathy and treated them as men. It is the same to-day in India. In many places the outcasts of Hindu society have flocked to Christ in thousands, mainly because they find in him a sympathy and a life that Hinduism denies them. This is one of the crowning proofs of the truth and power of Christianity in every age, that the poor and despised have the gospel preached to them. During these months of evangelistic activity many a despised one will be confronted for the first time with Christianity, and many a soul will rise from a state of hopeless degradation to embrace the teachings of a religion which treats him as a man, sweeps away the barriers of caste and proclaims him to be a son of God and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven. For this evangelistic work there is not a sufficient force of workers, and ere the year closes may there be no less than six missionaries sent out by the church of Christ to devote their time and talents to this needy work.

Mrs. Gerould, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been in India now over two months. Naturally the objective point of that long journey from the homeland was Rath, where the station was established two years ago as "the Gerould memorial" in memory of that godly and saintly Disciple, Dr. Gerould, so well known and loved by the brotherhood. Sister Gerould's presence here has brought joy and inspiration to the work.

The people have come to know her and have learned to love her for the work she has made possible in their midst. The homes of the rich and poor alike have been thrown open to her and many a sweet message of light and life has she left behind in those homes of darkness and death. Everything about the work has been of interest to her and from her visit among the different stations and gathering facts concerning the work, she will go home with a full basket of rich experience and knowledge regarding the work of your fellow laborers.

While here, Sister Gerould purchased the land adjoining the mission property on the north. This gives the mission a beautiful site for a school and church building. There are over a hundred fruit trees on the place and a couple of very fine wells, one of which becomes the "Gerould memorial well," being purchased by the members of the Gerould family. The well is seventy-five feet deep and eight feet wide, with a standing supply of water during the hot weather of thirty-five feet.

The other well is somewhat smaller but will be very useful in many ways. We are so thankful for this addition and praise God for the dear friends who have the interests of his kingdom at heart. Sister Gerould will attend the coming convention of the church to be held at Damoh in March, where she will address the missionaries. She leaves Bombay about March 20 and will spend a few weeks in Scotland and Ireland and from Queenstown sail for the States.

The past year's work has been on the whole one of unusual activity at every station, and when the reports are given at the coming convention I feel sure that it will be one of our record years. The establishing of the Bible college at Jubbulpore and the introduction of the printing press at the same place, are already producing wonderful results.

Weekly there goes to every one of our stations the Christian Helper, in which are the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor lessons, with a very helpful page or two on current events and doings at the various mission stations. It has been the need of the mission for years here in India and we turn our faces and lift our hearts in praise to God who has remembered the mission in its needs.

At the present writing the work at three of our stations is somewhat affected by the plague, Bilaspur, Jubbulpore and Mungeli. It is impossible to give you any adequate account of the precautions that have to be taken by the missionaries not only in protecting themselves and families but the Christian community at large. For the safety of the orphanage girls at Bilaspur, Miss Kingsbury took the entire charge of over 100 girls to Pendra Road where they reside in temporary quarters till after the pestilence is over. It was no small undertaking to remove an entire orphanage a distance of 80 miles. Interruptions and breaks in the work in India do not all come in the same way. There have been no deaths among the Christians at any of the three above-mentioned stations—another evidence of God's faithfulness in preserving his children from pestilence, destruction and plague. Pray, dear friends, for these plague-stricken districts.

The missionary conference held in Madras two years ago recommended the holding of special conventions for the deepening of spiritual life among Indian Christians. Many mission stations have united in holding such gatherings with the result that a great spiritual uplift has been given. Christian obedience and service have become a delight and the churches have become stronger and more fruitful to the glory of God.

For some time there has been general dissatisfaction regarding the spiritual condition of the native church. From many places has gone up the cry, "Revive thy work, oh, Lord, in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known." There is a crying-out for power, true spiritual power from on high. Missionaries are praying as they never prayed before for the spiritual upbuilding of those who have renounced heathenism and embraced the faith of the gospel. Indian Christians too are being raised up by God to pray and labor for the quickening of the churches in spiritual life and power. This truly is encouraging, for there are problems which face the church in India that only a Spirit-filled agency can deal with and solve. The greatest need in the church of India to-day is life. Not more elaborate methods, or better organization or new appliances, but life, more life. Christ said, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." As individuals or as a church we must be content with nothing less than this life more abundant. India is Satan's chosen battle ground. Here he has entrenched himself behind ancient philosophies and the bulwarks of caste prejudice. But, thank God, daily there are signs of his majesty's overthrow by the onward march of a redeemed host.

The closing of the year witnessed the inauguration of a movement in the Hamipur district which the writer hopes will be a yearly affair, namely, a Christian Mela for the deepening of spiritual life. It was held at Mahoba and lasted five days. Every missionary in the district was present, numbering 10 in all. Mrs. Gerould, of Cleveland, Ohio, Brother Elsam, of Bina, and Norman Brown, of Jubbulpore, were present as guests.

The devotional services were led by Christian girls who prepared short speeches on "The Fruits of the Spirit," love, joy, peace, etc., taking a subject at each meeting. This gave concentration of thought for the devotional hour and made it very helpful. At each session there was an opening address on the following subjects: "Waiting on God," "Walking with God," "Living in Christ," "Be filled with the Spirit," "Workers together with God." Other subjects were: "How to win men to Christ," "The needs of the church," "The responsibility of the church to the world," "Temptations and what to do with them." Two sessions were devoted to Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work and all taking part acquitted themselves nobly. Two addresses were given on "Temperance," one from a medical standpoint and another from a moral and spiritual view. Both were well received and a very large number at the close banded themselves together as a temperance society to further the interests of this cause. On the whole the convention was one of great helpfulness and the problems which face the church in this district will be easier met and dealt with. It was a season of sweet fellowship.

Virginia.

D. S. Henkle recently held a three weeks' meeting at Dayton in which 43 persons made the good confession. He will dedicate a splendid new house at Harrisonburg in the early summer.

J. T. T. Hundley, of Norfolk, was confined to his room for three weeks by a severe attack of grippe. He is now at work again. H. C. Combs supplied two Sundays during his illness.

C. E. Elmore, in the employ of the V. C. M. S., is now in a promising meeting at East Radford.

E. B. Kemm recently organized a Y. P. S. C. E. at Blacksburg with 40 members. There are less than 50 members of the church at that place.

J. G. Burroughs, who has been pastor of the east Newport News church, died recently from an attack of pneumonia. Brother Burroughs was popular with his people and the work was prospering under his leadership. The church militant has lost an earnest, consistent soldier; the church triumphant has enrolled one of its noblest saints.

H. C. Combs, ably assisted by J. T. T. Hundley, recently organized a Sunday-school with an enrollment of 29 in the city of Portsmouth, where the Disciples have never had a church. Portsmouth and vicinity has a population of 25,000. Under the auspices of the V. C. M. S. Herbert Yeuell, of Uniontown, Pa., will hold a meeting in this city in June, at which time it is thought a good congregation can be organized. Steps are already being taken toward the purchase of a lot suitable for church purposes. The people are in earnest, and with such a leader as Herbert Yeuell will no doubt succeed.

H. D. Coffey, who has given such splendid service to the V. C. M. S. in former years, has been re-employed.

T. G. Linkous, who graduates at Virginia Christian college in May, has been offered evangelistic work by the V. C. M. S. He will probably accept and prove a valuable acquisition to Virginia's evangelistic corps.

C. O. Woodward and the Manchester church are planning the enlargement of their house of worship.

The Shenandoah brethren, with the aid of D. S. Henkle, have recently raised all the money necessary to complete the contemplated enlargement of their house. Shenandoah with a membership of 50 has a Sunday-school of 125. H. C. COMBS, Fin. Sec. V. C. M. S.

From the Jamaica Mission Field.

The distressing physical ailment of the youngest daughter of Brother and Sister C. E. Randall has been told our brethren and sisters in these columns. On Feb. 14, a missionary outside of the family wrote: "The King's Gate home is saddened by dear Muriel's condition. She suffers much, and there is little that can be done to help her. She is gradually growing weaker, and has now been in bed for two weeks. We dare not question why this should be, but simply trust to our Father's love and wisdom. The dear child has been tried in the furnace of affliction and has borne it with wonderful patience and resignation."

J. J. Handsaker, wife and baby Lois, of Coquille, Ore., sailed from Baltimore, Md., Jan. 17, to be missionaries of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Since their arrival in Jamaica one worker there wrote: "The Handsakers have come, and we are happy with them here." Another: "The Kingston church is no longer without a pastor, and I think he will prove, as so many have been praying, to be the right man in the right place."

On Feb. 15, G. D. Purdy wrote: "I started evangelistic meetings at Manning's Hill on Sunday evening last. Up to last evening 22 had confessed Christ. God is blessing the district and answering our prayers. Praise his holy name. Oh, the joy of it! Pray for us."

M. Isabel McHardy wrote: "There is at the present, a marked anxiety about the unsaved, and many are the prayers and, I feel sure, efforts on their behalf. We are assured that our prayers in this respect will be answered, because we know our request for souls is in accord with the Father's will. At Torrington we began the year with 62. There are eight candidates to be immersed to-morrow (Feb. 15) evening. Some are from the Bible school. This department of our work is growing, and may we not hope that the results will be seen in the days to come? I do earnestly pray that those who profess to have yielded their hearts to God may indeed be 'kept by his power.' "

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, March 13.—There were six additions at our regular services at the Church street Christian church yesterday: four by confession and baptism, one previously baptized in another church, and one by letter from the Christian church at Brockton, Mass.—T. Henry Blenus.

GEORGIA.

Fitzgerald, March 10.—Our work here is moving nicely. I came here four months ago for my wife's health, took hold of a church with 40 members, being the minority of a division, but the Lord has been with us and has given us hearts to work, and to-day we have the best working and most harmonious church it has ever been my pleasere to minister to. We have just completed the plans for our church building.—N. G. Buckley, minister.

ILLINOIS.

Pittsfield.—Ten added since December. Three of them by conversion. March offering is $200.—W. E. Spicer.

Waukegan, March 11.—A husband and wife united with us last Sunday.—E. N. Tucker, pastor.

Chandlerville.—Meeting continued 19 days with 12 confessions and two from the Baptists. Begin at St. Petersburg, Florida, on March 25.—E. L. Frazier, H. H. Saunders.

Princeton, March 13.—We began as minister here March 1. There has been no regular work for some months. Took offering for foreign missions yesterday amounting to over $19. There was no apportionment, yet this offering should place us on the roll of honor. The time in which to prepare for the offering was very brief.—Philip Evans.

Franklin, March 16.—Our meeting is increasing in interest and attendance. Have had 13 additions—11 being heads of families. Nearly all the young people are already in the church as the result of Brother Burton's great meeting here last year when there were 80 additions. I am open for future engagements. Permanent address, Benkelman, Nebraska.—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist.

Pekin, March 13.—The church here closed a five weeks' meeting last night with a total of 70 additions. Fifty-eight of these were confessions, one reclaimed, one from the Methodist church and one from the Baptists. Two of those baptized were formerly Catholics, and two others Methodists. Intense interest and zeal have marked these meetings and the attendance has been remarkable. We had Chas. E. McVay, of Benkelman, Neb., for nearly four weeks as our song evangelist. When he left for his engagement at Franklin, we secured the services of Miss Nannie Ethel Evans, of Eureka.—J. A. Barnett.

Abingdon, March 15.—Union meeting between Congregational church and Christian church of this city lasted four weeks. Mr. Hanscome of the Congregational church and the writer doing the preaching. The spiritual life of both churches was deepened; the fellowship sweetened and the moral life of the community greatly strengthened. I never preached the gospel plainer in my life than I did during this meeting. Mr. Hanscome is a godly man and a fine preacher. There were 32 accessions during the four weeks and the week following: 29; to the Christian and three to the Congregational church. Of the three one demanded immersion. Of the 29, 24 were conversions, four by letter and one reclaimed. The first Lord's day in March was a great day for the church here. There were eight confessions during the day and the offering for foreign missions the largest in the history of the church. I have accepted a unanimous call to remain with the church. My first year closes May 1. Under the wise management of Mrs. Emma Lomax the school is doing fine work. In addition to rather heavy local expenses the Sunday-school gave about $150 for outside work last year. In the last eleven months we have fully met our apportionment along all missionary lines. During this time the voluntary offerings to missions, home and foreign, for this congregation from all sources amount to about $600. This is good but the best thing is that the interest in missions is growing.—Thomas J. Shuey.

Milford, March 11.—C. H. DeVoe and H. K. Shields are here in a promising meeting. The audiences are the largest in many years at any meeting in this town. They are splendid workers and we hope for a large number of additions. There have been five added to date. —P. Baker.

Milford, March 18.—There is more interest in this meeting with DeVoe and Shields than in any other in this town during the past 10 years; 19 added to date.—P. Baker.

INDIANA.

Remington, March 14.—We had six accessions here March 12: three by letter and three from the Baptists, making 31 in all since Jan. 1; 23 confessions and baptisms.—G. F. De Val.

Daleville, March 16.—Closed a meeting Feb. 1 at Rocklane, with 24 added to the church, 19 baptized. Closed one here at Daleville, March 14, with 27 coming forward, four from the U. B.'s, two from the M. E.'s, and two from the Baptists; 25 of these are new additions to the Christian church. One was not baptized, the husband refusing to let her be.—F. D. Muse.

Bedford, March 16.—Continuous rejoicing and revival among our members. At the regular services Lord's days March 5 and 12, there were 22 additions, 16 of them by baptism. Our great audience room and annex crowded every Sunday. Three hundred and fifty in our regular midweek prayer-meeting last night. Ten were baptized into Christ after the service. Fully prepared for our revival, which begins March 26, Brooks Bros. assisting.—E. Richard Edwards.

Noblesville.—Richard S. Martin preached to three great audiences at First church on Lord's day, March 12. Five additions first Lord's day.

Lynn, March 17.—On the second week of meeting here with the pastor, W. M. Cunningham, preaching. House crowded at each service. Seven additions, all grown people; three heads of families.—Guy B. Williamson and wife.

Kendallville, March 13.—Meeting closed yesterday with four additions, making 62 during the revival; 50 of this number were by baptism, three by letter, two reclaimed and seven from the denominations. Over 800 present and many turned away. Miss Gertrude Maxwell, of Findlay, Ohio, did excellent solo work during the meeting. Since coming here January 8 the church has raised $50 for educational fund, $65 for foreign missions, $80 for meeting, besides all local expenses.—J. D. Hull, minister.

IOWA.

Boone, March 11.—After two months, we find the Boone church in splendid working condition. Congregations have nearly doubled. Membership rallying. Pastor is invited to preach in Episcopal church during lenten season. Foreign missionary offering three times our apportionment. Pastor has column in daily paper every Monday evening for church items.—Edw. L. Ely.

Marshalltown, March 9.—Our meeting 24 days old and 30 added. Janes and Linnt assisting. We go on.—F. Hey Lemon.

Coon Rapids, March 11.—The meetings with Lawrence and Edward Wright at the Christian church are beginning with excellent prospects of success. The audiences have increased nightly. The singing is good. The Bible readings led by Edward Wright are especially fine.—Murvill C. Hutchinson, pastor.

Des Moines, March 13.—Two confessions at the morning service of Highland Park church.—M. Lee Sorey.

Charles City, March 10.—Started meetings Sunday, March 5; good crowds, fine choir of 25 voices under Prof. W. E. Dorsa.—W. W. Burks, evangelist, G. A. Hess, pastor.

Charles City, March 16.—Much interest manifested in the meeting. Five additions to date.—W. W. Burks, evangelist, W. E. Dorsa, singer, G. A. Hess, pastor.

Galva.—The meetings conducted by W. A. Morrison at Canton were stopped very suddenly on February 27, by the order of the health officials owing to the fact that there were several cases of scarlet fever in town. All public gatherings were prohibited for two weeks. As a result of the meetings 16 were added to the church: 12 by baptism and four by letter.—R. A. Adamson.

Oxford, March 13.—We took our missionary offering yesterday; more than doubled our apportionment—gave the largest amount ever given by this church for foreign missions. Our Bible-school is growing steadily. We have a fine Junior and they are doing good work. Christian Endeavor improving. Only organized last summer. Teachers' meeting and prayer-meeting growing in interest and spirit. Church attendance is fine; interest good.—B. F. Stallings.

KENTUCKY.

Versailles.—The revival meeting at the Christian church closed with 25 additions: 13 by conversion and 12 by letter; the church was strengthened, and many people outside of this congregation were helped by the strong sermons of John L. Brandt, of St. Louis. Friday afternoon Dr. Brandt addressed a monster mass meeting at the court house, the business houses of the town closing their doors between the hours of 4 and 5:15, while the services were being held. Circuit Judge Stout adjourned court in order that the court room might be used for the meeting. Every seat was taken and many persons stood up. Dr. Brandt preached a powerful sermon from the text, "If it be of God ye cannot overthrow it," and held his great audience spellbound.—R. J. Bamber, pastor.

MICHIGAN.

Saginaw, March 13.—Three added last night at regular service.—J. S. Raum.

MINNESOTA.

Lewisville, March. 13.—I had the privilege of taking the first offering for foreign missions at Truman, March 5. They have an extension loan, and have started their edifice. Under the enthusiastic and talented leadership of Percy R. Atkins, of England, recently from the Baptists, Truman is swinging into line with all of our organized work. One by confession at Willow Creek, and two by letter here yesterday.—Claris Yeuell.

MISSOURI.

Marceline, March 15.—One confession last night at our regular evening service, making eight additions since coming here January 1.—F. Boyd.

Fredericktown, March 12.—S. W. Robinson, of Libertyville, was with us over Lord's day, beginning Friday night, and preached, with one confession resulting. We arranged for him to come back May 1 and teach a class in singing.—S. P. Gross, pastor Mountain Oak church.

Moberly, March 13.—There were two additions at East side Christian church yesterday. Our March offering will be larger than we expected. Not all in at present.—J. F. Ferguson, pastor, Columbia.

Lamar, March 13.—One confession yesterday at regular service. Have or hope to have accessions at every service.—S. W. Crutcher.

Kansas City, March 14.—The West side church had three additions last Lord's day, two the week before, six the week before; additions nearly every Lord's day this year, many by baptism.—W. O. Thomas, pastor.

Bogard, March 14.—Two additions by letter at Hale Sunday.—C. C. Taylor.

Purdy, March 16.—I began a protracted meeting here the first Sunday in March, and the meeting continues with increasing interest, large audiences, best of order and attention. This is a missionary meeting. There has been no preaching here for a number of years. Church divided, scattered and destroyed over the "organ question." Have had nine additions to the congregation; three confessions last night; went three miles after the meeting and baptized them.—Eld. J. P. Haner.

Gallatin, March 7.—Our church is growing in all departments. Our Y. P. S. C. E. has entered into the "increase campaign" with a vim and we expect to have 75 members by June 1. Our offering for foreign missions was $60.30, our apportionment being $25. We gave $21 last year. Attendance on all services is increasing.—C. W. Comstock.

Newark, March 13.—Six added yesterday: four by confession and two by letter.—H. Newton Miller.

OKLAHOMA.

Guthrie, March 15.—I closed a two weeks' meeting recently at Davenport, with 20 additions: 17 from the world, one from the M. E. church and two by statement. This is virgin soil, Davenport being a new town at the junction of the Frisco and Santa Fe railways. We now have 58 members there who are building a neat house of worship, and are planning for a great work.—John T. Owens.

Newkirk, March 14.—Three accessions since last report. Two years ago we were in debt $350 on the church building and the home board was helping us liberally. LIBERAL DONATION

To Y. M. C. A. by J. F. Draughon.

The Ft. Worth Daily Record, of recent date, says in part: "Up-to-date, by far the largest donation that has been made to the Y. M. C. A. New Building Fund has been made by a gentleman neither a resident of Ft. Worth nor of Texas, although he has a substantial interest in Ft. Worth.

"Prof. J. F. Draughon, president of Draughon's Practical Business College Co., has made a contribution which ought to net the Association $10,000.00. He has contributed two hundred and fifty $50.00 scholarships that would net the Association, if sold at $50.00 each, $12,500.00, but he has given the Committee the privilege of selling the scholarships at $40.00 each, which will, when sold, net the Association $10,000.00. The Association has six years in which to dispose of the scholarships."

The above is self-explanatory. Draughon's Practical Business College Co. has colleges located in St. Louis, 10th and Olive, Kansas City and elsewhere. The Company now has a chain of twenty Colleges in thirteen States, one of which is located in Ft. Worth, which has a daily attendance of over three hundred students.

JESUS THE GOOD SHEPHERD.
JOHN 10: 7-18.

Memory Verses, 17, 18.

Golden Text.—I am the Good Shepherd; the Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.—John 10:11.

The figure of the shepherd and his sheep was a favorite one with the biblical writers of both the Old and the New Testaments. The Psalms are full of it. The prophets abound in it. Jesus himself made frequent reference to it. It will be a useful study to collect (with the aid of a concordance under the headings "sheep" and "shepherd") those passages in which this figure is employed.

The essential elements everywhere in the use of this figure of speech are the representation of man as dependent upon a higher power, in need of the guidance of an ampler wisdom and the protection of a stronger arm than his own, and the thought of God as the one who is able and willing to render that aid to man.

The verses of the lesson are in explanation of a parable which is given in verses 1-6. The parable and its interpretation illustrate the free way in which Jesus used this method of teaching. There was nothing rigid or mechanical about it. It was not necessary to find a spiritual counterpart for every detail of the parable, and the interpretation need not form a single consistent whole.

For example, in interpreting this parable, Jesus says: "I am the door," and again, "I am the Good Shepherd." The first of these statements represents Christ as the door of the fold through which men may enter into the enjoyment of all spiritual blessings, just as the sheep by going in and out through the door of the fold find protection within and pasture without. Even within the limits of this verse trouble arises if one pushes the parallel too far. One enters the spiritual fold through Christ the door, but does one also go out through that gate to find pasture? Of course one could say that "going out" means going out into the world to find and save others. But, while that is a perfectly correct idea, it is not in the text. Besides, even that does not afford a satisfactory literal interpretation of the parable, for sheep do not go out of the fold to save others. The only safe course is not to be too solicitous about finding too close a parallel for every detail of the parable.

There is an even richer meaning in the second interpretation, "I am the good shepherd." Two thoughts are especially prominent in it. The first is that the shepherd loves and protects his sheep even to the point of the sacrifice of his own life. His work requires sacrifice, and it is a willing sacrifice. There are unmistakable evidences that, especially toward the latter part of his ministry, Christ's consciousness of his own impending death was clear and strong. He wishes it to be understood that it is no mere accident, that it does not mark the failure of his plans, that it does not mean the triumph of his enemies over him. He will lay down his life and take it again, in accordance with the Father's eternal purposes.

The second thought is that the scope of the shepherd's interest is wider than the vision of any of the sheep. They see only their own little flock. He sees and cares for his other flocks. It is a lesson in toleration. Moreover, the shepherd plans to bring all his sheep together in one flock, and this is a lesson in unity.

Double the Power of the Preacher.

The Christian-Evangelist is entering upon a campaign to improve the PULPIT POWER OF OUR BROTHERHOOD. We invite a symposium on the subject of preaching—short articles and good illustrations from the experienced preachers of our brotherhood.

We propose to do our part by sending to the Summer Training School, under the direction of Dr. Edward Amherst Ott, as many ambitious preachers as are ready to accept our offer on a co-operative plan.

Special Advantages.

A special opportunity for practical lessons in voice culture and for instruction in pulpit action and gesture will be features of this school. An opportunity to meet, for a six weeks' term, preachers from other churches, from country and from city, to ask, and hear answered, questions of pastoral theology and sermonic difficulties, will make this course an exceptional opportunity for any man who has the Master's cause at heart, and who feels that it is a duty to succeed.

Bible lectures will be given by a carefully selected group of practical men, both laymen and preachers, which alone would make the conference and training school invaluable.

An Opportunity.

The Christian-Evangelist has decided to offer scholarships to this work, the regular price of which is $30, to all interested readers, on a co-operative plan. Any preacher who would like to take advantage of this course, or any church or society wishing to throw this opportunity open to the preacher of their church, should address the Christian-Evangelist immediately for particulars.

Pastoral Helpers.

The same privileges will be extended to Pastoral Helpers, and a course in Bible reading, extemporaneous speaking and general elocution will be especially interesting to the women who are making this their life work. Dr. Ott has planned to give four free scholarships in his regular classes to four helpers next year. These will be selected from the class next summer. The number of scholarships is limited, and immediate response is, therefore, necessary. All preachers or individuals interested should make application for the scholarship, and write at once for particulars to the Christian-Evangelist.

THE MAKING OF A CHRISTIAN: HIS FOOD.—2 Tim. 3:14-17; John 6:47-58.

(Consecration Meeting.)

For the Leader.

Any one who has been at all observing has noticed that we have been having a number of topics dealing with the same general theme, "The Making of a Christian." The latter part of the general subject each time has emphasized some phase of the making. This time we have for our sub-topic the food of a Christian. Is it not meddling with the private business of the people to presume to discuss the food they eat? No. Even this is a legitimate subject. What do you eat? How often? How much? These are good questions for self as well as the other one. But we come to think of food in a higher sense to-night. No one can deny our right in this field. The food spiritual of a Christian. It all depends upon this. He may be born all right. He may start off in his growth promisingly. But if he grows evenly on toward the fullness of the stature of Christ Jesus, it is because his food is such as the Bible prescribes. Let us see what this is and how it affects us.

For the Members.

1. Timothy was a young Christian who had a good growth in the Lord. He must have had a much better growth than was usual in those days. He led all the other young men. Paul made him his successor. This was at a time in his life when he was so young that there was danger that some would not hear him because of his youth. Paul says the reason for the growth of Timothy was in the fact that he had fed upon the word from his grandmother on. The word of God was a staple article of spiritual food in the families of the Timothys.

2. Growth in the Lord is not only progress in the individual life, but in the work of the kingdom. We must grow in one as we do in the other. It will not be much to our credit that we have lived in the fear of the Lord, if we cannot claim the distinction of having been a worker in the vineyard of the King. We are not to end the work with getting saved, but we are to begin it in this way, and then complete it trying to lead others to salvation. Now in this work we will find that the food of the word will furnish us the strength. It will furnish us to the work. It is a profitable food. Indeed, it will thoroughly furnish us. We can go out in the strength of God as brought to us in his word.

3. Then there is the diet for the sick and indisposed. When things have gone wrong. When we can have no heart to come to the page for historical or exegetical purposes. Our hearts are sore. We crave a food that will furnish a different strength. Where is it to be found? In the Psalms. In the prayers of the Bible. In the devotion literature of the blessed word. We can open here, and the soul too sick for the food of the word given for everyday toils will find a meal to its liking and to its strengthening. One day I called an upon old woman who was soon to pass over the river. I said, "Sister ——, where do you want me to read?" "Oh," she said, "I want you to read at that place where it tells of the city that came down from God out of heaven." The place was found and the tender words read. How it gave her strength for the trial! Her eyes brightened as I read. She received strength to die as the Christian dieth.

4. There is a demand for a sturdy spiritual growth in the church to-day. It is a tender work to care for the weak. It is a pleasant work in a way to see a great number of trusting, believing children of the Lord fed and cared for. But there is another side. There should be a much larger number of the church strong in battle with sin, rugged in nature, craving the hard things to do, daring the devil to do his worst, bearding the lion in his den. Why not? You should covet the spiritual strength that will make you a supporter of the weak, rather than one of the weak. You should have a faith that falters not, and that goes with a step that trembles not at the brink. Why not? There is food for this strength. There has been provision made in the plans of the Father for just such persons in his kingdom. Let no one say, "That is a matter of temperament. Persons are born with this ability." It is not altogether true, this way of putting it. This strength can be developed. There is the strong meat of the word that will furnish the strength. Let us find it and eat evermore of this food.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Is my weakness due to a wilful neglect to eat of the food that God has given me?

A GREAT FRIENDSHIP.—John 15:13-15.

Basis of Friendship. Love is the ground of a true friendship. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" (v. 13). Jesus gave the highest proof of his friendship for humanity, in that he laid down his life for us. The explanation of this supreme act of friendship is, "He loved us and gave himself for us." Any friendship based on policy, self-interest, popularity, wealth or position is likely to prove a very short-lived thing. Only those who love us for our own sakes are our true friends. Jesus Christ is such a friend as that.

An Enduring Friendship. Christ not only manifested his love and friendship for us in laying down his life for us, but in his continuous intercession for us. His friendship is as constant as the sun. How naturally, when we sin, do we ask forgiveness in Christ's name! This implies our steadfast reliance on his friendship. We feel sure that he who spared not his life in seeking our salvation will not withhold his grace and intercession when we need his help.

How We May be Christ's Friends. "Ye are my friends, if ye do the things which I command you." This is no easy test of our friendship for Christ. But could he ask less of us than this, when his commands are "not grievous," but are designed to promote our own highest good? If we have perfect confidence in his friendship why should we withhold obedience to any of his commands? We may make mistakes; we may fail through human weakness in carrying out his commands, but we cannot be his friends and not try to the best of our ability to obey every known command of our Lord—our best Friend.

Jesus Treats Us as His Friends. He has not dealt with us as servants merely, but has disclosed his great plans and purposes to us as his friends (v. 15), and asks our co operation. We are his brothers and he treats us in that confidential way. He has given to us his spirit that he might continually disclose to us larger measures of truth concerning himself and his gracious plans. A heart-searching question for every one of us is: "Am I proving worthy of the friendship of Jesus? Am I doing all that lies in my power to promote his glory and the extension of his kingdom?"

Prayer: Oh, Lord, we thank Thee for the proof of Thy love and friendship for us, in that Thou didst lay down Thy life for us, and that Thou art daily furnishing fresh evidences of Thy abiding love and friendship. May we realize more and more what this means to us, and seek to enter more fully into fellowship with all Thy thoughts and plans for the redemption of the world. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all he beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs, and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for hat reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

People's Forum.

Organic Union.

We have just read the little article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Feb. 16, entitled "Organic Union, What Is It?" and it seems to us such a satisfying description of the ideal scriptural church that we want to express our appreciation of it.

It seems to us that when a body of Christians are willing to recognize the full fellowship which we, as Disciples, have with all who confess Christ as the Son of God and their Savior, all we have to do in the matter, as a body of Christians, is to heartily embrace this opportunity of showing to them and all others that union is what we exist for. If any other body of Christians will lay aside that which is unnecessary, such as denominational names and creeds, surely there can be nothing left to separate us in the least, or to hinder the free interchange of membership or the merging of congregations wherever convenient.

A few weeks ago there appeared in your columns an article on the obstacles in the way of our union with the Free Baptists that we think exaggerated the difficulties of union. This later article, emphasizing as it does the ease and simplicity of Christian union, and giving clearly a practical basis for it, is so much better.

May the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST be blest in its work for love and unity. FRED DYSART.

Union Evangelistic Meetings.

My experience leads me to the conclusion that our brethren are doing the right thing when they take an active part in promoting, working in or leading union evangelistic meetings wherever they have an opportunity. The plea we make for Christian unity will not permit us to consistently do otherwise.

It is possible in a union meeting for one of our preachers to present the gospel in its purity, even to the unfolding of the book of Acts, with its examples of conversion in their completeness, without giving any offense; and he will be thought to be "mighty in the scriptures," and will be thanked by his fellow ministers for the new (old to us) light he has given them and the clearer views they have obtained of God's word, as I can testify from my own experience. Our brethren of other names are not all sectarian by any means, and many of them will hear us gladly if we will preach the truth in a catholic and Christian spirit.

Some years since I co-operated in a union meeting which was held in the churches of the city where I was pastor, the evangelist and leader being a man of national reputation. He had two assistants. There were things done in that meeting, as is frequently the case, that did not have the sanction of scripture, yet in that meeting persons came forward and I took the confession of those who signified a preference for the Christian church just as is done in our own meetings. Speaking of this at the close of the evening's service where the first confessions were made, one of the evangelists who was not familiar with the simplicity of our methods said to me, "That was a beautiful sight, and the most impressive thing I ever saw. It surpasses the altar and mourner's bench. That confession covers everything." It was a sermon to the people, and the evangelists were also profited by it; and such a sermon could not have been preached to them if the Disciples of Christ of the city and their preacher had stayed away from the meeting.

I permit no man to go beyond me in loyalty to the plea of the gospel as I learned it at Lexington, where it is taught in all of its beauty, simplicity and purity, and for the sake of this splendid plea I become all things to all men if by any means I may make them see the beauty of the simple gospel, and lead those who are God's children to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, with one body, one Spirit, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all. Henry Price Bolton was born in Buchanan county, Mo.; departed this life in Caldwell county, Mo., Feb. 26, 1905. He and Miss Lydia P. Davis were united in marriage in Maitland, Nodaway county, Mo., July 1, 1882. CAMP.

Mary J. Campbell was born Jan. 2, 1826, in Henry county, Tenn. In 1830 she came to Scott county, Ill., where she grew to womanhood and married G. W. Camp in 1848. To this union eleven children were born, eight of whom are living and all members of the church of Christ. She obeyed the gospel when 18 years old. She departed this life March 2, 1905, at the home of Eld. J. W. Camp, at Riggston, Ill., where the funeral occurred Sunday, March 5, 1905. She was truly a great woman, and the community, the children and the church will feel deeply their loss. She also leaves besides four sons, four daughters, a sister, two brothers and twenty-six grandchildren. The husband died March 2, 1894. She was active in church work, giving liberally to all mission and benevolent enterprises. The writer conducted the funeral and preached from Mark 14: 8, "She hath done what she could." D. F. MARTINDALE.

Elijah Martindale, by the grace of God a servant of Jesus Christ from childhood, departed this life Feb. 28, 1905, at Dayton, Iowa. He leaves a wife, Mrs. Anna E. Martindale, and daughter, Mrs. Dr. M. F. Anderson, both of Dayton, and a son, Dr. W. H. Martindale, of Marengo, Iowa. He was born June 2, 1843, at Buchanan, Mich. He became a Christian in boyhood. From August 13, 1862, to August 8, 1865, he was a soldier in the Union army. On Feb. 18, 1868, he was married to Miss Constanza V. Brown, of Niles, Mich., who lived but a short time. He was married again on Jan. 7, 1873, to Miss Anna E. Winchell, of Eldora, who survives him. The interment took place at Greeley, the old family home.

Brother Martindale was for many years one of the sweet singers of the Christian church. He also composed some popular songs. Among them being, "Old Fashioned Roses," "Oh, Wondrous Cross" and "Oh, Hear His Voice." His was a life of love and song. For fifteen years he was my constant friend, my devoted Christian brother, and I witnessed the testing of his character both in prosperity and adversity. For three years we sustained the relation of singer and evangelist. Our souls were often tried, but he was never found on the wrong side. He loved the truth, and never hesitated to stand for it though he stood alone. He sang the truth in tenderness and love. The harp is silent, but heaven has one more chief musician. Thy lips are forever stilled, but the sweet memory of their songs will yet win many souls to God. Dear brother in Christ, we rejoice at thy victory.

Spring.

Come, gentle Spring! ethereal mildness! come.
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud,
While music wakes around, veil'd in a shower
Of shadowing roses, on our plains descend.
. . . .
As yet the trembling year is unconfirm'd,
And Winter oft at eve resumes the breeze,
Chills the pale morn, and bids his driving sleets
Deform the day delightless: so that scarce
The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulfed,
To shake the sounding marsh; or from the shore
The plovers when to scatter o'er the heath,
And sing their wild notes to the listening waste.
Be gracious, Heaven! . . . . .
Ye fostering breezes, blow!
Ye softening dews, ye tender showers, descend!
And temper all, thou world reviving sun,
Into the perfect year!

The Scapegoat.

By Grace Ethelwyn Cody.

There was a subdued rustle in the prayer-meeting room. The clock on the wall said half-past eight of a warm summer evening, and the pastor had opened a book to announce the closing hymn. Deacons were reaching for their canes, and women, with an air of duty done, were furtively gathering up handkerchiefs and fans, when suddenly a loud voice remarked,

"I have a few words to say, now!"

The belligerent tones of the man who had risen in the back of the room struck in among the echoes of prayer and song with a jar that made people turn in their places to stare, but the pastor who had been watching the speaker all the evening, quietly laid his open hymn-book on the table before him, and waited.

No stranger looking at the Reverend Stephen Greenleaf in the kindly evening light would have suspected that half of his light hair was white as snow, or that his smooth, unworried face had been meeting the disagreeable experiences of life for nearly fifty years. Except for certain lines about the mouth—lines cut deep by long-continued self-control—his fine, open countenance might have belonged to a man of twenty-five.

"I wish to state," the excited voice was going on, "that I neither wrote, dictated, nor had any knowledge of, an anonymous letter said to have been written to one of the deacons of this church in regard to our pastor. I've stood this just as long as I'm going to. I expect to move away from Elmwood soon, as you all know, and at first I thought I'd quietly take my letter from the church and say nothing, but whispers have kept coming to me, and I understand that it is generally believed I wrote that letter. Now, what I want is justice, and what's more, I'm going to have it! I demand an investigation of the whole matter, here and now! It's got to be sifted to the bottom—to the bottom, I say—no half measures!"

As he finished and went down into his seat like a reluctant jack-in-the-box, sure to pop up again at the first opportunity, an atmosphere of shocked resentment filled the room. After an instant's pause old Deacon Willow slowly lifted his long, thin figure and gazed about, leveling his spectacles first at Mr. Greenleaf, then at Mr. Towne, and then at the room in general. The deacon was curved like a bow from head to foot. His very knees seemed to bend backward to help the resemblance, and his erect, black-eyed little wife who sat beside him, morally certain that he was about to say the wrong thing, was the arrow that made him complete.

"My dear friends," began the good old man deliberately, "I've never seen this letter that has been spoken of, but rumors, you know, will travel—yes—and I'm free to say I've been given to understand that Brother Towne wrote it—yes. But as I have no just cause to doubt his word in other matters, I purpose to take it here—I certainly do. I am glad he has made this statement. I think he does right not to leave us with a cloud on his name—yes."

"Very kind, Deacon Willow!" cried Brother Towne, whose sarcasm was no respecter of gray hairs. "Very kind, I'm sure, to take my word for it! I asked for something more! I demand investigation!"

Horace Black was on his feet at that—a young lawyer with close-cropped mustache and general businesslike appearance.

"I agree with Deacon Willow that Brother Towne has taken the right course," he said decidedly, "but as for investigating an anonymous letter, I am opposed to it. I consider it beneath notice."

"Right—altogether right," drawled Deacon Bugby, getting to his feet in a loose-jointed fashion and turning on Mr. Towne a face that expressed nothing. "Mr. Black is right. At the same time," he continued drily, "I sympathize with Brother Towne in feeling that he doesn't want the credit of that letter. I speak freely, since he has assured us he had nothing to do with it, and I must say it was a most contemptible affair. But it was addressed to me, as a few of you know. It's my letter. Seems to me I ought to have something to say about it and I prefer to drop the whole matter."

"You don't understand, Deacon Bugby!" Mr. Towne was growing more and more explosive. "I don't care so much who wrote it, myself, but who said I wrote it? That's the point—that's what I demand!"

He glared meaningly at one or two deacons, but off in a corner a man he had not appeared to notice stood up as if his name had been called. It was plain, honest-spoken Deacon Marks.

"I don't know whether Brother Towne means me or not," he began, "but I'm going to own right up. Deacon Bugby showed me that letter in confidence, and we both recognized—or thought we did—Brother Towne's handwriting. Now, I may have made a chance remark to somebody. If I have and if Brother Towne didn't write it, I stand ready to admit that I've done him an injustice."

As Deacon Marks sat down, little, wiry Deacon Gibbs, who had been one of the recipients of Mr. Towne's glare, sprang to his feet in some excitement.

"I have seen the letter," he acknowledged, "and I am astonished and shocked to have it brought up here. It is not fitting. Of course Mr. Towne goes from us under no cloud if he declares himself innocent. Of course he can take his letter from the church. Nobody's going to object!"

"For all of which I'm much obliged!" retorted Mr. Towne. "But I'm not satisfied!" Each of the last three words was emphasized by a clap of his hand on the book he held, and a unanimous gasp came from all parts of the room as he continued, almost shouting,

"It's all wrong, I say! Why didn't Deacon Bugby come to me when he thought I wrote that letter, instead of showing it to Deacon Marks behind my back? Why didn't Deacon Gibbs? Where was our pastor—the 'good shepherd' of his flock? Why didn't he come to me if the rest were afraid to? I want investigation—and I won't leave this room until I get it!"

There was an instant's awful pause. Then wealthy old Miss Dalrymple, tall, serenely influential, rose from her place in a front seat and sailed majestically down the aisle and out of the door. A slight flutter, and plump little Mrs. Banks, with her head as high as four-feet-nine could reach, followed Miss Dalrymple. Their manner asked, like words, "Are you going to sit here and let him insult our pastor?"

As if in answer, Mrs. Gibbs nodded at her three young daughters and led them out. The pretty school-teacher at the piano moved, but Mr. Greenleaf shook his head, and she sat still, with one white hand over her eyes, while others who had started to go settled back into their seats again.

When this little procession of petticoated disapproval had filed past Mr. Towne without seeing so much as the top of his head, and the door had closed behind it, young Mr. Black arose again.

"If Mr. Towne knows whom he means, let him make a charge," he proposed calmly; "then we'll have something to work on."

"I don't care to name names," growled Mr. Towne.

"Then for mercy's sake, let it drop!" exclaimed Deacon Gibbs, his little red face redder than usual under his sparse white hair. "What do we care about an anonymous letter, anyway? No man worthy of the name will write one, and—"

"Oh!" came a sudden cry from a small figure in one of the back seats. "No man did write that letter. I did it, myself! Oh, Mr. Greenleaf, I—I thought it'd be a good thing."

"Angie Bowman!" exclaimed a dozen voices at once, and even Mr. Greenleaf was surprised out of his determined inaction. He stood up, and started as if to go down the aisle. Then he stepped back to his place and said,

"Angie, come here to me."

The twelve-year-old girl who had come from an orphans' home to work at Mr. Towne's, walked shrinkingly up the aisle and stood before the minister—a thin, anxious-looking child in brown gingham dress and shabby straw hat.

"Now, what do you mean, Angie?" asked Mr. Greenleaf, gently. "You could never have written that letter. It is impossible."

"But I did!" she insisted. "An' I didn't make up one word—it's all true! I mean, you know, I heard 'em say it all at different times, an' I thought you'd ought to know."

"You heard—whom?" inquired Mr. Greenleaf with a sudden sternness in his voice.

"Why, the different folks where Mr. Towne sent me to deliver berries an' things from the garden. All of 'em said some. Mr. an' Mrs. Towne did, too. I ain't afraid any more," she added, suddenly seeming to remember the other people in the room. "Before, I was, but now I've done it, an' everybody's got to take their part."

Before Mr. Greenleaf could speak, Alexander Howard, the moneyed member of the church, who had been ominously silent until now, rested both hands on the back of the seat before him and slowly drew his portly form to its feet.

"I never heard of this letter until to-night," he declared. ("I never meant you should!" said a flash in Mr. Greenleaf's eyes.) "Is it possible that a letter written by that child has caused all this uproar? I can hardly believe it! Where is the letter? Is it here in the room?"

All eyes turned on Deacon Bugby, who looked meaningly at Deacon Gibbs.

"I have it," admitted the latter, reluctantly. "Deacon Bugby handed it to me just before prayer-meeting."

"Good!" said Mr. Howard. "Let's have it read out, here and now!"

"If you will," volunteered Angie coolly, "I can tell you just who said everything in it. I know."

There was a stir of protest, and deacons and deacons' wives moved nervously.

"The brazen little thing!" whispered Mrs. Marks; but Mr. Howard gave Angie a reassuring nod.

"Just the thing!" he cried, with a twinkle of satisfaction under his grizzled eyebrows. "That is, if you are willing, Mr. Greenleaf. I think such a course would sift the matter as Mr. Towne desires. And every person accused can have a chance to explain himself."

"Personally, I have no objection, Mr. Howard," said Mr. Greenleaf, and as he spoke, he drew a chair nearer to his own and gently placed Angie in it. "Of course you understand the letter is the property of Deacon Bugby."

"Yes, it is," seconded the deacon, who was already on his feet waiting for a chance to speak, "but if it really was written by that child, that puts a different face on the whole thing. Now, the handwriting, for instance, even though it did look like Mr. Towne's, was cramped and the spelling was bad. We thought that was all put on, you see."

"I always copy my writing after Mr. Towne's," piped Angie.

"Yes, yes, that's all straight," interposed Mr. Howard with a touch of impatience. "Are you willing to have the letter read out, Deacon?"

"Why, yes," was the slow response. "I suppose so—if it's the general wish of the meeting."

"Deacon Gibbs, will you read it?" Mr. Howard had evidently assumed command.

The deacon adjusted his glasses, half rose, then sat down and said,

"I prefer not to give my sanction to this sensational course by reading the letter."

"All right, let Black have it then," returned Mr. Howard authoritatively. "He's clerk of the church and the proper one to do it, anyway."

So the letter was handed out to Horace Black, who began, in his businesslike voice:

"'Deacon Bugby,

"'People are talking about Mr. Greenleaf and he'd ought to know it. It is said that he toadies to the rich man of the church and slights the poor folks, and that he'll have to do different if he wants to keep his place.'"

"Mr. Towne said that himself," put in Angie, in a high voice. "He sent me over to see if Mrs. Greenleaf wanted to buy fruit of him this summer, and she told me Mr. Howard had promised to give 'em all they could use out of his yard; an' when I went back an' told it, Mr. Towne said that to Mrs. Towne."

Everybody looked at Mr. Towne.

"Well, Brother Towne?" encouraged Mr. Howard, jocosely.

Mr. Towne was looking at Angie.

"I had to, Mr. Towne," she apologized, suddenly, and a muffled laugh went round the room. Then Mr. Towne came to his feet, but all the spring in him was gone.

"Really," he stammered, "I—I can't say. If I made any such remarks it was in a kindly spirit, for I've always been a friend of Mr. Greenleaf's—always."

"Good enough!" from Mr. Howard. "Go on, Black!"

"'It has been said,'" read Horace Black, "'that Mr. Greenleaf tells around that nobody can get him out of this church, and people don't like such talk. One lady said maybe he'd wake up some morning and find himself surprised.'"

"Mrs. Marks," announced Angie. "She gets all her fruit for putting up, of Mr. Towne, an' I took it over, an' I was standing in the kitchen while she emptied my basket, an' Deacon Marks told her Mr. Greenleaf said no one could get him out—an' she said that."

"The very idea!" whispered Mrs. Marks.

"That's true as the gospel," confessed Deacon Marks solidly. "I didn't mean our pastor any harm—he knows that, but Deacon Willow told me Mr. Greenleaf said that, and I—well, I told my wife."

Old Deacon Willow wavered to his feet. "Our pastor will remember making that remark to me," he said solemnly.

Mr. Greenleaf's eyes rested affectionately on the saintly old man.

"I remember saying that no one man should be allowed to send me away," he answered gently.

"Oh!" ejaculated Deacon Willow, and a general "Oh!" went round the room.

"Quite different!" triumphed Mr. Howard. "Read on, Black."

"'It has been said that the minister is proud because he has an author in the church, and to be good friends with him. And it is told that he reads too many books besides the Bible, too.'"

"That was Deacon Bugby himself," said Angie. I thought he'd know it meant him when he got the letter. He didn't have the right change to pay me for the fruit, one day, an' so he asked a man that was going by, an' he forgot to pay me for a long time, 'cause they were talking."

Deacon Bugby dropped his surprised eyes to the floor.

"How about it, Deacon?" queried Mr. Howard.

"I shall rely on my record as a deacon in this church to defend me against such a charge," was the dignified answer.

"I think I have something to say right here," said a new voice, and Robert Walpole, the mischief-making young "author," stood up and faced the excited group. "If any remarks of that kind are going the rounds, I want to state distinctly that it is I who am proud of Mr. Greenleaf's friendship—not he of mine. My father, sitting here beside me, won't mind my mentioning that when I was a boy, he was a poverty-stricken Methodist minister, able to give me only a very few advantages, and that it was Mr. Greenleaf's kindness, when we happened to be sent to the little town where he lived, that gave me my first start. He let me into his library—I can't tell you all he did, nor what I owe him, but I will tell you this: my principal object in coming to live at Elmwood was to be near him, and if I had ever thought that writing books was going to make me unworthy of his close friendship—I wouldn't have written the books, that's all."

"Bravo!" cried Mr. Howard. "Well, Black, what next?"

But here Deacon Bugby surprised them all. "Just a minute," he said. "I want to say that I did talk some stuff of that sort, and it serves me right to have it brought out here. I always liked Mr. Greenleaf, and he knows it. It was nothing but careless gossip."

"Better yet!" responded Mr. Howard. "Now, Black."

But Horace Black had been looking ahead. "I don't know, Mr. Howard," he hesitated.

"Don't spare anybody," ordered the commanding officer. "Give it to us, just as it is!"

"But it's stuff!" muttered Black. Then he read rapidly,

"'It is said that Mr. Greenleaf's wife being so much younger than he is, it is no wonder she likes young company, but maybe if he knew some things about her and the author, he wouldn't like the author quite so well.' "

The pretty school teacher suddenly removed her hand from her eyes, and as quickly put it back again.

An almost frightened hush had fallen on the room. Horace Black stopped a moment. Then he went on,

" 'Somebody saw the author one night when he came home on the ten o'clock train and went up by Mr. Greenleaf's house. Mrs. Greenleaf was sitting at a window, and he stopped by the gate and she came out—' "

"Stop!" cried Robert Walpole. "Who dared—"

"Deacon Gibbs!" cried Angie Bowman.

"I did walk up there one evening," said the young man, facing Deacon Gibbs and speaking slowly in an effort to master his wrath, "but Mrs. Greenleaf did not come out."

A holy fire of horror blazed in Deacon Gibbs' face.

"Stop, Mr. Walpole, stop!" he commanded. "Don't perjure yourself! I saw you! Perhaps you can explain it, but don't deny it! Everything was clear-cut in the moonlight. You know how near my house is to Mr. Greenleaf's and I knew her white dress and the shawl—and so did my wife!"

Again that hush of excitement. The sweet-faced young woman who with parted lips and wide open eyes stood confronting Deacon Gibbs, was Mrs. Greenleaf. Her husband, too, had left his chair. "Genevra," he said.

"Stephen," she answered appealingly, and went to his side.

A sudden crash of piano keys made everyone start. The pretty school-teacher had dropped a book on the keyboard as she hastily rose.

"I stayed at Mrs. Greenleaf's one night," she began, bravely. "Her shawl lay on the hall table, and I—" Her voice went out in a whisper, and a new light dawned in every face in the room.

But no one smiled, and Deacon Gibbs, who had seen with his own eyes, died hard.

"That letter, Mr. Walpole, goes on to quote you as saying that when the sun shines on Mrs. Greenleaf's hair, you never hear a word of the sermon. Do you deny that, too?"

"Here, I'm responsible for that!" spoke up Horace Black. "I remember repeating that to my mother, and 'twas in Angie Bowman's presence, too. Somebody told me Walpole said it—that's all I know about it."

"And so I did say it—so I did!" said Robert Walpole's old father, steadying himself by his son's arm as he rose. "And I say it again! I had a daughter once, with hair like that, and—" He seemed unable to go any farther, and when, after a moment, he dropped back into his seat, the others who, in their excitement, were still standing, sat down too.

Only Mr. and Mrs. Greenleaf stood side by side and waited.

"Well," said Mr. Howard, in a strangely subdued voice, "is there any more of the letter?"

With a quick motion Horace Black tore it in pieces.

Then Mr. Howard threw back his head. "Come," he proposed, "I move that everyone here who loves and trusts Mr. Greenleaf and wants to ask his forgiveness for letting this thing happen, stand up!"

"Second the motion!" called Mr. Towne, promptly. Snaring his misery had eased it wonderfully.

Angie Bowman was first on her feet, and Mrs. Greenleaf laid a gentle hand on her shoulder. A moment later every person in the room was standing.

Mr. Greenleaf looked into the eyes of his people and saw—love.

'Friends—" It was all he could say, but the beautiful light of forgiveness shone in his face.

There was a moment of silence. Then with hand uplifted, in tones that did not falter, he said,

"The Lord bless thee and keep thee. . . The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."—The Interior.

How to Win a Job.

Prof. W. G. Bowdoin, author of "Book Plates" and other special art volumes, did not always enjoy the success he now has. He tells a nervy incident in connection with his first magazine appointment.

"It was this way," he said. "I tried to get on the staff as art editor, critic and contributor, but neither owner nor editor took much notice of me. One day I got my dander up. I went into the office, saw an empty desk, and ordered the office-boy to clean it up for me. I dictated to the stenographer nearly all day. The rest of the staff listened and seemed interested. The next day they appealed to me for orders. I gave them. The editor sent me out on the third day for an art essay. Near the end of the week the owner happened in.

" 'Say, Bowdoin, how do you like your job?' said he, with a twinkle in his eye.

" 'First class,' I replied, 'all but the salary.'

" 'Don't worry about that,' he answered; 'I'll give you the same as the last man we had.'

"And he did."

The Burden of Home Life.

When newly married young people make their own home and begin housekeeping they take upon themselves the responsibility with lightness and joy. There is a real burden in it, but they carry it with ease, as their strength is fresh and there is a delightful sense of being fully responsible. In process of time the increasing family, the heavier expense, the multiplied cares and enlarged outside duties and obligations make the burden heavier upon shoulders somewhat tired. There is a burden which is felt and carried with conscious effort and at times is exceedingly onerous. Times come when one wishes for relief from the unceasing strain and in this age many seek freedom in boarding houses or apartment life. But burdens mean something real, substantial and solid that has worth as well as weight. In the home burden may be found independence from outside annoyances, cords of tender family relation, pure atmosphere of thought and living, sense of security and peace, holy and sweet memories and opportunity for spiritual culture. If the burden lightens something is gone from the soul's wealth. How reluctant are the aged to relinquish the home, for they knew the loss of independence, of memories and of sweetest joy of soul. All good things cost, but they are worth the price.—The Watchman.

A Sheep-herder on Sheep.

"How do you like sheep, take 'em one at a time?"

"I can't say that I exactly take to them," said Bill. "They ain't an animal that I would sit up nights to talk to."

"Yes," said Jonas, "there ain't much in their eyes except the stony stare. And they can't wag their tail like a dog. Many a time I've been glad that there was an animal that could talk with his tail. They're an unmanly beast that ain't of this world at all. And if they see a good chance to die they'll lay right down and wait for kingdom come. They're a mackerel-eyed martyr from their Hebrew noses to their helpless tail."

"You don't like them either?" said Bill.

"Not one at a time—and still less in a bunch. They're all right, though, for a piece of the landscape on a sunny day. They do say that they're the beast that stands for the human race in the scriptures. And I'll be plagued if I hain't seen Christians just like them."—*From Charles D. The Secret of a Long Life.

You sometimes see a woman whose old age is as exquisite as was the perfect bloom of her youth. You wonder how this has come about. You wonder how it is her life has been a long and happy one. Here are some of the reasons:

She knew how to forget disagreeable things.

She mastered the art of saying pleasant things.

She did not expect too much from her friends.

She made whatever work came to her congenial.

She retained her illusions and did not believe all the world wicked and unkind.

She relieved the miserable and sympathized with the sorrowful.

She did unto others as she would be done by.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE SECOND DAY—CONCLUDED.

It was fifteen years since Mr. Woodney had seen his rich cousin George—the prosperous farmer known in that country as G. C. D. Woodney. Perhaps if he had not been blind, he would have failed to recognize in the handsomely dressed lady who stood in the front door the wife of his first cousin. Of course, being blind, he had no idea who his visitors might be. The handsomely dressed lady was, in fact, the wife of G. C. D. Woodney, and she was accompanied by her daughter, who, although about the age of Mace, looked like a grown young lady. As Mace was but five weeks old when G. C. D. Woodney and his family moved from Jefferson City, where her father was practicing law, it was not to be expected that she should recognize her cousins. But old Mrs. Woodney should have done better, especially as she knew they lived in the village and might be expected to call early. It was the stressingly confused condition of the house and the precipitate flight of Mrs. Geraldine Woodney which caused the old lady to forget that G. C. D. Woodney inhabitated her world. Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, exquisitely dressed, and elegant in all her appointments, stood motionless in the doorway, her eyes passing from the blind face of Benjamin to the alert countenance of the old lady. She was used to being recognized wherever she went, and to being made much of, and it not only surprised, but displeased her that she stood there as a stranger. Her daughter, Jennie, who always spelled her name with a "y," looked at Mace curiously, but in fact saw very little of the girl and a great deal of her clothes. Of course Mace was dressed in her old clothes and the cloth with which she had been washing the windows swung disregarded from her hand. Jennie was a very pretty girl—much prettier than Mace—and she was so well aware of the fact that no one would have thought it worth while to tell her so. Her hair and eyes were dark like all the Woodneys; her hands and feet were small; her form was tall and graceful. She had not the vivacity and high spirits of Mace, but possessed a certain stateliness and reserve which remind one of rose gardens and knights and Sir Walter Scott.

"Good-morning," said the grandmother, stepping gingerly over the books that literally covered the floor and, as she passed the gasoline stove, putting out the front burner, and dropping a cloth over the potatoes, and slipping a lid over the meat which was beginning to cool, said, "I am Mrs. Woodney."

"You do not recognize me, I see," said the visitor, with a polite bend of her head, and a cool reproof in her tones. "I knew you the moment I saw you!"

"Your face looks familiar," said the other, "but I cannot recall the name."

"It has been fifteen years since I saw you last," said the lady. "I find you very little changed. And this is Cousin Benjamin. We were greatly distressed when we heard your eyes had been put out."

"It must be Cousin Lucy Woodney!" exclaimed Mr. Woodney.

"Yes," said the visitor, dryly.

"Come in, Lucy," said the grandmother, who was quite composed under this show of displeasure. "When one is old and has not one's near spectacles, an own mother might pass unrecognized. And this is Jennie, of course. Mace, this is your cousin Jennie. Jennie, if you will go around by Webster's dictionary, you will be able to pick your way to the sitting-room. This is our kitchen, although it stands in front."

"It was very considerate and kind of you to come so soon to see us," said Mr. Woodney, after they had shaken hands. (The two families had never been at the kissing point.) "And you have come at a very good time," he added genially, waving his hand, as he supposed, toward the dining-table, but in reality inviting them to the pump. "Dinner is just ready, and it will be a pleasure we shall always remember, if our first dinner in town is shared with Cousin Lucy and dear Jennie. You will excuse the chaotic condition of the house, for wild and stormy as the books and furniture, bedding and excelsior may appear, our hearts, you will find, are deep and calm, with the peace of a glad welcome shining upon them."

"Thank you, Cousin Benjamin," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, considerably mollified by this earnest speech, "but we do not dine till six o'clock. Nor will we keep you from your own meal. Can we see Cousin Geraldine?"

"Of course you may!" said Mr. Woodney warmly. "Of course you may! Mace, run and tell your mother that Cousin Lucy Woodney and dear little Jennie have come to welcome us to the village, and," turning to his cousin, "you must come in and visit us, now. What do we care for the meal just prepared, in comparison with renewing old ties of intercourse? We can take no refusal."

Old Mrs. Woodney, who had hoped the others would go home, sighed to hear her son's earnest entreaties. It was impossible to withstand him, and the visitors, with skirts gathered close about them, climbed the books and reached the parlor uninjured. "Are there chairs?" Mr. Woodney asked his mother. "I know there is one under the little window," he added, remembering how he had climbed up to speak to Pup.

"I wouldn't sit down on that chair," said Mr. Tumbleton, poking his head through the outside door. "They's something on it, I don't know what. I got it all over me a while ago. Being so dark in here you wouldn't know if somebody didn't tell you that had already got stuck, so excuse me."

"We do not care to sit down," said the richly dressed lady, unconsciously drawing her skirts still closer.

"Mr. Tumbleton," said Mr. Woodney mildly, "pray bring us five chairs, and examine each outside, before you bring it into the dark chamber." Mace returned, saying, "I can't find mamma."

"I will go and hunt her," said old Mrs. Woodney. She went out, and there was an awkward pause, then Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney said, "I see you have an organ. Do you play, Mace?"

"Would you like for me to play for you?" asked Mace, going at once to the organ. Of course she was asked to play and she obeyed without a murmur. Her cousin was taken by surprise. The playing was well done and there had not been an excuse.

"Oh, I wish I could play like that!" exclaimed Jennie. "Maybe you would teach me. There is no one here who understands music, or at least who will teach it."

"I would be very glad to teach you all I know," said Mace cordially.

"Of course, we would pay you for it," said Jennie's mother. "How fortunate! How much would you ask?"

"I wouldn't ask anything," said Mace.

"Oh, that would never do!" cried Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney. "We can so well afford to pay, you know, and would be glad to do it."

"And I can so well afford to do it for nothing," said Mace, with a sudden flash in her eyes, for she did not like the turn the conversation was taking.

"My dear child," said the other, "we cannot allow people to work for us for nothing. Your cousin Jennie's father is in such comfortable circumstances that he

''That is much the best way,'' said Jennie. ''I couldn't feel right otherwise, for although we are cousins, still—we are really strangers to each other.''

''Well,'' said Mace, ''a dollar and a half a lesson is my price, and I couldn't make it lower than that.''

''It is certainly more than I had supposed,'' remarked Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, doubtfully.

''I want to teach Jennie for nothing,'' responded Mace, ''simply for the pleasure of feeling that I am of some help to her. It is so disagreeable to me to have to set a price that I have set one which will not only pay me for the trouble of teaching, but for being obliged to make a charge. I have never taught music, and do not feel competent to teach anything but the beginning. I'd a great deal rather teach what I know for nothing; but if I must be paid, I want to be well paid.''

''I cannot find Geraldine,'' said old Mrs. Woodney, returning.

''Here is the first chair,'' said Mr. Tumbleton, bringing it into the room, and giving it a last lingering rub with his dust-rag.

''Pray do not search for her any more,'' said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney. ''No doubt she has gone to a neighbor's for dinner. Well, Mace, my husband and I will talk over the music lessons, and if we decide to let Jennie take them, we will be sure and let you know. Good-by, Cousin Benjamin.''

''Good-by, Cousin Lucy. Go out this back door—it is our parlor door. We are to build a porch in front of it. Mrs. Woodney will regret missing your visit. Jennie, I hope you and Mace will not long feel as strangers to each other. You will both be here in the same church—when it is rebuilt. I want you to visit each other and become intimate. Tell Cousin George to come and Cousin Lucy. We shall always be delighted to receive you, it matters not at what hour.'' The visitors departed. ''Now,'' said Mr. Woodney, ''let us hunt your mother, Mace. Did you look in the barn?''

''Why, no, papa, of course not.''

''I went over to the Days,'' said old Mrs. Woodney, ''but they hadn't seen her.''

''I went there, too,'' said Mace.

''You go to the barn, Mace,'' returned her father, ''and if there is a loft with hay in it, go up into that loft and look on that hay and see if your mother is not propped on one elbow with 'Ramona' tilted up to catch the light.''

"Our Missionary."

Dedicated to the Advance Society.

For love of souls benighted
  Our Drusie sailed the seas
To bear the Saviour's message
  To the far-away Chinese.
Their darkened souls were waiting
  In sin-beclouded night
For hands to bear across the main
  The blessed gospel light.

Their sin-sick souls are yearning
  For Jesus' healing balm;
Their troubled hearts are longing
  For love's sweet, peaceful calm.
Our Drusie's hands are holding
  The Lamp of Life, to guide
Their feet into the paths of peace,
  From sin to Jesus' side.

Shall Drusie bear the burden
  Unaided and alone?
Have we no seed to scatter,
  That ought now to be sown?
We must support the toiler
  In China's distant field!
The harvest there is truly great—
  On us depends the yield.

How the Children Saved the House.

By Mary B. Sleight.

This is another story about Horace and his little brother and sister. One day their father and mother went to a neighboring town to attend a funeral, and the children were left to take care of the house during their absence. Mamma had spread a nice luncheon for them, and little Fay, seated at the head of the table, felt herself quite grown up as she poured the ''cambric tea.'' But suddenly a whiff of smoke came down the stairs.

''Do not be frightened,'' cried Horace, making a dash for the attic.

Fay and Will started to follow him, but he was on the way back before they reached the landing.

''It's just a place in the roof, not bigger than your hand,'' he said breathlessly, ''and with a few pails of water we can put it out in a jiffy.''

So, snatching down the fire-buckets, the little brigade set bravely to work. They were on their second trip from the kitchen to the roof when some one outside, discovering the smoke, gave the alarm, and presently men, women and children were clamoring for admittance. But Horace, who had taken care to lock the doors and windows, called down, with a cheerful ''Thank you,'' that they needed no help.

''They'll only make a muss of everything if we let them in—they always do at fires,'' he said to his helpers, as he emptied another supply of water on the smoking shingles. Some of those below did not take this refusal very pleasantly and declared that if the house burned to the ground they would have no one but themselves to blame. But, deaf to their grumbling, up the stairs with the heavy buckets, again and again climbed the tireless trio, till not so much as a smell of fire was left.

By that time papa and mamma were at the door, and the three grimy little figures rushed into their arms with a shout that came very near being a sob.

''''Twas drefful hard tuggin','' lisped Fay, blinking off a tear, ''but we dot it out.''—Christian Intelligencer.

Business Notes.

We have an abundance of buttons now for either a Sunday-school or a C. E. rally contest, selling them at $1 per hundred in any quantity.

We found 12 "Triumphant Songs," Nos. 3 and 4 combined, limp cloth, by Excell, selling at $3.60 per dozen, not prepaid, and you can have them for $1.50 not prepaid. But they are shelf-worn, otherwise all right, good as new.

We have just issued another edition of "The Temptation of Christ," by J. B. Briney, a devout meditation upon one of the great events in the life of the Son of God. Has 154 pages, nicely bound in cloth and sells for 75 cents.

We have about sixty copies of the Revised Hymnals, some in cloth, some in morocco, some in leather, all to be sold, while they last, at $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid. They sell, in good condition, for $7.50 to $10 per dozen.

Are you going to get song books this spring? Where else will you get them if not here? Popular Hymns, No. 2, Living Praise, Gospel Call, one or two, or combined, Praise to the Prince, all in similar binding and priced according.

We want a good agent in every congregation, one that will give the time to a good work for the people and with good results to themselves. One lady alone is thus helping hundreds to a closer fellowship with the Christ, and a better life in him. Others can do the same. Write us.

Has your school ever tried the "button contest"? Nothing more interesting and helpful than this simple device introduced by the Y. M. C. A., on the order of the old-fashioned spelling match—two sides, two captains, a number of assistants, red and blue buttons at $1 per hundred. Try it.

Another great favorite at this time is "The Christian Use of the Tithing System," by G. L. Wharton, of which we are selling hundreds for use in congregations, and are now corresponding with one party wanting 4,000 or more. These are sold same as the Power tract, and are doing good in many communities. It will justify any financial board in our congregations putting them out broadcast, such are the needs of the Disciples.

We have a few, only, of the Revised New Testament, not American, and will send them to you at 7 cents for the limp binding, 15 cents for silk cloth, and 35 cents, postpaid, for the long primer, silk cloth.

All ministers, without exception, are to have all the books of our own publication, for personal use, at 25 per cent off, plus postage, and from now on you will profit by this new building, business and development. Let us know that you are a minister in good standing and the discount is yours. Hear?

Have you seen the "Christian Worker's New Testament"? Well we have them ranging in price from 75 cents to $1.25, according to the binding. You will not do without it, once used. It is unique, handy and very helpful in studying your New Testament on many important themes connected with your salvation and work in Christ.

Why not make the Boy or Girl Series a basis for your class library? These are good and helpful and beneficial books, and are put up in good binding and sold cheap, but we will help further by making a "special" rate for the purpose above. The writer can testify to its good effects in the class attendance and work.

Our agents are doing well with Johnson's People's New Testament with Notes, for it is just the book for the masses, having the explanation put in that pointed, terse style so peculiar to B. W. Johnson and so helpful to all. At $2.00 per volume in cloth, gives one a good commentary on the New Testament for $4.00 prepaid. Write us for terms or information.

H. A. Denton, state superintendent of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Christian church, is going to inaugurate the campaign that took so well in the Maryville society, and we are preparing to furnish the red and blue buttons for the campaign at $1.00 per 100, postpaid. When you order, specify whether for the Endeavor or the Bible school, as we will have full stock for both.

B. B. Tyler writes: "The Foundation for Christian Liberality" is a good book. I marked such passages as "covetousness is the besetting sin of to-day," "the sacred and secular are one." He says, " 'The Law Needed,' I found especially helpful." Brother Tyler also commends especially the chapter on "The Question that Confronts Us." This is the book that is being sold at 75 cents in good and durable cloth binding. Read and inwardly digest.

Over 7,000 copies of "History and Doctrine of the Disciples" have gone out among the people. This is the address delivered by F. D. Power in Festival Hall the last day of the National Convention, and it is being ordered by hundreds and being used in communities where we are not well known and not at all understood, also in preparation for protracted meetings. We are helping by selling them in hundred lots at $1.50 prepaid, in dozen lots, 25 cents prepaid; single copies, 3 cents each.

Concerning Local Checks.

A large number of our friends and patrons send us their local checks as remittances. Your local check is satisfactory if you add 15 cents to the amount to pay cost of collecting through our St. Louis banks.

The banks of St. Louis adhere strictly to the rule of charging not less than 15 cents for each local check which they collect. What is classed as local checks are those payable any place except St. Louis, Cincinnati, Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Louisville, Kansas City, Baltimore. We trust our friends will take note of this matter, and will see that the cost of collecting a small check is quite a large per cent on the face value. For instance, if a local check for $1.50 is sent us this would cost us 10 per cent to collect. If more convenient to send local check, do so, but do not forget to add 15 cents for cost of collecting.

The Dead That Never Lived.

My twilight calm they sweetly did invade—
  Dear dead ones, whom the angels at God's door
  Gave leave to lay their harps upon heav'n's floor
And go caress the friends whom life delayed.
These looked a love that kept me unafraid;
  But then (as though a boat with muffled oar Parted the dusk) sailed by a throng who bore
Stern eyes that cleft me like a sharpened blade.
And this their call: "We lived not, yet we died:
  Shadows are we of many a true intent
Whereto thy sloth the boon of life denied—
  Ghosts of dim ghosts—mere shades of something meant!
Yet deem not that thou canst from vengeance hide
  When mem'ry's bow against thy peace is bent!

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

A Great Meeting.

Evangelist B. B. Burton, of Des Moines, Iowa, has just closed a series of revival services for the Christian congregation of this city that, in some respects, works a new departure and furnishes strong and indisputable evidences of a greater sympathy and closer union sentiment among divided Christians. Brother Burton came here during the extreme cold weather of February and at the close of the first week the capacity of the First Christian church building was overtaxed, a condition that was entirely unexpected to those who have noted the almost utter failure of all revival efforts in this city in recent years. Just at this juncture and while we were discussing the subject of larger quarters, the Methodist church board held a special meeting and voted unanimously to tender us the unqualified use of their larger church. This generous and fraternal offer was accepted and for three weeks, except two Lord's days, Brother Burton preached to full houses in this larger church. These Lord's day meetings were held in the First Baptist church where 800 people crowded in to hear the plain gospel plainly and eloquently preached.

The immediate results of this great meeting were 42 additions, nearly all confessions, but no man can measure the good that must result from this closer fellowship with our religious neighbors and the setting forth of the plain gospel plea to intelligent people of so many different religious communions and large numbers of those who have not accepted Christ.

Brother Burton must be classed with our great evangelists. He is one who preaches the plain word with a power and a sweetness of spirit that at once convinces and disarms prejudice and antagonism. We now stand before the people in a different and better light than ever before in the history of our local organization.

The Balkan Unrest.

With the melting of the snows there usually comes trouble in the Balkans. Turkish gendarmes and the insurgents have just had a fierce fight, some Bulgarians, who were transporting ammunition, being surrounded and all but five killed. As practically nothing has been done in the way of pacification, and with the big Powers all having their own troubles, we rather look for Turkey to get in her old devilish work, if half a chance is offered her.

The Advance in China.

Dr. Timothy Richard, the great Baptist missionary to China, has seen remarkable changes in that old empire. This "red-headed devil," as he was called when he first visited the city of Ching-chau Fu, in Shantung, thirty years ago, has recently been given a public reception in this same city and addressed as "Venerable Prince." Formerly he had been refused permission to lodge over night in the city. Now he is welcomed by mandarins and asked to speak upon needed reforms in China before fifty municipal officials. On three successive days he addressed deeply interested audiences upon the fundamental differences between Chinese and Christian views of character and principles of conduct.

Mexico's New Policy.

President Diaz has issued an edict putting into effect the new currency plan which was approved by the Mexican congress in December. The plan involves a virtual abandonment of the silver basis. The free coinage of silver will be suspended and the unit of value henceforth will be the peso with a fixed value of fifty cents in gold. Up to this time the value of the peso has been whatever the silver in it happened to be worth at current market rates. Under this rule, the value of the peso has varied from 38 to 48 cents gold, and the value of the American dollar, which of course is always counted as gold, has fluctuated between $2.60 and $2.08 in Mexican silver. The demoralizing effect of these variations upon business may readily be imagined. One effect of it has been a constant upward tendency of prices in Mexico, for it has been the practice to advance prices whenever the value of the peso dropped and not to lower them when it rose. During the past three years the value of the peso has been gradually increasing until the rate of exchange has become approximately two to one. The new plan will make this the fixed and permanent rate by virtually making the silver peso redeemable in gold at that rate.

A Russian Prophet.

For many years Russia has been dominated by a power as influential as that of the grand dukes. It is that of the church. Those who have watched the career of Pobedonosteff, head of the Russian church, know that he is a reactionary of the worst type. Without a doubt he is largely responsible for the present condition of things. Under him the clergy, with few exceptions, are illiterate and antagonistic to change. Among the exceptions Father Goupon must be mentioned. And now another priest has spoken words of wisdom. Antonius, the metropolitan of St. Petersburg, has just arraigned the vanity, frivolity, dissipation and impiety of the Russian people. He calls upon them to fear God, cleanse themselves and repent. "With right," he says, "we are despised by all, mocked at by the people of the earth." Now what will Pobedonosteff, the ecclesiastical Machiavelli, do with this bold prophet?

Addicks Again.

The Delaware legislature has again been forced to adjourn without electing a United States Senator. The Addicks faction proved strong enough to prevent any one else from getting a majority but not strong enough to elect Addicks. For sixteen years this man has devoted his best energies most unscrupulously to the work of getting himself elected to the United States Senate. No trick of force or fraud has been neglected. No purchasable man has been left unbought. The political life of the state has been corrupted to the core, the state has been compelled to go unrepresented in the Senate during much of that sixteen years, or half represented, as at present, all because Addicks had a personal ambition to gratify and money enough (as we believe) to purchase the office which it craves. It is time to put a quietus upon Addicks and his kind. Party lines are not so sharply drawn, now, that the honest men of two parties may not reasonably be expected to unite upon one candidate of either party and elect him for the sake of shelving a man like Addicks. We would have an increased respect for Delaware if the Democratic and the anti-Addicks Republican forces in the legislature would get together, draw straws to see whether a Democratic or a Republican candidate should be chosen, and then vote for him, leaving Addicks high and dry. There is more difference between an honest Republican and a dishonest one than between an honest Republican and an honest Democrat. When any man is willing to sacrifice the good of his party and his state to the gratification of his own selfish ambition, it is time for others to forget party considerations long enough to give him his political deathblow.

A Black Eye for Gamblers.

What is known as the Breeders' Law in the state of Missouri has just been repealed. It required a long and a hard effort to throw out this law, which in some respects was all right. Its worst feature, however, was that it licensed gambling, and therefore encouraged this pernicious habit. Too much praise cannot be given to one of the St. Louis newspapers, the Post-Dispatch, for the persistent and straightout fight it made upon the curse of race-track gambling. The Post-Dispatch used all the weight of its great influence in agitating the question and in focusing public opinion against the Breeders' Law. There also came before the Legislature a bill which will make it a felony to sell pools or register bets on or off race-tracks, and after a great fight this will also become law.

Stolen Goods.

The wonderful "Ascoli cope" has at last been returned to the Italian government by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, and the inhabitants of the ancient city of Ascoli are said to be overflowing with gratitude and admiration for the generous act. It will be remembered that the cope, an elaborate ecclesiastical garment dating from the middle ages and said by some critics to be the most valuable piece of fabric now in existence, was stolen from the cathedral of Ascoli, Italy, and after various adventures was sold to Mr. Morgan for a very large sum. It was placed on exhibition by him in the South

Kensington museum, London, where are housed many of his artistic treasures which he will not bring to America on account of the duty which he would have to pay on them. The cope, which had been the chief glory and treasure of Ascoli, was soon recognized. The matter was brought to Mr. Morgan's attention and, after assuring himself of the identity of the goods, he promptly agreed to return it. The secretary of the Italian embassy in London received the cope and conveyed it, with all possible precaution, to Rome. It will either be returned to Ascoli, if the government is satisfied that adequate protection against future theft can be made there, or will be placed in a museum in Florence. Meanwhile Ascoli is reported to be going into paroxysms of gratitude over the unparalleled magnanimity of the man who sent back the cope. Mr. Morgan is off for a cruise in the Mediterranean and expects to visit Ascoli where a great reception is being planned for him. Of course the returning of the cope was the decent thing to do, and we have no wish to withhold from Mr. Morgan any credit which may be due to him. But after all, the incident seems to us to represent rather an elementary and simple bit of commonplace morals, than an exceptional sensitiveness to considerations of honor and justice. It was simply a question of receiving stolen goods. Perhaps there is no way in which stolen goods can be legally traced from one country to another and seized by process of law. It seems that there ought to be such an international arrangement, but even if there is not, the moral question involved has no subtlety whatever. Here are the stolen goods, perfectly identified. There are the rightful owners asking for them. Here is the man who got them (innocently, of course,) from the thief or his agents. If he returns them he does the only thing he can possibly do to avoid complicity in the crime. Mr. Morgan did the right thing. But why profess that his act is such a wonderfully meritorious one? There are plenty of men who habitually resist the temptation to the grosser forms of theft and who keep their hands out of their neighbors' pockets even when there is a good chance to put them in.

Men and Women as Students.

Generalizations in regard to the mental characteristics of sex are apt to be unsatisfactory, but the temptation to make them will always be strong so long as it is so obviously true that the masculine and the feminine mind do not function in exactly the same way. One sometimes wonders whether, with our modern insistence upon the rights of women—a much-needed and most righteous doctrine—we are not in danger of overlooking the fact that equality of rights does not mean identity of mental constitution. A recent newspaper writer has this to say:

> Experience is gradually demonstrating to us, however, that mentally men and women are differently constituted. Now this does not mean that women are necessarily inferior to men in this respect, or vice versa, but simply that they are different. It is a common observation among teachers, for example, that as a class and by nature women students are more conscientious than men in their work. It therefore often happens that the women in any given class, other things being equal, will show up better in their grades than men. But on the other hand the teacher is likely to feel, regarding any particular lesson, that the men either know it or else they do not know it; while about the women, although they may give good recitations, one can in a fewer number of cases be sure that they understand what they recite. Speaking generally, a man will less often try to make a recitation on what he does not understand than a woman will. This is only an example, however, of a general difference in sex characteristics which teachers—at least many teachers—come gradually to feel. It has long been recognized among teachers, I think, that the women take better to studies like literature and history, in which emotional appreciations come into play, than to logical analysis, while the men get a better insight into the more analytical subjects like mathematics and the natural sciences.

Sunday and Crime.

A curious application of statistical methods has been made by an Austrian who has attempted to determine the relative frequency of crime on the several days of the week. Several hundred cases taken indiscriminately showed the following distribution: Sunday 254; Monday 125; Tuesday 69; Wednesday 62; Thursday 62; Friday 48; Saturday 103. If this collection of particulars is broad enough to form the basis of a safe generalization, it will be observed that Sunday is pre-eminently the day of crime; more than twice as many crimes being charged against it as against any other day of the week. After Sunday there is a rapid falling off in the number of crimes until Saturday, when there is a marked increase. What does it mean? The suggestion of the scoffer that Sunday observance apparently encourages crime, may be set aside as facetious. Perhaps the most potent factor in the case is the relation of money to crime. Saturday is commonly pay day. The average man has more money on Sunday than on any other day of the week. That the day of most money should be also the day of most crime, suggests that, for a large number of people, perhaps for the majority of people, an increase in ready cash means primarily an increased facility for getting into trouble. In Austria, where the statistics were collected, the public houses are open and have their heaviest patronage on Sunday. It is not surprising to find the amount of crime in a given community varying in direct proportion to the consumption of alcohol. The diminishing supply of ready money in the possession of the average workman from Sunday to Friday necessitates a corresponding restraint upon alcoholic and other dissipation, and results in a similar diminution in the volume of crime. Sunday is also the day of greatest leisure. This fact, in connection with the preceding, suggests that leisure, like money, is not an unconditional blessing. The purely economic and humanitarian argument for one day of rest out of every seven, has its undoubted force. But it is not enough. Pay a man his week's wages and give him a holiday, and what do we have, according to these figures? On the very night of his pay day and in anticipation of not having to work the next day, his sobriety suffers a serious set-back. The holiday itself becomes a time of lawlessness, dissipation and crime—not for every man, of course, but the tendency that way is increased, and enough of the spirit of unrest is left over to go far toward demoralizing the next working day. The meaning of it all is, we think, just this: That a day of rest can never fully accomplish its purpose as a day of rest unless it is more than that. The secularization of Sunday has its economic and social dangers. As a mere holiday, Sunday has its value and also its disadvantages, since it helps to demoralize both the day before and the day after, as any holiday does. As a day of rest and worship, it may have all of the value without the demoralization.

The Right Kind of Fast.

Fasting from food and excitement may have at times physical effects that are beneficial to the tired out or sick body. Whether the abstinence from certain courses at the table or the abandonment of frivolities for a few weeks at the period of Lent is of any material value may be a question for debate. The Independent tells how in a famous sermon an ancient preacher rebuked the average kind of Lent. Then employers kept this season by going to church and fasting from food, but still oppressing their workmen with "the fist of wickedness," and "exacting all their labors." They were told that God did not call for a fast that simply mortified their bodies while it did not improve their characters. This, said the preacher, is no fast. The acceptable fast was "to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free." It was to feed the hungry—no fast required of them—to clothe the naked and to house the poor.

No angel guard with flaming sword is needed to keep the sinful out of the Paradise of God. Every man will go to his own place by the eternal laws of spiritual gravitation. This is why God commands all men everywhere to repent. H. C. GARRISON.

Our Last Congress.

We do not refer to the House of Representatives which meets in Washington and legislates for the nation, but to that annual meeting of religious teachers, thinkers and students of the Bible among the Disciples of Christ, for the purpose of free discussion of the living questions of the time. The first of these congresses was held in St. Louis in 1899, and they have been held subsequently in the following cities: Indianapolis, Lexington, Des Moines, Cleveland, Chicago and the one just closed at Columbia, Mo.

We doubt if there is a greater unifying agency among us to-day than these annual congresses. The questions about which there is likely to be the greatest difference of opinion are those usually discussed in the Congress. From the very beginning it has been understood that two principles must prevail in these meetings—the utmost freedom of expression and the spirit of Christian courtesy and fraternity. It is gratifying to state that these principles have prevailed in a remarkable degree in every one of the sessions of our National Congress. Now and then, of course, there comes in someone who has not caught on to the spirit and purpose of the Congress who strikes a somewhat discordant note, but that is soon lost in the prevailing tone of the speakers. The Congress at Columbia was not as large as some of our congresses have been, nor did the degree of interest on any particular topic discussed reach the high tide of enthusiasm, perhaps, that it has reached in some of our annual meetings. But in the high character of the papers presented and in the spiritual tone which prevailed, we do not think the last Congress has been exceeded by any of its predecessors.

In the absence of the general chairman, J. J. Haley, President Hieronymus of Eureka College acted in this capacity to the entire satisfaction of all. The different topics discussed, with a brief outline of the same, will be found elsewhere, but no outline can do justice to these splendid productions. Dr. H. L. Calhoun, of the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., who gave us the first paper of the Congress on "The Archæology of the Past, Considered in Its Bearing Upon the Credibility of the Biblical Records," won a great many friends. It was his first visit to Missouri, and the impression which he made on the brethren was decidedly favorable. His paper was scholarly, singularly clear, and conceived in an irenic spirit. The review of this paper by Dr. O. T. Morgan, of Illinois, was also able, but its positions met with less general approval than those of the leading paper. The general discussion, led by Dr. Clinton Lockhart, of Drake University, was also vigorous, and brought out a number of additional points of interest. The general conclusion reached by the papers and the discussion was that the bearing of the discoveries in archæology was favorable to the credibility of the biblical records. The exceptions to this on minor points did not invalidate this general conclusion.

"Our Congregationalism; Its Perils and Its Safeguards," was vigorously treated by W. A. Parker, minister at Emporia, Kan. Brother Parker showed himself a writer of rare power, who has the courage of his convictions. Some of his conclusions were deemed somewhat radical, but no one could deny that the main trend of his paper was in the right direction. The review of this paper, by Prof. Silas Jones, of Eureka College, was not so much a review as an independent statement of his own conclusions on the subject, well conceived and clearly expressed. The general discussion on this topic, opened by T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, proved to be very interesting, and, on the whole, profitable. If we might state the general conclusion reached it was that our congregationalism in its essential principles of congregational autonomy and freedom has the sanction of the New Testament and of experience, but it must not be interpreted as interfering with the principle of co-operation for general purposes, nor with the proper care for weak and needy churches.

The presence of Pres. Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin College, O., was a great blessing to the Congress. His two addresses, the one on Tuesday evening on "The Central Significance of Jesus," and the other on Wednesday afternoon on "The Fundamental Laws of the Spiritual Life," made a deep and lasting impression upon the large audiences that heard him. President King is one of the clearest and profoundest thinkers of the age, and his addresses were pervaded by a high spiritual tone, and a clearness and simplicity which won all hearts as well as the approval of all minds. His exaltation of the Christ as the object of our faith, and our personal allegiance, and as the basis of unity, met with the enthusiastic approval of the entire Congress. President King certainly has no occasion to complain of the lack of the heartiest appreciation of his able addresses. Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible College, and C. C. Rowlison, president-elect of Hiram College, were, respectively, to review the addresses of Dr. King, but they found nothing to do but to commend, most heartily, what they had heard.

The subject of the "Gospel Miracles," in the absence of Bro. M. M. Davis, was presented in a very able and satisfactory paper by Howard T. Cree, pastor at Augusta, Ga. There was no review of the paper, but the general discussion was opened by C. C. Morrison, of Springfield, Ill., who illustrated one of the features of our Congress in the freedom and frankness with which he expressed his inability to harmonize the conception of the miraculous with the order of the universe as established by modern science. He presented no constructive view, therefore, on the opposite side, and contented himself with pointing out some of the difficulties in his own mind of accepting the position of the leading paper. The general sense of the Congress, however, was in harmony with the positions taken in the leading paper.

"The Social Test of Theology" was presented in two very strong papers, one by Geo. Bellamy, of Cleveland, O., and the review of the same by Harold B. Wright, of Kansas City. The points of view were slightly different, but both of them recognized the presence of the social problem, and its claims upon the church of Jesus Christ. Brother Bellamy is at the head of the Hiram house, a social settlement in Cleveland, O., and spoke from the light of his experience. Two things, we think, are true concerning this problem: One is that the welfare of both the church and the state requires that we give more attention and help to the needy and neglected, even the wicked and vicious, classes of society, looking in the direction of both their physical and moral improvement. The second truth is, as it seems to us, this work must be done in the spirit and power of Jesus Christ, and that any socialism which dispenses with religion is unable to cope successfully with the problem.

"The New Theology in its Bearing Upon the Problem of Christian Missions," was the subject of one of the strongest papers of the Congress, by Prof. W. M. Forrest, of Charlottesville, Va. It was a discriminating address, following neither of the extremes of thought but pursuing a sane course between these extremes. The review of G. D. Edwards, of Nevada, Mo., showed a disciplined mind and ability to think clearly and cogently. The general discussion of this topic was opened by Dr. J. M. Philputt, of St. Louis, and was participated in by a number of speakers. The general trend of the discussion was that whatever temporary disturbances might be caused by displacing the older by the newer views would be more than compensated for in the gain that would come to the missionaries in their mode of presenting their message.

One of the liveliest discussions of the Congress was on the paper by L. G. Batman, pastor of the First church, Philadelphia, on "Our Religious Journalism, Its Rights and Its Responsibilities." Brother Batman "struck out from the shoulder," as the saying goes, lifting up a high ideal of religious journalism for our admiration. If, in some respects, this ideal is impossible of immediate realization, that is no doubt less the fault of the ideal than of the conditions which exist among us. The discussion of this paper was opened by Dr. W. T. Moore, who spoke mainly as one from behind the scenes, and was participated in by a number of others, including the editors who were present: J. B. Briney of the Christian Companion, J. A. Lord of the Christian Standard, and F. G. Tyrrell, who, in the absence of Brothers Willett and Young, represented the Christian Century, and the editors of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. All took their medicine like men, pleading, in spirit if not in form, the request said to have been printed above the organ in a church in Leadville, Col., many years ago: "Do not shoot the organist; she is doing the best she can." The editors acknowledged their shortcomings, but claimed they were doing the best they could under the circumstances.

The Congress closed at noon on Thursday, after having elected its committee to arrange for the next Congress, and voted to hold it at Cincinnati, providing the churches there would agree to entertain it. Pastor C. H. Winders and his flock, with others of the good people of Columbia, entertained the members of the Congress most hospitably. Several of us found a home and generous entertainment in Christian college. President Jesse, who was on the program to deliver the address of welcome was hindered from being present at the beginning of the Congress by ill health, but he was able to come down one afternoon, and give a little introductory talk of a most fraternal character. Never have we seen a more fraternal spirit manifested in any of our conventions, and never have the brethren been more hopeful of accomplishing good for our cause through the medium of the Congress.

Of course the delegates availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting the State university and our splendid new Bible college building, and Christian college, with its enlarged campus and its new and stately buildings. We heard many expressions of surprise and admiration over "Lowry hall," the new Bible college building, and the buildings and grounds and splendid equipment of Christian college. In a word, it was a good Congress, and nothing but good, we believe, will issue from it.

Christian College Banquet.

One of the pleasantest social features of the National Congress of Disciples of Christ at Columbia last week was the banquet given by Christian college, complimentary to the Congress, on Wednesday evening, March 22. The large dining room of the college was well filled with the guests which were invited to share the hospitality of the college. After all had partaken to fullness of the generous collation which had been prepared, toastmaster Prof. C. M. Sharpe rose to his feet, and with that grave face which characterizes him on such occasions, announced the time which would be allotted to the speakers, and the "rules of the game." One of these was that old jokes were to receive the same applause as new ones, without discrimination. This announcement was received with tumultuous applause! C. H. Winders responded happily to the toast, "Our Guests." The response to this was by J. J. Morgan, who behind a solemn face conceals a large amount of latent humor. "Our Colleges," was responded to by H. G. Hill, who occupied most of the time with stories, and had just reached his subject when his time expired! But Brother Hill has become so identified with our educational interests, that his tall presence is sufficient to suggest the need of college endowment. "Our College Girls," was the happy subject happily responded to by J. M. Philputt. "Our Ideals," which was to have been responded to by H. L. Willett, was treated very felicitously by President King, of Oberlin, who dwelt especially upon the ideal of Christian unity. "The Tie that Binds" was the last toast, and was responded to by J. H. Garrison.

The guests, however, were too well pleased with the courtesy and hospitality shown them by the head of the college to let her off without hearing a word from her, and Mrs. W. T. Moore was called on for a speech. Rising at the head of the table, she spoke modestly a few words, expressing her pleasure at the presence of her distinguished guests, bidding them a hearty welcome to the institution, and inviting them to come again. Toastmaster Sharpe then raised the old hymn, suggested by the last toast, "Blest be the tie that binds," which was sung with a hearty good will.

If space permitted we would be glad to quote some of the wise and humorous sayings from these speeches, but we have only space to say that the occasion was in every way a decided success. All the delegates had the opportunity of meeting Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Moore in the spacious parlors of the college prior to the banquet.

Lying beside each plate was a very handsome Christian college souvenir with a cut of the new auditorium and library on its front page, followed by a hearty greeting to their guests, program for banquet, and an historical sketch of Christian college. It was a happy thought well carried out.

This was only one of the favors shown by this institution. The young ladies attended in a body many of the sessions of the Congress, and the college threw open its doors for the entertainment of a number of delegates. We are sure it must have made many friends by its hospitality and enterprise. No wonder such an institution should be filled with young ladies from our best homes throughout the country!

Specialization in Christian Work.

This was the theme of a suggestive address at the Congress at Columbia by Prof. G. P. Coler, of Ann Arbor, Mich. This subject was not on the original program, but in the absence of one of the speakers room was made for it because of the practical bearing of the subject on our work. He pointed out what great good had come to our cause and to our foreign mission work through the selection of A. McLean to devote his time, thought and energy to that work. The wisdom of such specialization was manifest to all. This was further illustrated by the selection of B. L. Smith, secretary of the home missionary work; G. W. Muckley for the church extension; G. L. Snively for our benevolent work, etc. These men were making a special study of these different departments of work, and were bringing to it the wisdom and experience gleaned from other and older religious bodies which have succeeded in these different phases of Christian work.

Prof. Coler mentioned two departments of our work that were now suffering for the lack of some specialization, viz.: the work among our young people in Christian Endeavor, and our Bible-schools. These two departments of our work needed, he said, the whole time and thought of some wise, consecrated man for each, that he might bring to our young people the best there was to be found for their Christian development, and to our Bible-schools the highest ideals and the most efficient methods. This, he pointed out, was an age of specialization, and no man can be expected to do his work with the highest efficiency unless he gives himself wholly to that special work.

Prof. Coler's address carried conviction with it as to the needs of special workers, specially fitted, well supported, and wholly devoted to these different departments of our work. In no other way can we hope to reach the highest degree of efficiency and do our part of the world's religious work. When we have selected such men we must support them, give them time to learn by experience, and be willing to wait for results.

This is the principle that has led to the selection of different boards for different kinds of work, and the appointment of special secretaries to represent these several interests. Our evangelistic board with W. J. Wright as superintendent, and the Business Men's Association, with W. D. Pittman, corresponding secretary, are the latest illustrations of this specialization. One of the most important of all these different departments of our work is that of the Sunday-school. And there is pressing need for the right man to give himself to that work. A better knowledge of the Bible resulting from more systematic Bible study is fundamental to our future progress.

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of God's choicest gifts to the toiling, care-burdened race is a day of rest. The noise of the world's machinery ceases, and in the stillness the ear may catch the notes of an infinite melody. To-day, in this latitude, has been a double benediction. The earth has been bathed in the warm sunlight, and the air has been fragrant with the breath of spring. The springing grass and bursting buds are nature's response to the kiss of sun and zephyr. These children of the sun seem to be saying to one another, "Winter is past and the time of the singing of birds is here. Let us wake from our long sleep and put on our beautiful garments." Mother earth will see to it that her young offspring are robed in living green in honor of the coming of spring. God's smile seems to rest upon all the land. In the soft azure of the sky, in the tuneful notes of birds, and in all the springing life of bud and bloom, he is speaking to the holiest and best there is in our nature, to call it forth to flower and fruitage. Who can stand under God's open sky, on a day like this, feeling its radiance and drinking in its beauty, without lifting the heart in adoration and thankfulness to the source of all life and love? Only God may know what a benediction this day has been to all his earthly children. Both through the voices that speak to us in nature and in the sanctuary, the earth has been drawn heavenward! Thank God for the Lord's day!

Think what a Lord's day like this means to the throngs that go to the house of God. The city walks have been crowded to-day with men, women and children pressing their way to the courts of the Lord. Something in the very atmosphere of the day seems to prompt the church-going habit. Few scenes are more inspiring than a great company of four or five hundred people, mostly young people and children, gathered together and engaged in studying the Bible, and singing the praises of God. How bright and happy the faces of the children are! How sweetly they sing! These influences will go with them through all the coming changes of life. Then follows the hour of church worship. "How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" Here is a great company of people—the young, the middle-aged, and the old—all feeling their need of help. They have come hither for some word of comfort, of instruction, of spiritual uplift. Many of the faces show lines of care. They have been carrying burdens that others know not of. As the man of God lifts them in the strong arms of prayer toward the gate of heaven, and they are borne still farther upward on the tide of sacred song, and their hearts are kindled by the old story of God's wondrous love in Christ, the lines of care are smoothed out, and their faces show a new radiance. And then the communion hour brings its holy hush and its sweet fellowship.

> "And Heaven comes down our souls to greet > Around one common mercy seat."

It is beautiful to see the growing spirit of reverence in our worship, and the increased prominence which is being given to the place of worship in our Lord's day assemblies. In many of our congregations there is great room for improvement yet in this respect. Social visiting is often carried on in the house of God for several minutes after the time has arrived for people to be in a worshipful mood—quiet, thoughtful, reverent. There are times and places enough for sociability among friends and church members without intruding upon the hour of worship. To get the greatest good from public worship, the place should be filled with the very atmosphere of worship. This can only be the case when the people who have gathered have taken time and thought to prepare themselves for the worship of God. It is to be feared that many people go to the house of God with as little preparation of mind and heart for its holy service as if they were going to fill some social engagement. How can one be fed with the Bread of Life in whose heart there is no hunger for spiritual food? We are sure, however, that an increasing number of Christians now go to the Lord's day meeting with a distinct purpose to worship God, and to have their spiritual natures refreshed, quickened, and re-enforced by communion with God, in song and prayer, in the preaching of the word and in participating in the Lord's supper. It is in the minister's power by his own spirit of reverence and devotion, to bring the whole church into the same spirit and to make the public worship impressive and spiritually uplifting. That this is being done more and more by our ministers and churches is one of the signs of a deepening spiritual life.

If one is inclined to take a pessimistic view of our future as a religious movement, and to prophesy intellectual stagnation and the crystallization of views into unyielding articles of faith and conditions of fellowship, making all progress in thought impossible except at the expense of division and strife, an attendance at one of our congresses would be likely to prove a helpful antidote. Among no people on this earth, not even among so-called "liberals" and "free-thinkers," is there more freedom of thought than among the Disciples of Christ, as shown in their congresses. True, it is Christian liberty, but it is all the wider and more tolerant on this account. The one thing which they insist on among those who would be considered of us and with us in our work of restoring New Testament Christianity, is undivided loyalty to Jesus Christ, as Saviour and Lord. That fact established, there is all that liberty with which he endows those whom he makes free. Nor is the great body of our ministers and members so attached to any theory or interpretation that, when convinced of its error, they will not yield or modify their view according to the demands of truth. Nothing has done more to inspire our younger men with larger hope of our future than the spirit of freedom, of fraternity, and of loyalty to Christ, which has prevailed in the series of congresses which have been held among us. Our Congress offers a free platform to every man among us in good standing, to present any view or theory which he holds, which he believes will conduce to the welfare of the cause of Christ. If he is unable to support his view with sufficient reason, he is likely to come out of the discussion a wiser and a humbler man. We are going to go right on enlarging our views where they may need enlargement, correcting them where they need correction, discarding old ideas when they are outgrown, and accepting new truth when it comes to us properly certified, and our Congress is going to help us wonderfully in sifting the chaff from the wheat, and in keeping us within safe lines of progress.

Notes and Comments.

We are glad to know that some comments in our last issue were based on an error in deduction. We indicated that a newspaper report was our authority for the story of the church that wanted the 37 year old pastor who must be a mixer and a crank.

Three things made the report seem credible. We received the following note from a member of the church:

> The Peoria church held a unique and profitable meeting Feb. 26. After a number of eulogies upon Brother Van Arsdall, who was absent, the qualifications his successor should possess were then considered. Many who were not in the habit of having much to say, were induced to express their views, and the committee on new pastor heard much to guide them in their future deliberations. The members are in the greatest of harmony and realize the importance of staunch support for their new minister, whoever he may be.

This note caused us to believe the fuller reports, which were immediately confirmed by Brother Lappin's letter. We avoided mentioning the church, for our criticism was upon tendencies that emphasize the social qualities of a preacher rather than experience and spiritual power. We are glad to learn that Peoria's was of the nature of a "mock trial" and that its purpose was not serious, but to show the sort of a preacher it would require to suit everybody.

A Tonic for the Pessimistic

By Edgar D. Jones

Now that the green is getting into the grass and the bird song is in the air the season of the spring tonic is at hand. These bodies of ours get tired. They lose their vigor. The eye drops its lustre. The face takes on a sallow cast. "A tonic is what you need," says the physician, "your whole system needs toning up," so he gives a prescription that will put iron into the blood and vigor back into our bodies.

I think we get mentally and spiritually sluggish too. Nearly all of us at times take a gloomy view of things. We drop into the ranks of the pessimistic. We predict failure for everything and defeat for everybody. We look upon life as a sort of nightmare. We paint dark foreboding pictures of the future. We talk about the good old times and the bad new times, and are ready to affirm that the world is going to the bad generally. Friends, we need a tonic and I don't know where we can find so stimulating a one as in this Book. Dear old Bible! I am sure I can't direct you to a more precious fount of fresh, healing streams. Here I find a tonic for us all; a prescription by God's great servant Paul. It is just what we need. It is sweet and pure and wholesome. You will find it in Phil. 4:8: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honourable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Whatsoever things are true. Is it really true that these are the wickedest of all times? Is it true that the church is losing ground? Less than two years ago a famous London preacher visited our country. When he returned to England he declared that America in her great prosperity is drifting away from religion, leaving the churches empty and abandoning the reading of religious literature. Furthermore he said New England is closing up her churches and American religious publishers find scarcely any demand for their wares. Now an American newspaper correspondent—one of the greatest in this land, too—answered this charge. He showed that by the census report America's churches were never so numerous, or so prosperous, or so well attended. The growth in membership, wealth and contributions for charity, missions and other religious work was never more encouraging. There never were so many Sunday-schools and their attendance is larger than ever before. Religious organizations like the Y. M. C. A., Epworth League and the King's Daughters are more active, stronger and more numerous. Moreover the sale of the Bible in recent years is simply unprecedented. He even pointed out that the largest publishing house of religious literature in the United States has opened branch houses in London and Edinburgh, so great has the volume of business become. This is a true report. This is based on facts. There are abandoned churches just as there are abandoned farms. There are failures in religious enterprises just as there are failures in financial circles, but the work of the church is flourishing. The future is bright. God's cause is marching on. Take heart. Thank God and take courage. Is it true that there is a general decline in morals and in common decency? Take for example the question of strong drink. Fifty years ago many farmers carried their demijohns to the field and supplied the harvesters with drink. Can we do that to-day and escape criticism, yea, and not lose the respect of the community? Fifty years ago ministers of the gospel drank wines freely. Can one do so to-day and retain the respect of the people? Let me give you a bit of history. It will be one hundred and four years next June since the first frame church built on the Western Reserve was dedicated at Austinburg, Ohio. And do you know that church was christened with a bottle of whiskey? On the last day of the "raising"—it took about a week to get through the preliminaries—on the last day a great crowd assembled to witness the dedicatory ceremonies. A lake sailor climbed to the topmost point of the edifice, then by means of a rope he drew a bottle of whiskey from the ground and breaking it over the spire cried, "Three cheers for the new church!" Now there is a strong sentiment against christening battleships with anything other than pure, sparkling water. There is much that is bad yet present with us; the liquor problem is by no means solved, but when you are constrained to become gloomy and disheartened because of evil, think on these things.

Think on things that are honest, things that are just. You read your daily paper and say, What terrible news! Surely this is the hour of evil and iniquity! There are the great black headlines: Murder! Robbery! Suicide! Arson! Libel! Bribery! Slander! Embezzlement! Gambling! and what not! But there is also the honest and the just. Yesterday thousands of men did kindly and loving deeds, but no mention of them gets into the papers. If a man kill another that is news. If he keep his good name untarnished—well, that is simply his duty. If a man embezzle a half million dollars that is an occasion for headlines in letters half an inch in height. But if one denies himself every luxury in order that he may meet his obligations, that is not worth heralding, for he is only asserting his manhood. If crime were the ordinary and the usual it would not be exploited as it is in our press. Because it is the extraordinary and the unusual its record is spread broadcast. I number among my friends a man who some ten years ago lost all that he possessed by the failure of his business, not an uncommon thing, you say. But wait a bit. My friend refused to take advantage of the bankrupt law. He began life over again. He moved out of his big house into a smaller one. He lived very economically. He paid his debts dollar for dollar. I like to think of that man and such honor. I tell you every one of you can find such examples of honor and justice. You do not have to go far to find them either. Two thousand years ago virtue was scarce, crime ran rampant, iniquity flourished. But mid hypocrites and sinners there walked the Holy Spotless One. Few knew it, but he was there. Virtue doth not parade itself. It does not advertise. But it is here. Look for it. Find it. Think on it.

Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely. What a privilege to think on these things! There is that in us that calls for the beautiful and keeps on calling us, unless we stifle its voice. Every once in a while some philosopher rises and calls to us in clear clarion voice to get back to nature, that "only man is vile." Back to the rose and the lily and the tulip. Back to the brook and meadow and grove. Back to the glory of sunset and splendor of starry night and glow of eastern morn. Yes, back to nature's great heart. Well, Mother Nature is lovely and her childern are very fair. The rose in full bloom is very beautiful as is also the lily and the fuchsia. But I tell you of that which is yet more beautiful. A good woman or a good man. That rose is beautiful because it can not help it. That woman is pure because she willed to so be. That lily is lovely because it can't be anything else. That man is lovelier because he could have been the very opposite of that which he is. In a world where there are so many lovely things, so many pure things, why think on the opposite kind?

Whatsoever things are of good report. Let the things of bad report be forgotten. You learned a sad tale last night. It almost shook your faith in man and God. Well, forget it. Cast it out of your mind. Does it come back? Then drive it out. "We can not keep the birds from flying over our head but we can keep them from making nests in our hair." Much that we hear we would best let go in one ear and out the other. What a really great tonic this is! We become like things which we think about. "Our natures are subdued to what they work in like the dyer's hand." A lovely old lady, whose serene countenance was unmarred by lines of care, was engaged in conversation with a woman given to fretfulness. During the talk the latter inquired the cause for her companion's peace of mind and the secret of her content.

*A spring sermon preached in the Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, O., in April, 1904.

"My dear," said the old woman, "I keep a pleasure book."

"A what?"

"Yes, a pleasure book. Ever since I was a girl at school I have kept a daily account of all the pleasant things that have happened to me. I have put down only the pleasant things; the disagreeable ones I have forgotten as soon as possible. In my whole experience I can not recall a day so dark that it did not contain some little happiness."

"May I see the book?"

"Certainly."

Slowly the peevish friend turned the leaves. How insignificant the entries seemed! How much they meant! "Saw a beautiful lily in a window." "Talked to a bright, happy girl." "Received a kind letter from a dear friend." "Enjoyed a beautiful sunset." "Husband brought some roses home to me." "My boy out to-day for the first time after the croup."

"Have you ever found a pleasure for every day?" inquired the fretful woman wistfully.

"Yes; for every day, even the sad ones." The answer came in a low tone.

"I wish I were like you," said the discontented woman with a sigh. Then she looked at her aged friend and a beautiful reverence grew in her face. "I don't think," she said, as her eyes filled, "that you need to write them down any more on paper. Your pleasure book is written in your face."

Oh, what a tonic this 8th verse of the 4th chapter of Philippians is: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report"! Now, it all may be summed up in one word—Christ. Think on him. He was the truth incarnate. He was justice and truth personified. As for his purity, "He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." The universal verdict has been, "I find no fault in him." How lovely he is! Who can do justice to his life-report? "He went about doing good." Let us think on him.

Union and Home Missions

By R. Moffett

A brother, full of enthusiasm for foreign missions, came into my library the other day and immediately began an oft repeated speech on the theme which lay nearest his heart, fully illustrating the scripture, "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." He had all the figures at tongue's end. He said that in a little more than a hundred years Protestant Christians had established nearly 6,000 principal mission stations, and over 22,000 outstations; and have at work now over 16,000 foreign missionaries, among 1,500,000 communicants gathered into Christian churches—and adherents in all numbering nearly 5,000,000. "In fact," said he, "there has been placed in the heathen world sufficient leaven to leaven the whole lump."

"But what about home missions?" I inquired.

"I see," said he, "that at a conference of the officers of missionary boards of North America in 1902, it was shown that during the preceding year eleven representative religious bodies paid out for foreign missions nearly $2,500,000, and more than twice this sum for home missions, and more than nine times as much for local church expenses as for home missions. It seems to me this is lopsided giving. What do we need home missions for anyway? We have a sufficient number of church buildings and pastors to reach all the heathen at home. If every minister would do his duty in evangelizing the unconverted in this country, the opportunity to turn publicly to the Lord and salvation would be given to every man, woman and child, for less cost than the nearly $50,000,000 paid out for local church expenses. We need home missionaries to stir up all the churches to give five times the present offerings for foreign missions, and enlist at least 40,000 more men and women as working missionaries for the world's evangelization. The way is open for this work as never before, and the money is in the hands of Christian people to accomplish it."

"Your head is level," said I. "But are not the divisions in the Protestant ranks a great hindrance to the success of the work you have in view? Who will send out the home missionaries you have named? It seems to me there is a great home missionary work which must, of necessity, antedate the work you have in mind, or at least go along with it. The great leader and missionary prayed, not only for his first ministers to be one, but 'for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one* * that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' Jesus Christ clearly names intimate union, 'as thou, father, art in me and I in thee,' as a potent factor in the world's conversion. Conversely sectarianism is a great hindrance."

"True," said he, "but is not this question of union taking care of itself? Is not this very work of foreign missions helping greatly to this end? Then the undenominational societies, such as Bible societies, union Sunday-schools, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and many other institutions in which members of sectarian churches 'shake hands across the bloody chasm'—all these are breaking down the old middle walls of partition. Union is coming along so gradually that we do not note the progress made. I have heard my father say that when he was a boy the ministers of the different churches gave their thought and attention to settling the great questions of 'orthodoxy' as each understood it. It was a time of religious war. The Arminian camp sought reprisals from the Calvinistic camp. The Universalist camp essayed to capture both of them. Who cares about any of these old isms now? We have come a long way towards unity."

"Very true," said I, "but certainly no one will claim that we have reached the unity for which Jesus prayed. I think we need home missionaries to keep this thought before the church. The church will never have power for the world's conversion until she is thoroughly united, having only the doctrine and practice of the church set up by Christ and the apostles. Such a church would have just two things in view: (1) the making of disciples among all nations; (2) building them up in Christian character and power, by teaching them to observe all things taught by the great Teacher, and commanded by the great King. I think this is the royal road to the world's conversion."

"I see," said he, "how these divisions hinder home missionary work; and how, indirectly, they hinder foreign missionary work. But foreign converts, seeing the uselessness of these middle walls, are already tearing them down and pleading for union."

"And putting us to shame," said I. "There is only one religious body in this country which has made this plea for union its main work. This body is sending out home missionaries by state organizations, and by the American Christian Missionary Society. These missionaries are not seeking to build up a sectarian church. Like you I have no money for such a work. But for a voice, steadily lifted up in every community, town and city in this country in favor of the unity for which Jesus prayed, I have money and prayers to go with it. If the missionaries of "our" home missionary organizations have no greater mission than to plant and build up churches for the advancement of a religious denomination as an end, they had better be turned at once into the field covered by the scope of your vision. Remember the first Lord's day in May, and that there is scope for the missionaries of the American Christian Missionary Society. The unconverted are here. Sectarianism is here. There is great need and a great opportunity."

The Codes of Moses and Hammurabi*

By J. B. Jones

It is not the purpose of this lecture to compare in their entire contents these two ancient codes. This would require a volume and more time than we dare consume. Moreover, a full and perfect comparison involves an exhaustive analysis of every statute with its historical origin. This we do not attempt. We can not bind the sweet influence of the Pleiades nor loose the bands of Orion, nor direct Mazaroth in his season. No impossibility is attempted. But we dare institute such comparison between these two codes as requires no great erudition. Each is published in our own language. Moses has penetrated the remotest parts of the earth and can be read in hundreds of languages. Hammurabi was not dug from beneath the ruins of Shushan till late in 1901, but he has put forth mighty strides since started upon his career. He has found his way into many languages, receives recognition in our best dictionaries and encyclopedias, and the Chicago university, under the able direction of Dr. Robert Francis Harper and his assistants, sends forth from the University Press a most complete edition.

However much we might desire to explore the immense mass of facts, historical and archeological, we are shut up to the codes as they stand before us in their English attire. Whether they are judge-made, or brought into existence by legislative assemblies, or handed down by the great Author of all justice, it is not our purpose to decide. We take them as they are, and claim that there are certain great fundamental moral axioms with which every statute must be compared. God has implanted in the human soul certain rights with their corresponding obligations. Hence originates all law. No human being can speak laws into existence without appealing to the universal conscience. Every bill of rights, ancient or modern, rests on the eternal rock of truth. Throughout the universe of thought, hand in hand, throughout the whole domain of legislation, there will be found certain inalienable and indestructible rights with their corresponding obligations. If the two codes in question can be referred to these principles and come up to their requirements, they are just and holy and good. If they fail here, no matter who made them or where they came into being, they are not worthy of indorsement.

We beg then to think that the issue is not one wholly of language or of history. It is one of common sense. The appeal is to the universal sense of right, divinely implanted in the human breast. The African in the jungle as well as the Athenian in his highest stage of civilization alike stand upon this impregnable rock.

What system makes the most ample provision for the life of its citizens? Man, wherever found, is a worshiping being. Which code supplies the object of worship that will enshrine truth, beauty and goodness at the center of man's being, excluding that which sinks downward to the hell of infamy? Which fills the immortal part of man with longings for the complete unfolding of all his powers? Which draws the sharp line between the creature and Creator? Which clips the fetters that have bound man hand and foot and drawn him into the remorseless jaws of lust? Moses alone enjoined the worship of Jehovah, Elohim —the only true and living God. No code is complete if it fails to forbid idolatry and enjoin true worship. True, Hammurabi's religious code is yet to be unearthed. But he does enter the domain of religion when he condemns to death the thief of holy things within the temple.

Moses' code existed primarily for the perpetuation of monotheism. God through him inaugurated a theocratic government. Hence idolatry with its associated crimes was punishable with death. Treason under all governments suffers death.

The right to life was guarded by each code, but no explicit statute stands in Hammurabi proclaiming the sacredness of life. Thou shalt not kill belongs exclusively to Moses. The Babylonian code shows its disregard for human life by affixing the death penalty for more than thirty different offenses. At the outside the death penalty under Moses was for less than a dozen offenses. Nearly every statute under Hammurabi looked to the protection of property rights. Life had no adequate protection. Moses provided the cities of refuge, a proclamation of mercy to the innocent manslayer and a shield to protect the man who had taken life in self-defense. The willful, malicious murderer forfeited his right to live. The irrepealable law, "whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed," was erected into a permanent statute.

Both systems taught monogamy and punished with death adultery and incest. Moses put to death the offender in cases of bestiality and sodomy. Under the covenant at Sinai marriage received ample protection. The hardness of the human heart compelled Moses to permit divorce, but from the beginning the eternal law of God required that husband and wife should be one, thereby forbidding polygamy and excluding the right of divorce. The Babylonians were monogamists.

The protection of the rights of property belonging to widows and wives is a predominant feature of Hammurabi. Here it may surpass in its details Moses' law, but in core the Hebrew statutes supplied every principle for the protection of property rights.

Both held that man was responsible for the injury inflicted by his property as in the case of the goring ox, the inundating ditch or escaping fire from hedge row. Slavery belonged to both, but under Moses the escaped slave was to be harbored and aided, while Hammurabi put to death any one who aided or abetted the fugitive. The year of Jubilee and Sabbatic year set free the Hebrew slaves. Under certain restrictions Hammurabi set slaves free after three years.

Truth was required under both systems, and the perjurer under each was punished with the very penalty which his false oath sought to inflict. Lying and slander were condemned and punished. Bribery was forbidden, and purity in the judicial function encouraged. Moses emphasized the qualifications for office rising to the maximum qualities, the love of truth, hatred of covetousness, the fear of God and capability.

The observance of the Sabbath was specifically enjoined by Moses, the right to time for spiritual culture being recognized, and the obligations to serve God enforced. Hammurabi is silent on this issue, but outside evidence asserts the presence of the Sabbath.

The law which lifts Moses far above Hammurabi, is that commandment which is subjective. Thou shalt not covet, enters the source of all life and purifies the fountain. Hence it anticipates and prevents murder, adultery, theft and all crimes.

Transcending all other commandments, embracing all, are the commandments which fulfill all law. No theory of evolution can account for the commandments on which hang all the law and the prophets. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind, soul and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself."

Babylon knows no love. It has no supreme goal except the commercial life which throbs through every statute and directs all legislation.

In cruelty, neither code is above reproach. Yet we hold that Hammurabi is more cruel in affixing the death penalty for thirty-nine offenses, than Moses who puts to death for less than a dozen offenses. Mutilation in many cases sinks the Hammurabi code down to the lowest level. Hammurabi often punished the innocent for the guilty; Moses never did this.

There is not a gleam of mercy in Hammurabi. Who can think of the provisions for the poor in forbidding

Orientation of Religion

By William Durban

Once more our English work seems to be approaching a kind of crisis in its history. Very trying changes in the pastorate are about to affect several of the churches. E. M. Todd leaves England for his native land earlier than was expected when he felt constrained to resign his charge at Hornsey, where he took up work in 1903, after several years of arduous ministry at West London tabernacle. Chester is vacant since a few months ago our young Brother R. H. Newton finished his agreed term as preacher. We all regret also now to hear that B. Mitchell has notified his intentions to leave his charge at Liverpool. Lastly, there will soon be a vacancy at Lancaster, as T. H. Bates will be leaving this country for America, where he studied in his youth before his years of ministry in Australia, from which country he came to serve in England. We are all praying that, as these changes will create considerable suspense and anxiety in the churches, a kind Providence will bring in some new compensating blessings. May these brothers who are leaving us be abundantly blessed now that they have turned their faces towards the setting sun, and may others be found to fill their places with benedictions waiting for them! I have had the great pleasure of a long talk with R. H. Newton on his return from his recent trip to Palestine and Egypt by the Christian Commonwealth tour. He has had a memorable time, such as makes an epoch in a young student's life. It did me good to listen to the almost ecstatic expressions of his appreciation of the feast of intellect and soul which had fallen to his share. He told me how his reading of ancient history and of the Bible will now have a new meaning for him. I am very thankful that this young preacher, after his year in Chester, has had the benefit of this oriental observation before returning to his home in Illinois. I understand that from that same state a call has come to E. M. Todd from an important church and that this is hastening his departure.

I wish in this article to engage the kind attention of my readers concerning a topic on which I have often wondered that nothing has been written, so far as I am aware. I have just spoken of the visit of a friend to the near east. He, like all other visitors from western lands, was, as he told me emphatically, deeply impressed with the archaic character of the scenes on which he looked, especially in connection with the manners and customs in Palestine and Egypt. Truly nothing has essentially changed since the time of Abraham. Our friend was astonished and amused as he looked on Galilean peasants driving rough wooden ploughs. He happened to arrive at Cana just as a wedding party was passing along in a most picturesque procession like our Lord looked upon. And everything is as it was in the dawn of history. It is still the unchangeable east.

Now, I have long been convinced that in the immutable Orient there is a splendid opening for planting any number of churches of Christ on the original and primitive plan. Christianity sprang up in the east, and its organization and methods were shaped to suit oriental life. Is it not likely that if it had been born in the west it would in many respects have taken quite a different form? I will illustrate my meaning from my own observations. I shall never forget my delightful experience some years ago in Smyrna. When staying in that finest city of Asia Minor I paid repeated visits to the beautiful community constituting the church of Christ there. It was a few months before the atrocities which desolated the Armenian settlements in Asia Minor. Our church of Christ in Smyrna had then no permanent chapel. Nor had it any settled pastor as yet located there. So that I saw it in all its absolutely primitive simplicity, gathering for worship in the large upper room of a dwelling house. How sweet were those services! I seemed to realize exactly how the church of Christ at Smyrna worshipped in the days of Paul and John; and I almost felt as if we might expect at any minute a visit by John from Ephesus. All round the walls of the large room the brethren and sisters sat on a low divan. Everything was purely oriental, and was harmoniously in place. Now, as the east of to-day is the same as the east of 2,000 years ago, I should say that the form of Christianity most likely to live and flourish there again is this same simple and original form. Can anything be more unnatural than the attempt of Greek Catholics, Roman Catholics and Anglo-Catholics to import and transplant the development of occidental Christendom in Asia Minor, Palestine, Egypt, Arabia, Morocco, Tunis and Persia? But this is a fatal mistake which some of the great missionary societies are committing. No wonder if their failures are greater than their successes.

I have now paved the way for the expression of one of my innermost convictions. I feel deeply impressed by the fact that certain movements in this country have made immense noise, and have attracted very great attention, upsetting thousands of minds, and yet have produced small results in proportion to the commotion caused. The first of these had its rise in Scotland, and gave birth to the earnest and energetic body of excellent people called the Scotch Baptists, who are a totally different community from the much more numerous and powerful English Baptists in Scotland. It was the object of the Scotch Baptists at the very beginning of their movement to conduct all services of worship on a purely primitive New Testament plan. So they slavishly adhered to such a program as could be manufactured by literally adopting whatever seemed to be prescribed in the New Testament. The result was certainly characterized by the barest and most unadorned simplicity. Indeed, it was an attempted introduction into the west of the oriental style in externals and details of procedure of oriental Christian forms. There must be no regular ministry, no stated or settled pastorate, no instrumental music, no acceptance of offerings except from the actual membership, and no kind of fellowship with even the most heavenly minded people if these through erroneous teaching had not been immersed. I think I am describing the Scotch Baptists justly. They were and are a godly and faithful community. But their strict and slavish orientalism did not touch Scotland. I know very many intelligent Scottish people from different parts of Scotland, but I have rarely met with any who ever heard that there were such Christians as these Scotch Baptists, although they all seem to know all about the English Baptists in Scotland. Now, we have among us in England many little churches scattered about belonging to what we familiarly call, for the sake of easy distinction, the Old Brethren. They, for convenience, usually call us the American Brethren. It is a matter of history that the churches of Christ belonging to the Old Brethren sprang up in the early part of the last century as offshoots from the Scotch Baptists. And to-day, as then, the Old Brethren in England are the analogue and the repetition of the Scotch Baptists of the north. They continue to practice the orientation of Christianity with the greatest self-denial and pertinacity. More estimable brethren cannot be found so far as piety, devotion and intense desire to act in conformity with the Savior's will are concerned. I have here and there very dear friends among them. But ecclesiastically they will not recognize me and my brothers and sisters in our churches of Christ existing after the fashion of the multitudinous fellowships in America. And England is little touched by these Old Brethren, for a very simple reason. The oriental system can never be engrafted on the west. Westernism cannot be engrafted on the eastern life. The cardinals and bishops and priests cannot see this and blunder on out there with their repellent missions. The Scotch Baptists and Old Brethren cannot see the converse side and blunder on earnestly with the attempt to reform western Christendom by the importation of oriental styles of services. It will not do! The greatest commotion of all is that which has been created during the last half century by the Plymouth Brethren. These are of all the most ardent orientators. And they are the greatest failures. Of them I have written heretofore. I am one of those who believe that the simple and primitive doctrine of the New Testament, the pure ordinances and the ancient Jerusalem faith of the apostles can be, should be and must be reproduced in western Christendom. But the west will never copy the customs of the east. This is impossible. The chief obstacle to the restoration of primitive Christianity is to be found in the hard-shell attitude of the orientating restorers. Wherever we attempt to establish a church of Christ on sensible and reasonable lines, without crude repetition of non-essential oriental methods of meeting and worship, we find that prejudice arises because in this country the term "church of Christ" has become associated in the minds of Christian people generally with attempts to organize fellowships which, by their peculiar and foreign orientalism, repel much more than they attract. This has rendered the movement for establishing unsectarian Christianity far more difficult in England than in America. The people generally think that directly unsectarianism is mentioned the reference is to the hard, bare, and very unsympathetic system practiced by Scotch Baptists, or Plymouth Brethren, or Old Brethren. And the vast majority naturally shy off at once.

The Rational Basis of Obedience

By H. C. Garrison

IV. The Spiritual Meaning of Baptism.

Thus far the way seems pretty clear, but do we not now come to the realm of "positive law"? Is not baptism an arbitrary commandment? Can there be any such necessity for it as for faith and repentance? Is not the command of Christ its only sanction? The answer which is here attempted is that there is an imperative need of something to come in just where baptism comes, and do just what baptism does, and that the baptism of the New Testament meets this need better than any substitute for it that man has been able to devise. Let us at the outset dismiss from our minds the idea that baptism is a mere rite, or legalistic ceremony; that would at once put it out of place in the Christian system. Let us hold fast the position taken at the beginning, baptism is for man. It has, it is true, its godward aspect, as we shall see. In fact it touches all our relations, godward, manward, and selfward. It has to do with my inward peace; it has to do with my relations to the world; it has to do with my relations to God. Let us examine it in this threefold aspect.

1. The penitent sinner needs some place of positive assurance that his sins are pardoned. How can he know that he is forgiven, and accepted as God's child? Faith alone cannot bring such assurance, there would be uncertainty as to whether the faith is strong enough. Nor can penitence alone afford it, for the reason that there would be constant doubt whether or not the repentance is thorough enough. No inward experience or feeling can be a criterion in this matter for the reason that pardon does not take place within us but in the mind of God, and we cannot know what takes place, or when it takes place, in his mind unless he shall make it known. And yet our inward peace depends upon our being fully assured of forgiveness. How can this assurance be given? God has provided for this spiritual need by coupling his promise of pardon with baptism. No man has any authority to be dogmatic as to the precise moment when God forgives sin, but every soul may rest in the blessed assurance of pardon when, moved by faith in Jesus Christ, he has turned from his evil ways, and obeyed this command. His promise is linked to baptism, seemingly, to meet this very need of the soul.

2. With reference to the world, baptism is a solemn public proclamation that the old life is forsaken, with its sins and follies, and the new life in Christ Jesus is begun. It is the definite point which separates, in the eyes of the world at least, the old from the new. "As many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ" is Paul's significant statement. He uses here the language of the theatre. The actor "puts on" the character of another. He dresses, and speaks, and thinks, and feels, like the one he impersonates. So the sinner in baptism publicly "puts on Christ." His solemn proclamation is: "The old man of sin whom you knew is dead, behold his burial. The man whom you shall see raised up is a new man, created in Christ Jesus unto good works. I now put on Christ; henceforth my endeavor shall be to speak and act and think and feel as Christ."

In baptism, by this public renunciation of the past, the sinner makes reparation, so far as reparation is possible, for the evil results of his former open disobedience. Such public renunciation and reparation is demanded by a genuine repentance.

3. Baptism as touching the sinner's relation to God must be briefly treated. It serves as a test of our loyalty to Christ. It is in perfect harmony with the positions hitherto taken in this paper to now state that whatever may be the significance of baptism, in the last analysis there is no other reason for our submitting to it than that Christ has commanded it. One may be just, or virtuous, or merciful from the promptings of his own heart and with no reference to Christ; but not so is it with baptism. We need some such act as a proof or test of our loyalty, otherwise we might deceive ourselves. The sinner might feel a desire, in a general way, to do the will of Christ, going so far as to make an inward resolve that he will do better than he has been doing, and mistake this for a genuine conversion. But when Jesus commands him to come forth and before the eyes of the world make the unequivocal renunciation of the past and pledge for the future which baptism embodies, if he is unwilling to do that, he cannot be self deceived. Thus it serves as a test act to reveal us to ourselves. Christ does not need such a test, for he knows what is in man, but we need it. At this point also baptism is for man.

Since there is an unquestionable need of some outward act which makes its own solemn forceful announcement to the world, serves as a revelation of man's heart unto himself, and marks definitely the point where God's promise may become our assurance of acceptance, what conceivable act could be more suitable and significant than the New Testament baptism, which at once declares our belief in the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus—the cardinal facts of the gospel; proclaims our death to the old and resurrection to the new life in Christ, and also with prophetic significance points to our final death, burial and triumphant resurrection into the everlasting kingdom?

By F. D. Power

Sunday, 19, it was my privilege to serve as "University preacher" at the honored institution founded by Thomas Jefferson. A different sort of theology is dealt out each Sunday during the session in the university pulpit. For the most part it has been served by a chaplain, but for some time now preachers of various religious bodies have been called to preach for a single Lord's day in the chapel, and the pastoral work is left to a Y. M. C. A. secretary. The chaplain was selected in the past in turn from one of four "leading religious denominations." Alexander Campbell, on his first visit to Charlottesville, speaking of this regulation, said: "A new sort of quadrangular orthodoxy got into the institution. The chaplain must belong to some one of the four angles of a parallelogram. He must be an Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Methodist or Baptist. There are but four ways to heaven from the University of Virginia. By what chapter and verse of the book of Kings," he asks, "or by what statute of the commonwealth of Virginia, or by what suggestion of Thomas Jefferson, are the four elect sects placed over the religious and moral culture of all the Virginia youth who frequent the state institution?" Now things are different. Such men as Charles Cuthbert Hall, Kerr B. Tupper, Robert E. Speer, Bishops Candler, Randolph, Coke Smith and Duncan, and Burris A. Jenkins and W. M. Forrest, have served this session. There are seven hundred and twenty-five young men in that institution and about sixty per cent are church members.

The university is an old school, beautiful for situation, placid, solid, democratic, evangelical, and thorough in culture. It has been noted since its establishment for the excellent learning of its instructors and the high character of its students. It has proven itself an inspired Castalian fountain, worthy the name of its great founder. Thomas Jefferson has not received the credit due him for his interest in the religious tone of the university. No doubt he was a Unitarian in sentiment, but in his scheme, submitted to the state legislature in 1818, he proposed there should be left on the grounds room for a building to be erected "for religious worship," and wished to have two rooms in the main building set apart for this purpose. The motto of the great school may be read in Greek on the front of one of its stateliest buildings: "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Not insensible to the Christian sentiment of Virginia, Mr. Jefferson procured an enactment declaring that if any religious denomination should establish its theological seminary near the university, its students should be admitted on the same terms as its own pupils. There is no theological department. This omission was not prompted by hostility to religion, as has been thought, but was made necessary by the policy of the commonwealth to divorce the state from the church and embodied in the act of 1785, "Establishing Religious Freedom." The religious services at the university and the Y. M. C. A. secretary, like the John B. Cary Bible chair, are supported by voluntary contribution. A beautiful Y. M. C. A. building, presented by the Dodge family of New York, is just nearing completion, and the Bible chair, it is hoped, will soon be recognized by the appointment of Mr. Forrest as assistant professor of biblical criticism and literature.

It is impossible to estimate the dignity and work of this famous seat of learning. Its first rectors were Jefferson and Madison, and its most famous student Edgar Allan Poe. Its alumni are numbered by thousands, its literature has been rich and abundant, and its influence reaches everywhere. It has rendered its great service to mankind on a slight foundation so far as money is concerned, having received less than a million in gifts. It presents a scene of idyllic beauty. Here is the noble quadrangle with its one-story dormitories and continuous pillared arcades like the cloisters of a monastery, broken here and there by professors' dwellings, and with the stately Pantheon or rotunda at the end. Below is the picturesque town of Charlottesville, and beyond, Monticello, where rests the illustrious statesman, and the tenderly loved young wife, "intermarried with Thomas Jefferson, Jan. 1, 1772; torn from him by death Sept. 6, 1782," and mourned by him for forty-four years. Far away stretches the Rapid Ann where there is good angling for patient knights of the rod, and where every bend and bridge and ford tells of historic scenes of the civil war. On every side are the blue hills in whose coves the famous Albemarle pippins grow; and fertile fields and gardens, and stately homes, with a society hospitable, refined, and charming, such as the Old Dominion can well furnish. This is the region where one may take a horseback ride through a lovely rural district, and, fancying the men alive, may breakfast with a President Taylor; and call on a Justice of the Supreme Court and United States Senator, the Barbours; and lunch with another President, Madison; and visit by the way a Minister to the court of St. James, Stevenson; and sup with another President, Jefferson; and spend the evening with a famous literary genius, Poe; and lodge with another President, Monroe. And all this in a day's ride through the country.

April 13, Founders' Day, the new president, Edwin A. Alderman, is to be installed. Jefferson's idea of governing the university with a faculty simply, of which one should be chairman, has prevailed to this day. A new order is about to be instituted. Distinguished guests from all over the nation are to be present. Cap, gown and hood for the first time are to be worn by the faculty, and for the first time in its history a president will assume control. Representatives from all the colleges and universities of note in the land will grace the occasion with their presence. Coolidge, of Harvard, and Butler, of Columbia, and Hill, of Georgia, and Jesse, of Missouri, and other great educators, will make addresses. There will be a great alumni banquet, with Thomas Nelson Page in charge, and a torchlight procession by the students, and fireworks, and it will be an occasion worthy of the honor and traditions of the university.

The new president is a famous educator, born in Wilmington, N. C., May 15, 1861, graduated from the university of North Carolina in '82, where he served later as professor and president, and coming from Tulane university, Louisiana, of which he has been president since 1900. Here is his ideal of a university:

> "I have an ideal for this noble foundation. My desire would have it a place where there is always a breath of freedom in the air; where a sound and various learning is taught heartily without sham or pretense; where the life and teachings of Jesus furnish forth the ideal of right living and true manhood; where manners are gentle, and courtesies daily multiply between teacher and taught; where all classes and conditions and beliefs are welcome, and men may rise in earnest striving by the might of merit; where wealth is no prejudice, and poverty no shame; where honorable labor, even rough labor of the hands, is glorified by high purpose and strenuous desire for the clearer air and the larger view; where there is a will to serve all high ends of a great state struggling up out of ignorance into general power; where men are trained to observe closely, to imagine vividly, to reason accurately, and to have about them some humility and some toleration; where, finally, truth, shining patiently like a star, bids us advance, and we will not turn aside."

It was a pleasure to meet many of the faculty of this time-honored school and to enjoy the hospitality of our brother, Prof. Charles W. Kent; and also to visit the church where I was pastor 31 years ago, which is doing well under the ministry of C. R. Sine. Running down to Old Gilboa for a day I met with D. E. Hanna, the pastor, G. W. Kemper, of Kentucky, and William Pendleton Lamar, who were visitors there, and especially my old friends, Dr. and Mrs. Philip B. Pendleton. Dr. Pendleton is in his 86th year. He was the youngest brother of President Pendleton and has been a pillar of our cause in eastern Virginia. He reads without glasses and his spirit is as young as ever. His life is a benediction to all who come in touch with him. His path shines brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

Our Budget

—America.

—All eyes should now be turned upon our own great country.

—What are its religious needs, and how we can assist in supplying them—these are the problems before us.

—Let the churches be prompt to send in their foreign missionary offerings, as other interests now demand attention.

—See report of our Congress at Columbia in our editorial and other pages this week. The report will be completed in our next.

—These beautiful spring days we have been enjoying are prophecies of the coming summer and remind us that sowing comes before reaping. This is as true in the spiritual as in the material world.

—J. F. Powers has accepted a call to Homewood, Kan.

—Thos. J. Shuey, minister at Abingdon, Ill., reports that W. J. Allen, one of his elders, has concluded to enter the ministry regularly. He attended school at Eureka, and has already preached some.

—The American Christian Missionary Society is in receipt of two annuities, one for $300, from one of our faithful preachers, with a promise to increase the amount, the other for $500, from a friend in Indiana.

—E. R. Childers, of Troy, Mo., one of our Missouri preachers who labored some years in California and who preached last year in Kentucky, is now back at Troy, Mo., and is ready to minister to any church that may need his services.

—There can be little excuse for not knowing what home missions means, to any one honestly anxious to know. Literature will be sent without charge to anyone asking for it. Address Benjamin L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—J. Boyd Jones very properly says, in writing about revivals, that a great need of the times is "a re-conversion of those who have their names on the church book. There are too many in the churches who have a theory and have mechanically obeyed a theory, but their hearts are not in the work."

—L. H. Otto, pastor at Shelbyville, Ill., recently held a short meeting in which Brethren Shaw, Kelley and Faulders each preached some sermons. The meeting had a good effect on the congregation and there were 22 additions. The work at Shelbyville is prospering in Brother Otto's hands.

—The time is short till May 7. There never were so many appeals depending upon the answer of the brotherhood to the Home Society's appeal. We urge upon all our churches a hearty observance of the day, and hope that our greatest offering may be reported this year.

—The Foreign Society has received another gift of $500 on the annuity plan from a friend in Indiana. This is the 230th bond issued by this society. Two other friends in Ohio will turn over $1,000 each in a few days. The society has made a gain in its annuity gifts during the current missionary year of about $7,000.

—A. W. Jeffress, of Illinois, who recently gave our National Benevolent Association $1,000 on the annuity plan, duplicated that generous gift on March 19.

—The Indiana state convention will meet at Bedford, May 16-18. The Louisiana state convention will meet at Monroe, May 23-25. The Texas state convention will meet at North Waco, May 15-19. The Arkansas state convention meets at Paragould, May 18-22. The southwest Kentucky convention meets at Hopkinsville, May 23-25.

—"Who is William Prentice, the retired minister, who is writing the exceedingly interesting series of letters to his nephew in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST?" Just for the present that is our editorial secret; but can't you identify him from his style? If not, what's the worth of what is called the internal evidence of authorship?

—Interest in the offering for home missions, we are glad to say, increases year by year. Time was when this great branch of our church work appeared to be neglected. But the developments of recent years have shown that we cannot slight the home work if we expect to see the other work prosper. We hope to report a great list of churches this year supporting their own missionaries on the home field.

—There are only four people in his congregation that E. A. Hibler, pastor of the First church at Johnstown, Pa., likes to see burdened. The more work these brethren have to do, he says, and the more perplexed they become, the better pleased is the pastor. Brother Hibler refers to the ushers, who are frequently in great difficulty in finding seats for the large congregations.

—There is perhaps only one church among our brotherhood in the home land that is served by a Japanese as minister. This is the Asheville church, N. C., which has called Bro. J. Minakuchi. This bright Japanese graduated from Kentucky university, and went to Yale for advanced work. He is a fine speaker in our own language, and to make him more of an American he married a Kentucky girl.

—Brother Lichtenberger reports that President Burris A. Jenkins, of Kentucky university, addressed the Disciples' club of Columbia university, New York, on March 13, speaking in a most optimistic vein on "Some Phases of the Educational Problem Among the Disciples of Christ." There are in the club this year 10 members who are doing work in the graduate departments of Columbia, and several others from the college and allied schools.

—The ladies' patriotic association asked permission to hold a meeting in the new Christian chapel in Akozu, Japan, and invited Evangelist Kawamura and his daughter to speak to them on Christianity. The invitation was gladly accepted. Later the village mayor assembled the other officials in the church also to hear the gospel preached. Two men from this church are preparing for the ministry, and a third probably will do so later. The Sendai chapel will be completed in April.

—The report of the Grand avenue church, Minneapolis, Minn., indicates progress. The present membership is 162. Since Jan. 1, 1905, 16 have been added to the church. The Sunday-school has passed the 200 mark. The basement of the church has been remodeled by enlarging rooms, relighting, plastering, putting in blackboards and making two new rooms. The Intermediate society has increased in membership from 20 to over 40, and our Juniors from 40 to nearly 70. There are 50 young people (under 16 years) who give five cents per week for missions. The church's foreign apportionment was advanced from $30 to $50, and they have raised $53.85. The midweek prayer-meetings have averaged 40 in attendance and are deeply spiritual. A pastor's aid society (a reorganization of the ladies' aid society) has made 200 calls. Fred Kline is the pastor.

—A new church building is being erected for the little circle of Disciples at Kissimmee, Fla., where the work is well organized and progressing satisfactorily. Bro. D. M. Breaker writes us that E. H. Rayner, the pastor, is

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

earnest and untiring in his efforts to establish our cause firmly there. The congregation is in perfect sympathy with him in his determination of achieving a grand success. Dr. Breaker is the oldest member, and to him was given the pleasant duty of removing the first spadeful of dirt on the lot where the church is to be built.

—J. G. Waggoner is about again after a severe attack of the grippe.

—The Kansas Christian ministerial institute will be held at Le Roy, April 11-13.

—We are very glad to hear that matters are rapidly being adjusted at the First church, Bloomington, Ill.

—The telegraph brings us the news of 131 additions at Winchester, Ill., and 147 at New Albany, Ind.

—F. E. Robinson has closed his work at The Dalles, Oregon, and entered upon a new pastorate at Vancouver, Wash.

—With 226 added to the church, a large building will now be required at Lyons, Kan., and Bro. Geo. Lyons informs us it will be erected this summer.

—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist, will conduct the music in a meeting in Salem, Oregon, beginning May 6; S. M. Martin will be the evangelist.

—As we go to press comes the following telegram:

Paris, Ill.—400 in 31 days; 101 signed Endeavor pledge yesterday. Continue. Scoville and Smith, evangelists.—Finis Idleman, pastor.

—Allen Wilson's meeting at Winchester, Ill., was at such an important stage that the church refused to let him go. Hence his meeting at the Jefferson street church, Buffalo, N. Y., has been delayed. He will begin there April 2.

—A correction has come to us to the effect that the Illinois eighth district convention will be held at Carterville, June 6-8. F. L. Davis is pastor there; F. G. Roberts, of Carbondale, is the evangelist of this district, and H. J. Reynolds, of Anna, is the secretary.

—In a personal note from Bro. J. V. P. Bentley, of Shanghai, China, enclosing an article for publication, he says: "We are back at our post and are all well. China never seemed so great to me as now—so well worth saving!" We must join with all other Christian bodies in helping to save China and the rest of the non-Christian nations.

—In a letter from Jas. A. Beem and wife, under date of March 16, from Fall River, Kan., he reports that our well known brother, J. W. Butler, long known as president of Abingdon college, is slowing recovering from a very severe illness. His old students, including a number of our prominent men throughout the country, will join with us in the sincere wish and prayer that he may recover his health, and long be spared with his good wife to serve the cause they love. Brother Beem says: "Brother Butler has had charge of the church here for about 20 years, and is greatly loved by every one."

—W. H. Thomas, of Fulton, Mo., referring to our recent editorial in review of the symposium on evangelism, says: "When you say the Holy Spirit is the divine agent in conversion you seem to convey the idea that the Holy Spirit is an abstract entity, power or personality outside of man, and the way through which the gospel is made effective in every conversion." The idea we intended to convey, and which we think we did convey to most of our readers, is that the Holy Spirit, who is the one divine Being, manifesting himself as Spirit, moves upon men for their conversion through the mighty facts, truths and motives of the gospel of Christ. In other words, the power that converts men comes from outside of man, from above, and appeals to that which is within man. Our critic further states: "Now, while in one sense it is true that in conversion and sanctification the Spirit operates on the believer only through the truth believed, may it not also be true that the word of truth operates upon man's Spirit in his conversion?" The word of truth operates upon man's spirit only as it is believed, and we are not to separate such influence from that of the Holy Spirit.

—J. K. Ballou, pastor of the Christian church at Sioux City, Ia., reports the church there as making an heroic effort to build a house and own its place of worship. They have secured a fine lot in the best residence section of the city, and arrangements have been made with the Board of Church Extension to secure a loan as soon as the lot is paid for. They lack $1,200 yet of paying for the lot. The church is suffering for the lack of a place of worship, and Brother Ballou appeals to the brotherhood for assistance in giving them a footing in this city of 40,000 or 50,000 people. He asks those who are interested to send him the names and addresses of persons who might give them financial aid. Address J. K. Ballou, 1201 Jackson St.

Life Line Churches and Bible-Schools.

The Executive Board of our National Benevolent Association has adopted a resolution providing that churches, Bible-schools and individuals giving $100 or more per annum prior to Oct. 1, shall be designated in its literature and printed and annual reports and convention statements as life line churches, etc.

This sum is named because it is about the average cost in cash for the annual maintenance of each class of dependents committed to our care. It costs less than that for a child, fully $100 for each of our old brothers and sisters, and much more per bed in our free hospital, but as the children predominate, $100 is a fair average.

Every church in our brotherhood should have a laudable ambition to write its name on this fair scroll and it is within the power of most to do so. The Easter offerings of the Bible-schools may be added to the other gifts of the church to aggregate this sum if agreeable to the local congregation.

In remitting these life line gifts, send also the names of the church's minister and Bible-school superintendent.

We appeal to churches, schools and Disciples everywhere to throw out the life line to the helpless ones drifting past us on the tide of misfortune and help save them for themselves and society and the church and eternity. Our rescued ones are invaluable missionaries for the rest of their lives no matter where their station. The undersigned will be glad to give further information to all inquirers concerning this life line movement. Geo. L. Snively, Sec.

The Comparison of the Codes of Moses and Hammurabi.*

By J. B. Jones.

the pawning of the wedge, mill-stone, cloak, and in leaving the gleanings of the harvest, the vintage, without praising God?

Sanitary provisions are found in that code which has exempt the Hebrew from the ravages of disease wherever his lot has been cast. Dr. Kelley, of Baltimore, writes indorsing the sanitary provisions of the laws regulating leprosy, and his authority in medical circles is universally accepted.

The democratic features of the Mosaic economy, beginning at the foot of Mt. Sinai, and finding their culmination at the base of Mts. Ebal and Gerizim when more than two millions of Hebrews accepted and ratified the code of Moses, come to-day with renewed force when old empires are disintegrating.

The supreme test of legislation is the effect it has upon its people. Where can we find a people into the warp and woof of whose history their laws have been so fully interwoven? Aside from the Hebrews, where is there a current of nationality running through the centuries, indestructible, forever disappearing and reappearing, remaining identical everywhere and preserving intact institutions which commemorate great pivotal historical eras? The Hebrews have most appropriately been termed the gulf stream of civilization. What has thus filled them with life, with power to impart warmth and ozone to the races whose empires lie scattered along the pathway of human development? The code of Moses embodies as its climax and the goal of all legislation, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind and heart and soul and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself."

The Seventh Congress of Disciples.

This year's Congress, which met at Columbia, Mo., March 21-23, covered a wider field than last year's, when the subject of Christian union rather overshadowed other themes. President Jesse, of the University of Missouri, was to have made the address of welcome, representing the town, but owing to his sickness this duty was pleasantly performed by Dean Jones, while the response of the Congress was made by J. C. Mabry, of Albia, Iowa. In the absence of J. J. Haley, president of the Congress, President Hieronymus, of Eureka College, occupied the chair on the occasions the appointed chairmen failed to come, those absent being J. J. Haley, W. F. Richardson, George H. Combs and C. A. Young.

The Bible in the Light of Archaeology.

The first paper on the program was on the theme "The Archæology of the Past Century in its Bearing upon the Credibility of the Biblical Records." Its author was Dr. H. L. Calhoun, a recent addition to the faculty of the Bible College, Lexington. He prefaced his remarks with an explanation of what archæology is, giving the various definitions of it and preferring to define it for himself as the science of the treatment of the remains of the past, concerning any and all traces of which mankind had left. But his specific duty was to discuss the question: "What is the effect of the scientific treatment of the remains of the human past upon the claims to our confidence made by the 66 books contained in the Protestant Bible?" He could only hope to do this briefly and to state certain conclusions respecting some other matters not discussed. Enunciating the canons of criticism he entered upon the discussion with a consideration of the "flood story," explaining that he considered it first because the Babylonian account of it was discovered earlier than that of the cosmogony. As we do not, he argued, know who wrote this Babylonian flood story or how he obtained his information it must be assigned to those writings possessing the least degree of credibility. Yet when the traditions of one people are corroborated by those of another the degree of credibility is enhanced. There are traditions of a flood in not fewer than 87 different and widely scattered tribes and races. A comparison between the two main stories shows that in twenty-two prominent statements there are striking points of agreement, while the most important differences are only seven, all but three of them of such minor importance as to strengthen rather than weaken the force of the testimony, since they bear against the idea of collusion or direct dependence one upon the other.

Passing on to a consideration of cosmogony a comparison of the Bible narrative of creation with the Babylonian story was presented and the opinions of Driver and Sayce quoted. "It is evident," said Dr. Calhoun, "that in the opinion of these two eminent authors the two narratives are closely related and that where they differ the differences are due in the main to the crudities of the polytheism of the Babylonian writer and when these are stripped off we have the two accounts in substantial agreement," thus tending to a confirmation of the credibility of the biblical record. On the other hand T. G. Pinches does not regard the two stories as closely allied.

Other points discussed by the author were: (1) The four kings against the five kings in Gen. 14; (2) The Table of Nations in Gen. 10; (3) Joseph, Israel in Egypt and the Exodus; (4) the Hittites; (5) The Moabite stone, the Black Obelisk of Shalmanezer and the Capture of Samaria; (6) Biblical Chronology and (7) New Testament History. We reserve a fuller outline of these points in view of the fact that the author contemplates using this essay in a series of lectures he has been asked to give. He frankly conceded that an opponent of his views could make his strongest attack in a discussion of the Daniel problems, which the limits of his time forbade his entering upon.

The duties of reviewer had been assigned to Dr. O. T. Morgan, of Lindenwood, Ill. In his absence his paper was read very acceptably by F. L. Moffett, of Centerville, Ia. The reviewer claimed that the author of the paper did not treat his theme with the broad spirit in which it was marked out for him; he entered the lists as a champion of the truths of the biblical history in its most literal interpretation and refused to present evidence that was damaging to his presupposition. Dr. Morgan at once criticised the omission of the discussion of the Daniel problem. He claimed that the nature of the task assigned the writer of the original paper demanded that he present the facts which cast discredit on the historical material in the book of Daniel as faithfully as he did the points that sustain the biblical narrative in any particular. "We do not care to have Daniel thus handed over to the lions' den without a trial." The paper, he said, was really on such a theme as this, "Testimony which may be derived from archæology in support of the historical credibility of the Bible." This left to him the duty of calling attention to some points on which the testimony of archæology is not so favorable to the biblical records, though this duty was not in accordance with his desires or preferences. He claimed that the testimony of the monuments entirely upset the usual biblical chronology, and argued that in estimating the weight of the testimony of archæology to the biblical account of the flood we must distinguish between the essential and the incidental in the biblical narrative. The 87 accounts of the flood differ so much in details that they cannot, he said, all refer to the same event. In the opinion of most archæologists, he claimed, the Genesis story is derived from the Babylonian either by direct descent or by borrowing.

The creation stories, too, after the argument of the reviewer, are derived from the Babylonians. Although there are two different versions the traditions of an event which no one witnessed or experienced cannot have the value of a historical document. No Assyriologist has ever suspected that the Babylonian account has any real historical value. How, then, can it lend to the Genesis story a quality which it does not itself possess?

Again, granting that identification in Gen. 14 is correct—a point not concurred in by all scholars—we must guard against using fictitious evidence in support of the Bible, and to prove from archæology that the nations referred to in Gen. 10 actually existed has no bearing at all on the point at issue. As to Joseph, the most that can be said is that his career was possible. It seems strange that only one reference to Israel has been found. The inscriptions give no light for the period of the Conquest and the Judges, but from 900 B. C. many references to Israel are found in the records. In conclusion, while there is slight confirmation of scripture in the monuments, Israel could easily remain unnoticed in the midst of the great events then transpiring. While the value of the records is limited as confirming scripture they shed much light on the conditions of the ancient world and so help us to better understand the Bible and make it a more living and valuable book.

The discussion was opened by Dr. Clinton Lockhart, of Drake university, who said that much valuable light had been omitted by the essayists and that the chief difficulty was that we do not know whether the biblical account is dependable on the Babylonian account. Abraham came out of Chaldea, whence the Babylonian record comes; may it not be true that Moses had these traditions before him when he wrote his account and selected and eliminated all that was not true? The possibility that the two accounts are not independent is what weakens the argument of the credibility of the archæological records. Dr. Lockhart touched also on other points. W. T. Moore suggested that all the existing records might have come from some one original. Dr. Dungan, Pres. J. B. Jones and H. A. Denton appeared hostile to the reviewer's attitude, Mr. Denton's position being summed up in his question "Why not stand for it?" (the biblical narrative). T. P. Haley said archæology cannot be bowed out of court and should be welcomed. In his reply Dr. Calhoun contended that most of the criticism, which he felt was just, was due to the largeness of the subject and the limits of his time. He had not been able to "spread" himself.

Our Congregationalism.

J. H. Garrison presided over the session which considered the topic of "Our Congregationalism, Its Perils and Its Safeguards," an old problem which the chairman characterized as in essence the reconciliation of individual liberty with organized unity. The paper was by W. A. Parker, of Emporia, Kan., and was a lengthy and able presentation of an important subject. We shall later give the author's thoughts to our readers in a fuller form than it is possible to do in this outline report. The essayist outlined the two main positions concerning our congregationalism and what it involves and drew a distinction between its essential features as a principle and the provincial and temporary terms of its expression. It remains for us, he said, to further apply the administrative principle to the needs of an educational system that shall provide the amplest missionary and ministerial training, to supplement the present local conditions in our weaker churches with some form of competent supervision, to relate our ministers to the churches in a voluntary but somewhat more rigid and regular manner and to institute a bureau of publication for the regulation and fostering of religious journalism. The remedies suggested for conditions discovered look, concluded the essayist, to the two needs of the Disciples of Christ as a free people: The heightening of the function of prophetic vision, and the initiation of such forms for organic activity as, embracing the whole movement, shall result in awakening a unified consciousness.

Prof. Silas Jones, of Eureka college, was the reviewer and agreed with the essayist in his main conclusions. He passed on to an inquiry concerning the extent to which the principles of congregationalism have been adopted by us and to ask what are the tendencies, if there are any, towards anarchy on the one hand and towards ecclesiastical tyranny on the other. This essay, too, we hope to present in fuller outline than we have space for now.

The general discussion was opened by T. P. Haley, who thought our congregationalism was distinct from all others. The disciples in Jerusalem were simply a body of believers with apostolic oversight. They were incapable of self-government as we understand it. So we shall not find the counterpart in our day. He would not argue that we should have apostolic oversight. He believed that all congregationalism that did not reside in the people would be found to be detrimental, and he said that we have already recognized the right of delegated authority. J. B. Briney had a word on the question of newspapers and H. A. Denton did not favor boards or authorities. G. A. Hoffmann gave it as his experience that service is more productive of good than authority. Dr. Lockhart, speaking for Iowa, said we have the machinery, but not the material—money and men—with which to work. T. A. Abbott noted that we had few dying churches in the cities, and commended the co-operation between the Kansas City congregations, something like which might be operated with great profit in every county. There was, he said, such a thing as selfishness in congregationalism as well as in individuals. The vice-president of the Iowa missionary board said there were only three churches with closed doors in that state, where each district has a secretary and these are brought once a month to Des Moines for conference. He emphasized the need of state co-operation to head off unworthy men. J. A. Lord questioned the main position of the paper as to whether our congregationalism or New Testament congregationalism has a right to delegate certain things. Paul says an elder must be so and so. But granting the right the speaker claimed it is inexpedient for the congregation to delegate. In his reply the writer of the essay said that Brother Lord failed to differentiate between usurped authority and delegated authority.

It was a fine audience that greeted the guest of the Congress, Dr. Henry Churchill King, President of Oberlin college, when he gave his address upon "The Central Significance of Jesus." T. P. Haley presided. Special music was rendered by the Christian church choir, under the direction of Prof. Cox, of Christian college, and the college girls occupied the gallery of the church.

The program provided for a discussion led by Dean Lhamon, but Brother Lhamon was the only speaker, it being felt that any discussion of such a deeply spiritual address was out of place. Instead of a discussion Brother Lhamon reviewed the address, contributing some thoughts of his own supplementary.

Religious Journalism.

Place was found at the Wednesday afternoon's session for the paper programmed for the last session, thus giving the delegates a half day's freedom. E. T. Edmonds, who had been assigned to the office of reviewer, was not present and nothing from him was offered, but the discussion was the liveliest during the congress. The theme was "Our Religious Journalism—its Rights and its Possibilities," and L. G. Batman was the essayist. Some of his remarks were resented by a few of his hearers, but as the newspaper men present did not seem to be distressed by his contentions or his phraseology it might have been better if some of those taking part in the discussion had dwelt on the constructive elements in the paper rather than on its criticisms. The newspaper men wer there with open minds to learn, if possible, just how the brotherhood at large felt about our religious papers. No persons are more conscious of the shortcomings of these than those who are chiefly responsible for their production. There were many admirable points in Brother Batman's essay. It held up a high ideal of Journalism and if sometimes its criticism was severe it was candid and doubtless expressed the sentiment of a large number of people. Possibly a better understanding of the conditions under which religious journals are produced might have led the essayist to modify some of his remarks. For instance, the subject of the kind and place of advertisements is one that applies to all religious papers, though some may give offense in this respect more than others. And if editors become heresy hunters, as the essayist charged some do, they are doubtless prepared to accept the verdict that may come to them for such conduct, while it is even possible that they do not see things as the other man does. If they do not, perhaps the Congress is the best place for us to "see ourselves as others see us." As we hope to give publication to the essay at greater length than we have here space for, we pass on to the discussion.

This was led by W. T. Moore, who could speak both for the "profession" and the pastor. His speech leaned more to the newspaper man's side. "We are on the subject now that everybody knows all about," he began, and after some humor he pointed out the lack of trained journalists in our brotherhood and emphasized the fact that while in most of the conventions and gatherings of the church he had attended prayers were offered up for the ministry, the churches and the missionaries, he had never heard a prayer offered on behalf of an editor of a religious newspaper. He criticised the attitude of many for their lack of support of the church paper.

One speaker reviewed what he called the personalities of the paper, while another characterized it as in "bad taste." Dr. Calhoun "never thought of the paper as being bitter but that the writer was honest and desired to express a candid opinion." W. A. Parker thought the writer did not distinguish between the legal and moral right of an editor to do and say what he pleases. J. B. Briney of the Christian Companion declared he was glad they had had the paper. F. G. Tyrrell, speaking for the Christian Century, took the same view. J. H. Garrison confessed that he felt a profounder humiliation to-day (over his unfitness) than when he began his work. A lack of responsiveness was what he felt most and urged that readers should keep close in touch with the editors and let them know what they were thinking and feeling. J. A. Lord of the Christian Standard said he had enjoyed everything that had been said. No papers, he said, are so representative as ours. They are papers of conviction and while they make mistakes these must be attributed chiefly to our strenuosity. As to the criticism of gushing language, self-laudation and eulogy of pastors and evangelists, he believed this was due, though perhaps not in very good taste, to the nature of our brotherhood, being a kind of "family affair." Brother Batman, in reply, disclaimed any intention to wound. He read all the papers and had endeavored to express an honest opinion that many of his brethren felt. As the paper was published for the outside he tried to deal with his subject chiefly from this view point.

Christian College welcomed the Congress on Wednesday evening. The session was held in the handsome new auditorium and all the young ladies and the faculty were present. J. H. Hardin presided. The theme of the evening was which had been assigned for treatment to Geo. A. Bellamy, of Cleveland, O. We give but an outline of the paper, hoping to find opportunity to present it more fully in a subsequent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The writer's thought was: There is a struggle going on in religious thought between a good theology and a better theology. The best is yet to come. This new theology has as its object a revelation of the life of God as it is being worked out in the soul of man and in society. It is based upon certainty, tested and proved by man's experience in life. It instinctively satisfies men, and although not yet clearly defined in laws and theories, has been tested and shows positive results which are evidenced in the deepened sense of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; in extending and intensifying the sense of sin and giving an enlarged appreciation of the functions of wholesome amusements; in developing the positive, the aggressive, the constructive Christian whose new service in life results in an enlargement and enrichment of character. The consummation of it all is that there can be no separation of life into parts, some to be saved and others to be shunned, and that all which builds character and makes men better is distinctly Christian, is religious, is the life of God.

The reviewer was Harold Bell Wright, of Kansas City, Mo., who agreed with the essayist in the main, but criticised some ideas advanced which, he claimed, reveal to us certain tendencies that cannot hope to pass unquestioned. For instance he thought Mr. Bellamy's idea was that we learn God's will by doing his will before we know what his will is. Again he differed from the essayist if the latter believed that philanthropies were not the fruit of love and religion rather than the cause. These and other statements in the essay revealed a tendency of the social test that threatenes to undermine the foundations of the Christian cause and leave in place of the church a structure built of human wisdom and man's opinion. There was much to show, he said, that sociologists do not consider Christianity a necessary part of their work for humanity. As for the masses leaving the church he denied this; rather was the church leaving the masses. The true remedy for existing conditions is not a new social theology, but the old theology in its simplicity. In a fine conclusion, full of poetic feeling, Mr. Wright said that in the new adjustments one needs to use the greatest possible care lest the Star of Bethlehem prove to be, after all, not a Star, but a mess of pottage.

By the vote of the audience discussion was waived, every one seeming eager to get to the next item on the program—"Reception to the Congress—Christian College." But by the rule the writer of the original paper had right of reply. He contented himself with a very brief one, stating that his inspiration and that of most social workers was Jesus Christ. Faith he said, is needed in order to be a worker. The college students having filed over into the main building the members of the Congress and some invited guests from the town's residents followed and were entertained as described on another page.

Dr. Henry Churchill King, president of Oberlin college, was the invited guest of the Congress and made two very fine addresses, his themes being, "The Central Significance of Jesus" and "The Fundamental Laws of the Spiritual Life." We must defer a report of these, as also of the two sessions of the Congress, when the subject of consideration was "The New Theology in its bearing upon the problem of Christian missions." and the "Gospel Missions."

The committee elected for next year is as follows: J. H. Garrison, president; Burris Jenkins, vice-president; G. P. Coler, R. E. Hieronymus, and H. L. Willett. The place of meeting recommended was Cincinnati, though no invitation had come from there.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Good News From Darkest Africa.

An interesting work has been going on for some time up the Mobangi river by the evangelists supported by the native church. It started in the earnest spirit of evangelism shown by all of the converts here. They preached the gospel wherever they went, trading or on visits, and those who went to the Mobangi trading for fish, made it their business to preach as well, with the result that an urgent call was made and native evangelists sent to preach and teach these enquirers after light. When the men came home, after a month's stay, they brought with them those "who were anxious to perfect themselves in the way of life," but they had not learned the spirit of the gospel, although they evidently had a desire for it. They had slaves and some had female slaves which have the status of subordinate wives. These all returned with the evangelists to straighten their affairs, but one who was free from these conditions was baptized. Evangelists went and returned, and in October four more came the long four days' journey in search of the salvation that saves to the uttermost, and these had clean records. On Oct. 28 four were baptized. The day was cloudy and showers had been falling since morning, but at the regular Friday afternoon meeting the house was crowded, and after a sermon from Rom. 6, we had the joy of receiving the good confessions of these first fruits of the Mobangi work. It was a day of great rejoicing. The rain, in the meantime, poured down as it can only in the tropics, and so we had an after-meeting of prayer and song to which everybody stayed. Two of the evangelists preached, and then we called on the visiting native evangelists from Lolo land, who spoke in a closely allied dialect, and exhorted our church to continue as they had begun, as already the reputation of Bolengi had traveled far to them, and was an example to them all. During the period of gentle rain, we all proceeded to the mission beach, and there fulfilled the last commission of our Lord, by baptizing them. You could see the joy in their faces as they testified to the joy in their hearts and peace such as they had not experienced. The rain began again in torrents, and all dispersed to their homes. It now devolved upon us to train these as Christian workers. Considering the fact that Mr. Faris in five years had not produced any considerable literature in our own important language, the Lunkundu, it did seem ill-advised for us to begin a work in so dissimilar a language as Bobangi, when our own was not in sufficient quantity to use, and especially when fellow-missionaries of the English Baptists had the greater part of the entire Bible in print as well as a large series of school books, a dictionary, and a grammar, and other books including a large hymn book and Pilgrim's Progress; and they have two large well-manned stations at work among these same Bobangies, one of which was as near to these towns as we are to Bolengi. So as a piece of mission comity, we jointly agreed to hand over this promising and encouraging work to those who were the qualified missionaries, although the work had come to us unsought. On Oct. 31, the Rev. John Whitehead came to us by their mission steamer, "Goodwill," bringing a large iron boat to go and take over this work. Very pleasant and fraternal interchange of fellowship was enjoyed in this transference of these five to his hands. We had a formal meeting of the native church, and he and I both addressed them. They answered in both Lunkundu and in their own Bobangi. It did our church good, enlarging their sympathies so that they feel a more personal fellowship in their brethren of the B. M. S. than ever before.

A pleasant thing to note, in passing, is that while our papers at home are agitating Christian union with the Baptists, we are living it here, for the natives know no difference in name, and can see only that we partake of communion every Lord's day, while they but once a month.

THE BOAT IN WHICH THE JOURNEY TO MOBANGI WAS MADE.

Having prepared for a week's trip, on Thursday, Nov. 3, we got into Mr. Whitehead's boat and started down stream and across to the other side. The Congo river is seven miles wide at Bolengi, and it took us three hours to reach the other side, going in and out among the islands. We passed several villages until we reached Bonkombo, "a large group of villages under the friendly chief, Bokatula" (for whom, three years ago, I made a trip to rid his town of man-eating leopards, which had killed and eaten eight people). We have two evangelists stationed there, although these people speak another dialect from ours. We stayed two hours during the heat of the day there, and despite the urgent invitation of the old chief, himself, to remain over night and occupy his own house, we promised to stop over on our return, continued our journey towards the mouth of the Mobangi. With a shot gun we brought down two large monkeys as food for our paddlers, and a pheasant for ourselves.

The next morning early, we reached the delta of the Mobangi river and entered its nearest channel and began a long pull against its strong current. The Mobangi is the largest northern tributary of the Congo, and empties itself about forty miles below Bolengi, only on the opposite bank. We paddled all day long without passing a single village. The monkeys were in abundance, and we shot several fine large ones for food for the workmen. We had six Christian men paddling for us, besides our evangelist, Iso, and sixteen of Mr. Whitehead's men and boys, two of whom are Christians. They were a good-natured crew, and kept us moving along at a good speed up stream. The monotonous drumming of the boys who kept time for the stroke of the paddlers was frequently drowned by a burst of native canoeing song, praising some native chief, or heralding some historical event, or extolling the powers of the white man's gun which got them such sweet meat. We did not lack in Christian songs, and every night our crew made the desolate forests ring with their hearty singing of hymns, both in our Lunkundu and in the Bobangi of our friends, and then followed a short talk from the evangelist and a prayer from one or two of the Christians, and then the quiet of the restful night of well earned sleep. The third day, Saturday, found us still paddling up stream, but we began to pass the sites of deserted villages, people we were told who had gone over to the French side, to escape the state or Belgian taxation. At 3 P. M. we reached the largest of the near Bobangi towns. The people gathered in crowds on the banks to meet us, and greeted us very heartily. We landed our things, and as the chief was away, we were escorted to the house of one of the newly baptized Christians, which are a contrast to the tumbled down shacks of the wealthy and powerful chief. A rousing meeting was held that night, and fully a hundred stayed to the after meeting, despite the fact that this is the fishing season, and more than one-half of the population is away on the islands in fishing camps. I addressed them, and after a short talk formally introduced Mr. Whitehead, who spoke to them in their own language, while I had been talking to them in our Lunkundu. We taught them two verses of Mobangi hymns, and enjoyed a pleasant visit late that night, for we were on the Master's business. Sunday was an epoch-making day. In the early morning the Christians met for prayer, and at 10 A. M. the big native drum was beaten to call the people together. A fine crowd gathered, and after considerable persuasion, a powerful chief of the cannibal "Baloi" tribe was induced to come to service, the first preaching of the gospel message he had ever heard. After a song, Mr. Whitehead spoke, and if interest means anything, it was a most successful meeting. This was the first time these people had heard the gospel from the white man, and Mr. Whitehead has a command of the idiomatic native language such as but few get. He is the author of the larger part of the literature printed in the Bobangi dialect. In the afternoon, we had a meeting of Christians, and the five native Bobangies with the evangelists and our own Christian paddlers, enjoyed a most helpful hour of communion. At 3 P. M., we all got into the iron boat and paddled up to three neighboring villages, at each of which we preached. We returned just before sundown, and after a light lunch called them all together for a farewell meeting. Our Christian men also held four independent meetings in other towns, and two of them went over to the fishing camp.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Next morning we got up early, and started on a long pull for home. We had several little showers of rain on the up journey, but on Monday night it just poured. We found a suitable camping place about 5 P. M., but just as we were settled nicely for the night, our crew began to cry out with pain, for millions of the driver ants came down from the trees where they were raiding, and attacked them. It was no use to try to stay there, for no one can stand the bites of these venomous little ants, so, rain or no rain, we had to leave. This was the only available landing within six hours' paddling up stream, for we had already left the Mobangi river, and were tugging against the swift Congo current. The lightning played all about us, and the rain poured in torrents, but everything was better than the dreadful stings of the "drivers." The storm increased, and at last we were compelled to put into the bushes and try to draw the boat in out of the fury of the tornado that had struck us. If it had not been for the staunch iron boat and our heavenly Father's evident care over us that night, we would not be able to write this letter. Despite her stability, our good boat nearly swamped in the tremendous seas, created by the storms. At times it seemed as though it would turn over, and then it would right itself and be as still as though held by a mighty hand, then it would pitch and dive, until we simply said, "We are in God's keeping, for all that we can do is of no avail." About 4 A. M., the rain ceased and we paddled on, a weary, rain-drenched boat load. Not a thing we had on, or with us, save in one tin trunk, was dry, and we paddled along like a floating washing establishment, drying our clothes and bedding. That night we reached the town of our friendly Chief Bokatula, having killed six fat monkeys as a tonic for our crew after the dreadful night and hard day of paddling. We found Bokatula away from home, but he left a message for us to stay all night. We had a fine meeting there with our two evangelists who are stationed there. We had a heavy storm that night, but we were in a good harbor in a creek surrounded by trees, and our boat was quiet, so we had a good night's rest. It will be some years before our mission will be justified in purchasing a steamer, but we do need very urgently a strong iron boat for evangelistic trips. Every station of our fellow societies has either the direct service of a steamer or an iron boat, and some have both. The one we made this trip in cost 200 pounds, but a good boat costing $200 can be got of the Detroit Steel Boat and Yacht Building Company. They showed me one for $139 net and the freight to Matadi should not cost more than $50. It has a sail and two sets of oars, and, if I remember, it is just about what we want. (Shall we make an estimate for it next year?) I enclose a print of Rev. Whitehead's boat and crew as we stopped to rest them during the hot midday. We started to cross the river and shunting from one island to the next, we paddled up and on, but the sun set before we reached home, so we were well able to sleep in beds that night, secure from storm and mosquitoes which nightly serenade us and the persecutions of the dread tsetse fly of sleeping-sickness fame. We were well repaid for the effort made to see this new work started. I am sure we, as a mission, will lose nothing in this comity and fellowship with our English Baptist brethren. And as to its limiting our field of action, we were trespassing on their rightful field, though entirely unsought for by us. We did our duty, and have in a very pleasant way handed it over to them. This leaves us free to work our own more legitimate field, that of the Bosira river and its tributaries, which drain the great "V" shaped tract of land back of us, and where our own Lunkundu is the dominating language. We have already had our evangelists back from there a month, with most glowing reports of the interest of the people. And they have returned from another trip farther back than they went before. But we cannot undertake any new work, nor even carry on this at Bolengi without an increase of the present force. Of sickness there is plenty. No one should come to Congo for his health, as it is not a favorable sanitarium. Of hardships not a few, but of men to carry the gospel message to perishing heathen there should be no lack. Or let the native church in darkest Africa shame her mother churches in Christian America, for with a living membership of only 89 it supports eight of its own members in the field to-day as evangelists. But reinforcements must be sent out soon, as Mr. and Mrs. Eldred's time will be up before anyone else can get here to learn the language sufficiently to be of immediate help. We should have a man and his wife soon.

With our earnest prayers that help may be soon coming, I remain as ever,

Yours in his glad service for Darkest Africa,
DR. R. J. DYE.

Los Angeles.

Los Angeles has just passed through a great union evangelistic meeting under the direction of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, assisted by six evangelists each attended by a singing evangelist. Our city was divided into seven sections, in each of which an evangelist was located. All the churches in each vicinity united with the other churches in the same neighborhood. The preaching on the whole was good. Very little that was said could be justly criticised. They could be more justly criticised for what they failed to say. The spirit of fellowship and union among the preachers and churches was superb. Such meetings are harbingers of Christian union. The spirit of union must precede the fact of union. It may be that Christian union will be effected in the world in a way far different from what we have long supposed it would be accomplished. Almost 4,000 persons signed cards expressing their "desire to henceforth lead a Christian life." So far as I can learn not more than 20 per cent of that number will be added to the churches in the city.

The spirit of evangelism has been caught up by our own churches. The First and Magnolia avenue churches united in a two weeks' campaign under the preaching of Sumner T. Martin as evangelist and J. Walter Wilson as singer, with 81 added. These brethren constitute an effective pair of workers. They are now campaigning at Redlands, where W. G. Conley ministers. The Long Beach church has received about 80 members as a result of recent revival services both union and in special meetings of her own. San Diego has closed a short meeting conducted by the pastor with more than 50 accessions. And so the evangelistic spirit moves on.

Los Angeles will soon be in the greatest municipal contest in her history. Within a few weeks she will take a vote upon the saloon question. For some years the Angel City has been cursed with 200 saloons. By recent changes in our charter a special election on this subject can be held under certain conditions. These conditions are being complied with and the battle will soon be on. It is expected to be one of the great campaigns in temperance history. It is said that saloons have never been voted out of a city of 200,000, the present size of Los Angeles. The liquor element is strongly intrenched. The temperance people are under the leadership of Dr. Chapman, the venerable leader of the state Anti-Saloon League. Both sides are well organized and it is a battle to the death. It is believed by lovers of righteousness that we shall gain the victory. May God help us to that glorious end. Nearly all of southern California has been freed from the dominance of the liquor traffic as a result of the work of the Anti-Saloon League and consequently it is firmly believed that we shall get the victory in this mighty battle.

The general convention of our churches will meet in San Francisco August 17-24, 1905. There are many reasons why there should be large delegations from the east to attend this gathering. The brethren will find San Francisco a great convention city. She understands the art of caring for great throngs of people. She will royally minister to the necessities of all visiting delegates. All eastern visitors will receive a royal welcome from the brethren on this coast. We have long striven for the privilege of entertaining the convention. We are ready now to carry out our promises and receive the eastern people with open arms. No more delightful place can be found to spend a vacation than on this western slope. The summers here near the ocean are perfectly delightful. If one suffers it is from cold rather than heat unless one is far removed from ocean breezes. A new vision of national greatness and western possibilities will open up to the eastern person who sees for the first time this great western country. Its possibilities, commercially, religiously and educationally, are enormous. No place in the world offers finer fields for missionary expenditures than California. No section of the world is more open to the great principles enunciated and advocated by the Disciples of Christ. Come, brothers, come, sisters. Miss no further opportunity of visiting this land of the setting sun. Look out through the Golden Gate to that mighty ocean that laves the shores of the mighty nations of the world to-day and the dominant nations of the next generation.

Louisiana Christian Colonies.

Immigration continues to pour into Louisiana in an ever increasing stream as the people of the northern and the middle states learn of the mild and healthful climate and the cheap productive lands. This influx of new settlers began in real earnest about ten years ago, and tens of thousands have established happy, prosperous homes beneath our genial skies. The building of the Isthmian canal will further augment the drift of immigration and capital into our state, and vast improvements are confidently expected within the next few years. A large number of these new settlers are Disciples of Christ, and this fact has been of great help in the evangelization of the state. Where we establish new churches, we always find a nucleus who have come from other states. However, there are many who locate in out-of-the-way places and at points where we cannot organize churches any time soon. These members greatly miss the church advantages they had at their old homes, some suffer a decline in interest, while others are finally absorbed by the denominations. To avoid such losses and in order to derive the largest advantage from these new recruits to our scattered forces, we are projecting a plan to establish colonies in the most favorable portions of the state. This will enable those coming to these communities to have good church privileges and will establish strong radiating centers of New Testament influence, which will greatly advance our cause. Aside from good churches and schools, there will be mutual financial advantages; so many locating in the same community will greatly enhance the price of property and all will share alike in this increase of values.

The beginning of this colonizing program is to be made at Jewella in Caddo parish, the northwestern parish of the state. This colony will be unique in many respects; colonies are usually established in unsettled sections remote from the railroads and far removed from improved surroundings, but not so with the Jewella Christian colony. Its center is a station on the M. K. & T. railroad only two miles out from Shreveport, a city of thirty thousand population, having nine railroads and a line of steamboats, also, eighteen miles of paved streets and ten miles of electric car line.

The Jewella community has in a radius of two miles about sixty families, and there is probably room for about one hundred more. The topography of the country is of a high rolling character, the soil is of a sandy nature with a clay subsoil. Much of it is in a high state of cultivation, most of those now residing there are engaged in truck farming, which is a thriving and profitable industry. Also the soil is admirably adapted to fruit and berries, being very fertile. The celebrated Elberta peach grows to perfection here. On account of the proximity of the city, a splendid market is afforded all the year round and two crops of garden products are raised. No better location can be found for poultry and dairy farms.

The price of the land ranges all the way from $10 to $150 per acre, depending on the distance from the city and the improvements. Options on five, ten, twenty and forty acre blocks, suitable for all purposes, will be secured. Not one cent of commission is to be made by any one, the homeseekers get the property at the lowest price it can be had from the owner.

Here is a fine opportunity for any of our brethren who wish a warm, healthful climate where an investment of from five hundred to three thousand dollars will enable them to make a good, independent living. We have erected a beautiful church in the center of the community, and have already a membership of forty or fifty and preaching each Lord's day. Also a good school, presided over by a young lady who is a devoted member of the church. The city high school is in easy reach.

Any one wishing further information may apply to the Shreveport progressive league, Shreveport, La., which institution is absolutely reliable and has no financial interest. Descriptive literature will be forwarded on application.

We advise all who think of locating here to visit Jewella and see for themselves. The Shreveport progressive league will secure reduced rates for all who will apply. We hope to make this and the other colonies to be established a great means of assisting in the evangelization of our state, as well as a blessing to those who are seeking a new home where every temporal and spiritual advantage is afforded. We will be glad to furnish further information to all who inquire.

The Platte district convention, held at Cameron, on March 14 and 15, was a season of blessing. The attendance, not so large as was hoped for, still passed expectations. The spirit of earnestness and deep devotion to the great cause which brought the women together was manifest. The addresses were of high order. Mr. Creason, of Lathrop, opened the convention by a splendid sermon on woman's place in the church and world. Every paper read by the women showed a complete knowledge of the subject handled. One feature was the presence of Miss A. E. Moore, superintendent of the young people's department of Kansas. We appreciate the kindness of our sister state in lending to us her busy officer. Her presence was an inspiration to all. All of the Missouri state officers were present, except our president, Mrs. Goode. Great credit is due to Miss Mary Hord and her secretary for the excellent arrangements of all plans to make the convention a success. The convention unanimously voted to become a living link district, by sending $600 in special funds to the field of Mexico, naming Mrs. A. G. Alderman as their special missionary. This is a step in the right direction, and next year we look for Platte to be a "double" link by supporting two missionaries. Is this too much to ask from the abundance which they enjoy? We are sure they will respond with joy, as they do to all good works. Miss Mary Hord was elected manager, and Mrs. T. B. Dougherty secretary for the year, Mrs. M. B. Culver, who has served so faithfully, asking to be released from the office of secretary.

The second district held its convention with the Kirksville church on March 15 and 16. A very happy time was experienced by both the visitors and the church. The pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Thompson, and indeed all the good people there, did all in their power to make our visit both pleasant and profitable. The manager, the indefatigable, faithful Jimmie L. Moore, had arranged a varied and instructive program, and presided in her own original style and kept things moving.

Brother Trickett made the opening address, in which he stood out as a champion of the C. W. B. M. Several excellent papers were read, which we should love to mention, did space permit. The children took a prominent part, the Junior society numbering 150; it is under the leadership of the pastor's wife, Mrs. Thompson. She has a splendid band of little soldiers. Miss Catherine Moore acted as secretary of the convention. The manager was re-elected for the coming year. The reports of the several auxiliaries were hopeful.

Farmington's secretary writes: "We are happy to say that we accept our apportionment for special, expect to pay it by June, and wish it applied to Mattie Burgess' salary. A visit from her several years ago awakened an interest in the C. W. B. M. work. We have 22 members, good meetings and 17 subscribers to Tidings." Junior was organized at Farmington, March 5.

We are rejoiced over the organization of the east Broadway, Sedalia, auxiliary. For many months this has lain heavily on the hearts of the state officers, and not this alone, but many others. The officers are: Mrs. H. B. Cole, Mrs. W. F. Hamann, Mrs. C. T. McVey, Mrs. G. C. McClure. The auxiliary sisters of the First church assisted in organizing. There are 30 charter members.

Our sister, Elizabeth Hanson, of Memphis, passed away on Feb. 9. She was one of the pioneers of Memphis, and a faithful member of the Christian church, and was found in her pew many times when the weather was too hot, too cold or too inclement for many members younger than she to attend. She was one of the motherly women whose absence is felt by the whole community.

Cameron. "Yes, we accept our apportionment of $60, for Mexico. We have no plans for raising it, but have the money about ready."

Paris. "Our auxiliary accepts its apportionment of $30 and will send by June 1. We leave it to the board as to where it goes."

Lamar. "We accept our apportionment of $8." Clearmont. "We accept our apportionment. We want one-half to go to Mexico, and the balance to the support of C. L. Beal, California."

Kansas City. "Accept our apportionment, will pay by June 1."

Wyatt Park, St. Joseph. "We accept our apportionment of $35 for Mexico. We expect to raise a large part of it by a lecture on the Philippines, by Mrs. Schell, a sister of our president, Mrs. M. M. Goode, who has just returned from the islands."

First, St. Joseph. "Accept our apportionment of $55. We send it for Mexico."

Golden City. "Accept our apportionment of $5, please send it to Mexico."

Marshall. "We will raise our apportionment of $55, to go to where most needed."

Dexter. "We want our special money, $21, to go for Miss Burgess."

Friends, we have many letters like the above, which we can not give you, for lack of space. Will not all the auxiliaries send word of their acceptance of the "special" that has been apportioned them? There is no "law" against raising the amount higher than apportioned if you can.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Denver, Colorado.

The Central church, Denver, W. B. Craig pastor, has received more than 60 persons into its fellowship since the beginning of 1903.

The Highlands Christian church, J. E. Pickett pastor, has received about the same number during the same time.

Crayton S. Brooks, F. F. Walters and S. M. Bernard have assisted the Central, the Highlands and the South Broadway churches in special meetings.

The East Side church, T. T. Thompson pastor, has had a dozen accessions since the beginning of the year.

Flournoy Payne, a grandson of John T. Johnson, the great Kentucky evangelist, serves the Berkeley Christian church, Denver, in the pastoral office. There have been 10 additions to this congregation since Jan. 1, 1905.

Brother Payne and Miss Turner, of Greeley, Col., were recently married. Mrs. Payne is a fine young woman. She is an earnest Christian, active and intelligent. To the Berkeley church she is as good as a hundred additions. The church has gained much by her coming to it.

The churches in Colorado are growing in the evangelistic spirit. All goes well with us.

B. B. Tyler.

Iowa Notes.

The Iowa Christian convention has employed W. S. Johnson as one of the state evangelists, thus making the evangelistic force consist of five men in addition to the corresponding secretary. At no time in our history have we had so large a force of evangelists regularly employed by our board. We are pushing hard for the 10,000 additions this our jubilee year. Our churches are doing well in the way of supporting the work, but we must have more money. It is the prayer of our hearts that we may secure the co-operation of every church in the work of the state this year. A good sister sent a check of $500 for the work this week and we received $500 cash from the Chas. Dodd estate two weeks ago. Let every one rally to the support of Iowa and make an onward rush from now to the convention.

W. S. Johnson is in a meeting at Bagley, and will finish the meeting of last winter that was closed by smallpox.——C. G. Stout is in a great meeting at Panora; 54 additions to date.——B. E. Youtz is in a meeting at Exira and will soon be ready for another siege.——J. A. McKenzie closed his meeting of 24 additions at Missouri Valley and is now at Massena.——W. H. Zenor is in a meeting at Herrold schoolhouse with good prospects for a successful meeting.——M. C. Wilson, of Perry, has accepted a three months' engagement in Minnesota.——B. F. Baker, who recently came to us from the Presbyterian church, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Fort Madison.

Pastor W. C. Cole is in another splendid meeting at Stanhope. The meeting at one week old had four accessions. I preached for Brother Cole last Lord's day morning and in the Methodist Protestant church at Jewell Junction in the evening. I hope to have something good to report from my trip to Jewell later.

Statistic cards will be mailed to all of the churches next week. If you know of a church that needs a meeting, one that needs setting in order, one whose doors are closed or in need of help to increase their usefulness, let me know without fail. We never were so well equipped with efficient men for the evangelistic work as now and we are yours to serve.

A Fanny Crosby Sunday.

Sunday, March 26, was observed in many Christian churches as "Fanny Crosby day." It was on March 24, 1820, in Southeast, Putnam county, N. Y., that the blind writer of sacred songs was born, and it has been thought fitting that those who love her hymns should pay her a tribute of affection on the Sunday nearest to her eighty-fifth birthday. Her home is in Bridgeport, Conn., and she is passing the closing years of a life that has been full of useful activity in the enjoyment of well earned honors.

At the age of six months little Frances Jane Crosby had as good eyesight as the average baby. The application of hot poultices to the eyes during an illness destroyed the optic nerves, and the little one was rendered sightless. At nineteen she was sent to the Institution for the Blind in New York city and there became so proficient in knowledge of the alphabet for the blind that she was made an instructor in the institution. For twelve years she taught English grammar and rhetoric, Greek, Roman and American history.

It was here she met a blind music teacher, Alexander Van Alstyne, whom she married. It was during this period of her career that she wrote poetry and secular songs, one of the most popular of the latter being "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower." Several volumes of her poetry were published. One of her poems was written in welcome to Henry Clay on the occasion of a visit of the great orator to New York.

She was forty-five years old when she wrote her first hymn. Not till that time did she discover her real vocation. Some of the most beautiful and popular of these compositions seemed to come to her as if by inspiration. One of her best known hymns, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," was composed in about twenty minutes while W. H. Doane, who had written music for many of her hymns, was waiting to take a train. He sat down to the piano and played the music for which he wished her to compose some words. The song writer was deeply affected by the pathos and sweetness of the air and before the train arrived had thought out the lines which have since been sung by millions of people and have drawn tears from thousands of eyes.

Her rapidity of thought in composition is partly the result of training. She relates that once while a pupil at the Institution for the Blind she was required to produce some lines of blank verse and had put it off out of sheer laziness. Finally her teacher said to her, "Now, Fanny, it is time for business. No blank verse, no dinner." She had the poem ready before the dinner bell rang. That sort of practice enabled her to concentrate her mind on a theme and partly accounts for the swiftness of her thought when she composed the immortal lines for Mr. Doane.

The blind poet has a strong feeling for rhythm and a keen enjoyment of music and in her time has been herself a skilled performer on the guitar and piano. In the case of some of her songs and hymns she composed both words and music. She used to have a sweet soprano voice, and her sense of harmony was so strong that anything like a discord jarred on her ear and would even awaken her from sleep. A gentleman who knew this once used it to his advantage. On calling at the hotel where she was staying he was told by attendants that she was sleeping. They were reluctant to disturb her, whereupon the caller, whose business was pressing, strolled down the corridor where her room was located and began singing a hymn out of tune. The first false note awakened her.

Fanny Crosby's judgments of those about her are accurate. She comes to her conclusions through the sound of the voice. "That is a kind man; I like his voice," or "I don't want to know that person," she will say. She was seated next to a stranger in a hotel at dinner. Afterwards a friend who knew his character asked her what she thought of him. "He is a deep, vile, bad man," she quickly replied. It was true. Conversing with a man who had spoken scornfully of a good impulse, she exclaimed, "Get me a hammer and let me raise a bump of reverence on this man's head!"

In some of the churches the hymns which she wrote will be sung on "Fanny Crosby day," and it is proposed to make her the recipient of a gift, thus honoring the poet while she is alive instead of waiting until she is dead.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

COLORADO.

Craig, March 16.—Our three weeks' meeting with W. H. Cline, evangelist, closed Sunday night owing to bad roads. There were eight confessions and the membership is generally awakened to larger usefulness. We are pleased to state that Brother Cline remains with us as pastor.—Mrs. W. H. Tucker.

Denver, March 20.—Ninety persons have confessed Christ in the South Broadway church within the last five months, almost all in the regular Lord's day morning meetings. One was baptized yesterday.—B. B. Tyler.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, March 20.—Present at ministers' meeting to-day: Brothers W. T. Laprade, Walter F. Smith, J. Murray Taylor, W. R. D. Winters, W. S. Priest (of Columbus, O.), E. B. Bagby, and the writer. The Ninth street revival in charge of E. B. Bagby, pastor, W. S. Priest, evangelist, and W. R. D. Winters, song leader, is eight days old with 20 additions: seven by letter, 13 by confession. They had a big overflow meeting Sunday evening. Whitney avenue church is preparing to erect a large hall. Thirty-fourth street church begins a revival Easter with home forces. Some of us have begun to make plans to attend the San Francisco convention. —Claude C. Jones, Sec.

Washington, March 13.—My brother, J. J. Taylor, of Connersville, Ind., has just closed one month's meeting for the H street Christian church of Washington, resulting in 34 accessions to the church. Of these, 20 were by confession and baptism, eight from other communions and six by letter. Despite the miserable weather all the time, we had the house full at each service, often having to turn many away for lack of room. The evangelist did not announce any sensational subjects nor did he indulge in any clap-trap methods to get men and women to accept Christ. Our cause at H street is on a firmer basis than ever before. The church passed resolutions commending the evangelist and his work.—J. Murray Taylor.

INDIANA.

New Albany.—Three at regular services, two by baptism, one by statement.—Wm. A. Ward, Park church.

Indianapolis, March 24.—We have recently closed an excellent meeting with 22 accessions—four by letter and 18 by confession at Third church in this city. Bro. L. E. Brown, of Lebanon, did the preaching.—C. B. Newnan.

Bedford, March 20.—Enthusiasm unabated. Eleven additions yesterday—nine of them by confession. Recard should read: 50 additions at regular Lord's day services since Jan. 1, 39 baptisms. Brooks Brothers begin March 26. —E. Richard Edwards.

Terre Haute, March 20.—Last night we closed a good meeting at the College avenue church, which resulted in 25 additions, 15 by baptism, eight by statement from other Christian churches, one from M. E.'s and one from Baptist church. A Christian Endeavor society was organized with 24 members. Dr. Rhodes, of this city, had charge of the music.—Leonard V. Barbre, pastor.

Lynn, March 23.—Eleven additions in meeting here conducted by Pastor Willis M. Cunningham and song evangelists Mr. and Mrs. Guy B. Williamson. One confession at the women's meeting conducted by Mrs. Williamson. We go to Spartansburg, next.—Guy B. Williamson, Waverly, Ill.

Indianapolis.—I closed a very successful meeting at Jasonville recently. There were 126 additions. I have since begun a meeting with my own congregation in Indianapolis. So far there have been 20 additions. Most of them are by primary obedience. Others are as follows: one Baptist, one M. E. one Presbyterian, one Episcopalian, one Catholic. The interest is intense.—C. R. L. Vawter.

Peru.—Again it has been demonstrated that the professional evangelist may not be a necessary factor in holding a great meeting, nor is it necessary to plan months ahead for a big ingathering. Our church has just closed a very successful meeting. It was a short meeting with but one end in view, viz., to bring the people to Christ. The preaching was done by J. L. Thompson, minister of the congregation. The singing for two weeks was led by Prof. P. M. Kendall assisted by his wife. Total number added 66, of which 61 were adults. Number baptized, 48. The attendance was fine.—W. H. Petty, elder First Christian church.

Francisville, March 22.—We just closed a three weeks' meeting at Medaryville with 30 additions—22 confessions and baptisms. Among those baptized were two men past fifty years. Sister Lannem had for years been fighting the battles alone. But at last she saw her cup filled with joy and stood by while her entire family was baptized, husband, four sons and four daughters, all grown. Brother Lannem and Brother Faulkner are both well-to-do farmers and will strengthen the church. We began a meeting here at Francisville last night with full house. We hope for a good meeting; the outlook is fine. This will be four meetings for us since the middle of January with a goodly number added and church of Christ greatly strengthened.—The Clarke family, evangelists, Amos R. Clarke.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Pryor Creek, March 20.—I closed a week's meeting here last night. The brethren are encouraged and are moving along well. This is one of our best territorial churches in one of the best towns. Brother Hawkins will hold a meeting here in May, after which a pastor will be chosen.—B. McDonald, evangelist.

JAPAN.

Sendai District.—Recent baptisms as follows: In December, 12, in Fukushima Machi; in January, five, in Sendai city; three in Haranomachi city, and two in Sanuma city.

ILLINOIS.

Franklin, March 22.—We are having a good meeting. Twenty additions to date, 19 being grown people. Evangelist C. A. Burton is preaching. I go from here to Tazewell, Virginia, to sing. Open for engagements after that.—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist.

Sandoval, March 27.—The protracted meeting conducted by the pastor, J. E. de Gafferelley and J. L. Brandt, pastor of the First Christian church, St. Louis, is growing in interest in spite of all opposing influences, great crowds are coming to hear and nine 30 have been added to date.

Smithboro, March 23.—Through the courtesy of the Christian church, Greenville, I was granted leave of absence by my own request to hold three meetings; places and results are as follows: Two weeks' meeting in November and December at Pittsburg; 21 added: 16 by faith and obedience, four from the Baptists, one from the M. E.'s. Twenty-five days' meeting in January and February at Tamalco; 32 added: 28 by faith and obedience, two who had been baptized but never added to any church; one by statement, one from the Methodists. Eighteen days at Keyesport, 25 added.—J. E. Story.

Milford, March 25.—Will close here about March 28. The interest in this meeting has been unusual for the place; 22 added here to date. Audiences largest in years, many being turned away for want of room. Percy Baker is the minister and stands high in the place as a Christian gentleman and a strong preacher. Begin in Grand Rapids, Wis., Sunday, April 2, under the Wisconsin state board, as we have only a few families living in that town of some 7,000 inhabitants. We hope to be able to organize a church before leaving the field.—C. H. De Voe and H. K. Shields, evangelists.

Litchfield, March 24.—Twenty-one additions to this congregation in the last month; 18 in a short meeting in which Bro. J. Windbigler, of Girard, was our evangelist for 10 days. Of the 21, seven were by obedience, six from the Baptists and eight by letter and statement. —M. S. Johnson.

Scott, March 21.—Closed a meeting March 5 with L. H. Barnum at Caldwell, with 19 additions. One more was added the evening following by Brother Barnum, who held services a few evenings. Found a union meeting in progress at Dighton, our next point, but as it was announced to close Sunday, March 12, we waited three days, beginning our services that day. We continued four days, and as there were no indications of the other meeting closing, we closed with three additions and came here to hold a meeting until the other was over. They closed the next evening after we came here. Began here March 17; interest and attendance good. Have a chorus of 30 voices.—Wrentmore and Bentley.

Jewell City, March 25.—Evangelist Clara

H. Hazelrigg closed a meeting at this place on March 21, which resulted in 56 additions, 37 by confession and baptism, 14 by letter and statement, one by reinstatement, and four by confession who have not yet been baptized. A desire was manifested on the part of others to lead a better life. The attendance was good, and the general atmosphere surrounding the whole church shows great improvement as a result of the meeting.—J. B. REED, clerk.

Lyons, March 25.—In the meeting at Lyons conducted by Hamilton, evangelist, and Wilkinson, singer, and Geo. E. Lyons, pastor, there were 226 additions. North Yakima, March 20.—Six additions yesterday, four by confessson and two from Congregationalists.—MORTON L. ROSE.

Vancouver, March 20.—Closed my work at The Dalles, Ore., March 10, and have just entered upon my new pastorate here. The last five weeks of my pastorate at The Dalles witnessed the greatest revival in the history of that church; 66 were added to the church, most of these coming in by baptism. Nearly half of the number were heads of families. The preaching of Bro. T. S. Handsaker, pervaded by a kindly spirit throughout, won many to Christ. Brother Handsaker was assisted by his consecrated wife. They make a strong evangelistic team, and we anticipate a great future for them in their new field.—F. ELMO ROBINSON.

THE RAISING OF LAZARUS.

John 11:32-45.

Memory Verses, 33-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus said unto her, I am the Resurrection and the Life.

The so-called Perean ministry of Jesus—which includes the months between his final departure from Galilee and his final arrival at Jerusalem in the triumphal entry—is divided into three parts by two visits to Jerusalem or its vicinity. The first of these visits, which closed the first part, was on the occasion of the Feast of Dedication, about which time occurred the events with which the last two lessons are concerned. Following this he retired beyond Jordan to Perea proper and while there delivered the discourses and parables which are recorded in Luke, chapters 11-17. It was while he was in this place of retirement, not fleeing from danger in any cowardly fashion, but avoiding the perils which were greatest in Jerusalem where his enemies were most numerous, that a message was brought to him that his friend Lazarus was sick. The mere statement of the fact was meant as a call for help, and after two days Jesus started for Bethany, the home of Lazarus, near Jerusalem. This return marks the close of the second period of the Perean ministry.

In this incident of the raising of Lazarus is revealed, as perhaps nowhere else, the combination of human and divine elements which made up the nature and personality of our Lord. He was human enough to sympathize, to sorrow, to weep, and we may be sure that the tears which he shed betokened real grief, and did not represent a merely amiable effort to appear sympathetic with the bereaved ones. It was real sorrow, just as his temptation was a real temptation, and as his need of strength and spiritual refreshment was a real need.

But he had also the divine power of controlling circumstances, of bringing things to pass, of triumphing over obstacles and troubles, and even over death. It was this which made his sympathy effective; it was this which made his tears a symbol of power and not of weakness.

Every man who achieves the highest in character and power must have a full measure of these two qualities—the power to feel in a real and vital way the needs, the sorrows, and the joys of men, and the strength and insight to use the circumstances of life and not to be crushed and enslaved by them. To Lazarus came a renewal of life through the voice and touch of our Lord. To every man who hears his voice and feels his touch there may come that renewal of life which comes from the larger and deeper view of life, and the brighter and truer view of death. "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth on me though he die, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die."

How a Woman Made Money.

I have been making money so easy that I thought it my duty to let your readers know so they could do it too. Every woman wants money of her own. I sent to the "Utilily Company," Dept. 20, Gloversville, New York, and obtained one of their "Youtility Mittens" free. It is the loveliest thing to sell you ever saw. I cleared $15 in three days last week and am sure I can make $600 this year. You do not canvass, as people send for the "Mitten." The "Youtility Mitten" every lady wants. It is not cheap, but woven of material that looks like silk, and is so nice for everything in the house. They will send a sample of the "Youtility Mitten" and full directions free, on receipt of eight 2c stamps to pay postage. This is a good chance for any man or woman.

JESUS THE LIVING BREAD.

Jesus said unto them, "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall not hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." —Jno. 6:35. Read also vs. 22, et; 48-58.

The remarkable discourse contained in this chapter of John grew out of the miracle of the loaves and fishes, recorded in the same chapter. When Jesus perceived that many followed him for the loaves and fishes rather than from any personal interest in him or his teaching he preached them a discourse on the true bread of life, which marked one of the crises in his earthly ministry. Many, unable to receive it, turned away from him and followed him no more.

The Hunger of the Heart. There is a hunger of the inner nature as well as of the outer; of the spiritual as well as of the physical part of our being. All are concerned about the hunger of the body; but how few, relatively, are concerned about the hunger of the heart—the craving of our spiritual nature for truth and love and life! But the needs of the spirit are as universal as are those of the body, and no life can find real and permanent satisfaction that does not find it in "the bread of life which cometh down from heaven." In view of the general indifference to the heart's cry for spiritual food how timely is that admonition of Jesus: "Work not for the food which perisheth, but for the food which abideth unto eternal life, which the Son of man shall give unto you; for him the Father, even God, hath sent" (John 6:27).

Not the True Bread. The Jews tried to justify their demand for the repetition of such miracles by referring to the manna which was given to their fathers in the wilderness. "Moses," they said, "gave our fathers manna in the wilderness; what sign will you give?" The reply of Jesus to this was twofold; in the first place, "It was not Moses that gave you the bread out of heaven"; in the second place, "My Father giveth you true bread out of heaven." He reminded them that their fathers who ate the manna had all died in the wilderness. They needed, therefore, a different kind of bread from that if they would live forever. The same Father which ministered to their bodily hunger was now ministering to their spiritual hunger in sending his Son into the world to be the true bread of life. Jesus had told Satan, in his first temptation, that man was not to live by bread alone, but by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt 4:4).

How to Obtain the True Bread. This is answered by Jesus as follows: "He that cometh to me shall not hunger and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." To come to Christ is to believe on him; and to believe on Christ, in the New Testament sense, is to receive him, and obey him. This is the only way in which we can come to Christ now. This way is open to all who have hunger of heart and thirst of soul. He that thus cometh to Christ shall not hunger or thirst. In other words, the deepest longings and highest aspirations of the spiritual nature will find complete satisfaction in Christ. This is the testimony of millions who have come to Christ in the way indicated above, and have found that peace and satisfaction which the world can neither give nor take away.

The Desire for Life. Who of us does not desire to live forever? It would not satisfy us if we had the promise to live a million years, for the heart would look forward to the end of that period and shudder at the thought of annihilation. Jesus promises something better than that: "If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever" (v. 51). To partake of Christ's life, to enter into fellowship with him and become a "partaker of the divine nature" (2 Pet. 1:4), is to possess a life over which death has no power. It is one with the life of God, and will endure while God himself shall live. Nothing in all the world is to be compared for a moment in importance with sharing the life of Christ by believing on him and surrendering ourselves to him.

Prayer. O God, our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast provided not for our bodies alone, but for our spirits as well. Thou who didst make us, and who knowest all the deepest desires and needs of our natures, hast provided for them in the gift of Thy Son in whom we are complete, because in Him all our spiritual needs are satisfied. May all who feel a hunger in their hearts which the world cannot satisfy, come to Christ, and find in Him the soul's true satisfaction. In Christ's name. Amen.

A GOOD DEAL OF NONSENSE

About "Blood Purifiers" and "Tonics."

Every drop of blood, every bone, nerve and tissue in the body can be renewed in but one way, and that is, from wholesome food properly digested. There is no other way and the idea that a medicine in itself can purify the blood or supply new tissues and strong nerves is ridiculous and on a par with the fol-de-rol that dyspepsia or indigestion is a germ disease, or that other fallacy, that a weak stomach which refuses to digest food can be made to do so by irritating and inflaming the bowels by pills and cathartics.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive principles which weak stomachs lack, and, unless the deficiency of pepsin and diastase is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure stomach trouble by the use of "tonics," "pills" and "cathartics" which have absolutely no digestive power, and their only effect is to give a temporary stimulation.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and similar foods, and experiments have shown that they will do this in a glass bottle at proper temperature, but of course are much more effective in the stomach.

There is probably no remedy so universally used as Stuart's Tablets, because it is not only the sick and ailing, but well people who use them at every meal to insure perfect digestion and assimilation of food.

People who enjoy fair health take Stuart's Tablets as regularly as they take their meals, because they want to keep well, prevention is better than cure, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do both; they prevent indigestion and they remove it where it exists. The regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit and efficiency better than any other argument.

WHAT DOES CHRIST'S LIFE TEACH US ABOUT THE FATHER?—John 14:6-24.

For the Leader.

Who has not at some time thought of how he would like to see God? The children are not the only ones who want to know of God, to see him. We are all children. Some are a little older than others, but we are all true to this universal tendency. The scriptures tell us that no man has seen God at any time. But it is said that Jesus has declared him to the world. What does this mean? It means that we must take Jesus as the satisfaction of that desire to see God. He is a manifestation of God. He reveals him. It was to show forth to the world the Father that Jesus came into the world. And we must remember that the Father must have had this general desire to see him in mind, and he was meeting this longing in sending Jesus. All the works of God fit together. One makes necessary another. One thing when understood in its relations becomes a prophecy of another. There is no better example of this than in the longing in the human heart to see God and in his answer to this longing in the advent of the Man of Sorrows.

For the Members.

1. Jesus shows us the life of the Father in the life he lived. Is not that life full in all its manifold mercies, works, purity? Jesus says: "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." What life was more completely filled with work? So must be the life of the Father. His work of upholding and directing this world and all the worlds was not done long ago, and ever since one long rest spell for the Infinite. No, that is far from it, if we are to take the manifestation of the Father through Jesus as true.

2. In the work of God there is one great present. Just as Jesus defines his own existence as one vast present, so is the work of the Father an occupation reaching through a present that goes on forever. He is upholding the world to-day, as ever. He is keeping the stars in their place. He is in the sprouting of every sprig, and the swelling of every bud. He is watching over every wayward child as of old. He is a present Father. Not that nature is the father. We are not Pantheists. We do not deify nature, and so lay emphasis upon the creatures that the Creator is lost. But a God as transcendent as he is immanent. He is, from the example and teaching of Jesus, an ever present Father.

3. The love of the Father is shown forth by Jesus. What love has outshone the love of Jesus? He loved his own to the laying down of his life for them. Can we think of those nights of prayer, those days of tramping, those weeks of public teaching and disputing and explaining to a people slow of heart to understand and believe? Can we think of Gethsemane with its agonies, its blood drops, its prayer? Can we look upon the humiliating scenes of his arrest and trial, the mock apparel, the cry, "Away with him, he is not fit to live!" the journey of the sorrowful way? Can we view the scenes of the crucifixion and hear the prayer for his betrayers, and fail to see the examples of truest and divinest love? His message to us is that we love one another.

4. Jesus shows us how the Father cares for us. He said not a sparrow fell to the earth without the Father's knowledge. It is declared that he cares much more for his children than for many sparrows. Then Jesus took care of his followers. He trained them. He taught them. He gave all his time to get them into that frame of mind that would enable them to see the truth and to walk in the ways of peace and life. If Jesus is a revelation of the Father, if he is all the Father could show us while yet in the flesh, here in this particular of giving himself for his disciples he has taught us how his Father gives himself for us. Day by day this giving goes on. He never forgets us. Planning, working through a thousand means unknown to us, influencing us, following the sinner with his love, God takes care of his own. And he would that all were his own.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I the Father's constant care, and shall I not, therefore, seek to improve all my ways the coming days of my life?

WHY $200,000 FOR HOME MISSIONS?

BECAUSE—We should correct our neglect of this great work.

BECAUSE—It is the ripest field in the world.

BECAUSE—It is our base of supplies. The Missions receiving assistance from our Home Treasury sent $2,340.66 to our Foreign Society in 1904.

BECAUSE—Our own brethren—our own flesh and blood are asking help to establish churches—we should certainly hear and heed their cry.

BECAUSE—The Home Board did more work last year than any previous year in our history—165 churches organized and 16,861 additions by our Home Missionaries. This work is a success.

BECAUSE—It is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ—to win souls in America. We should be about the Lord's business.

Ask your minister about the Offering the first Lord's Day in May. Full supplies of envelopes; literature, papers, etc., sent on application to the Secretary.

The World of Missions.[*]

So extensive in its operations has mission work become that for some years past it has reached the stage where an encyclopedia became necessary. Such a growth is perhaps hardly realizable by the man whose interest is merely cursory, and who has not taken the trouble to even count the mission fields. Not only has the subject come to cover so wide a field that an encyclopedia was demanded, but so rapid has become the growth and so many new fields and new workers are being developed that a revision of the encyclopedia has become necessary. The first edition which Messrs. Funk and Wagnalls put out twelve years ago fairly well covered the field as it then was, but a new edition was required, and the publishers and editors met the demand to the best of their ability, though even now the book is not wholly up-to-date. Some of its statistics are those of the year 1901 and there has been great development in the foreign field during the past three years. But for the most part the present edition answers present needs, though probably a new edition will have to be produced within the course of two or three years to meet the development we expect in every part of the mission field. We appreciate the difficulties of both the editors and the publishers. More and more fields and wider activity in these fields demand more pages. A larger book means a larger price. To keep the volume within reasonable limits strict condensation is required, and while individuals might prefer elaboration at some points, it is only fair to say that the producers of the volume have been reasonably successful in giving an equable proportion of their space to the various interests with which their book deals. We need not attempt to review the book in detail. It is a descriptive, historical, biographical and statistical presentation of missionary work. The second edition is lacking maps which were in the first, but to bring these up to date would have been a work of considerable magnitude, as well as cost, and more careful descriptive details as to the position of different fields in the body of the work will, in most instances, allow one to find a mission field on any reputable atlas.

We very cordially commend this book to all interested in missions as one from which they can draw a great deal of information.

"Remission of Sins."

In the Christian-Evangelist of March 9 appears an article with the above heading, by W. O. Moore, which is exceedingly hurtful in its influence if its teachings are accepted. We of Texas have seen so much of the blight that this teaching carries, and have had such a struggle to overcome its influence in the minds of brethren, that we cannot sit quietly while it is being planted in the minds of the young. The article was written in opposition to a statement quoted that "difference of opinion as to whether remission of sins takes place before or after baptism should not be an obstacle to Christian union." Our brother expresses very great astonishment that utterance should be given to such a thought, and argues because certain supposed persons have no doubt whether or not they will receive certain rewards, therefore the above quoted statement is false. The whole question resolves itself into these two: 1. Have we a right to erect a bar to Christian union which will shut out those who have obeyed the gospel as revealed in the New Testament? 2. Can a person obey the gospel as thus revealed and at the same time fail to understand that pardon is received after baptism? If the first of these questions is answered affirmatively, then our whole plea for the union of God's people is a burlesque. If it is answered negatively, the second question becomes one of vital importance. If the last question be answered affirmatively Brother Moore's entire article is false in its teaching. Will he assume the responsibility of teaching that no one can obey a command of the Lord, such as Christian baptism, until he fully understands at what point God's promise will be fulfilled? Will he teach that if one thus fails to understand, God will withdraw his promised blessing? If these teachings are true, what a strange spectacle was presented in the early part of the last century, when the Campbells were laying the foundation for a great movement which should offer to unite the Christian world on the basis of a proper understanding of the exact time remission of sins is promised, and when they themselves did not understand it correctly!

Does the person who eats food, or who takes medicine, or who breathes air, or who complies with any of the conditions upon which God's blessings are given, fail to receive the promise if he chances to be led astray as to some matter connected with it that is as clear as a sunbeam to his neighbor? We should remember that there are two sides to the commands of the Lord—the human and the divine. "Repent and be baptized [the human side] for the remission of sins [the divine side]." If man repents and is baptized, God will comply with the other part, although the man may have, through erroneous teaching or no teaching, received a wrong idea as to the place where God has located the promise. I believe this, and surely Brother Moore does also. If this is true, upon what ground could any bar to Christian union be raised against those who are in the church of Christ the same as we? These are not to be classed with others who have substituted something for the ordinance which Jesus placed at the very entrance of his church. Remission of sins was never promised to those who may properly understand the order of the commands and promises of the gospel, but to those who obey? If this theory of Brother Moore's is to be received we must revolutionize our practice and amend the confession so as to read: "Do you believe with all your heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and do you fully understand that the remission of sins promised by the Lord does not come until after your baptism?" It is indeed well to teach the new convert all that is in the double question, but no man should dare to put it all into the confession. But if we must debar any one from Christian union without such an understanding we must erect the bar here; and if we do not erect it here we have no right to build it elsewhere.

There is a people in Texas who stand flat-footed upon Brother Moore's platform and they are consistent with their inconsistent teachings—I mean teachings which are inconsistent with God's word. They refuse all fellowship to those who did not understand at the time of their baptism that it was in order to the remission of sins. They rebaptize all Baptists and other immersed persons who seek membership in their churches. They proclaim that there is no baptism and no remission of sins except to those who understand that the latter follows the former. They will hail, with delight, Brother Moore as a new-found champion of their cause.

I write this that young men may not be led astray, and I regret that Brother Moore wrote his article. Chalmers McPherson.

Double-Tracking the Santa Fe.

It would be a colossal undertaking to double track the Santa Fe all the way from Chicago to California and the Gulf of Mexico.

To seriously suggest it now would provoke a smile from men who know the cost of such a project.

Yet it may happen some day, if business continues to increase as rapidly as in the last decade.

This plan of two tracks from the Great Lakes to Pacific Ocean does not necessarily imply that the tracks will be laid side by side. In many cases cut-offs will be used, thus saving in mileage as well as in train operation.

Using the term in its restricted sense, by the end of 1905 the Santa Fe will have more than 300 miles of double track in operation. Second tracks are now being built as follows: To finish the gap between Chicago and Joliet; between several points in Missouri, aggregating 40 miles; to complete the Emporia cut-off; east, west and south of Newton, in Kansas, and on both sides of Raton Mountain in Colorado and New Mexico.

Lard and Peanuts.

At the beginning of the past summer a certain well known literary woman in the west repaired to the shores of one of the lakes of Michigan, there to prepare her cottage for occupancy during the heated term. Before going she had arranged with her husband to cause a lot of household goods to be packed and forwarded by steamer.

It appears that for some reason the shipment was delayed, and that the lady was obliged to write to her husband inquiring with reference to the delay. In conclusion, she had appended to her letter a postscript, reading, "Please telegraph me when the goods shall have been shipped."

Pursuant to instructions, the husband personally supervised the packing of the various effects needed for the cottage in Michigan, even going down to the dock to see that they were duly conveyed on board the steamer. Moreover, as requested by his wife, he telegraphed what he had done. "Lares and penates on board," wired he; "will arrive to-morrow morning."

When his wife received the telegram she read:

"Lard and peanuts on board. Will arrive to-morrow morning." —Harper's Weekly.

THE STORY OF THE BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS HYMN: "SILENT NIGHT! HALLOWED NIGHT!"

By Charles Louis Loos.

This exquisite gem of sacred poetry is published in our hymn books as of unknown origin.

It is a German hymn, and owes its origin to a special occasion. This class of poetry, whether religious or secular, born of some peculiar inspiration, has in it often a real power over the human soul that gives it an enduring life. Generation after generation sings these songs, and cherishes them as precious treasures of the heart.

German Protestants, in the fatherland and all over the world, have sung for centuries Luther's song of faith,

> Ein veste Burg ist unser Gott,
> Ein gute Wehr und Waffen;
>
> (A strong safetower is our God,
> A good defense and weapon); and will sing it for ages to come. It is a hymn born of the inspiration in a great heart of a great occasion, when the brave Saxon had, in mortal strife, to face the ecclesiastical and secular power of Rome.

Every nation that has a real history, has songs of this sort, especially patriotic lyrics that, like "The Star Spangled Banner," the French "Marseillaise," owe their origin to occasions of extraordinary patriotic emotion. Every Christian land has religious songs born of some tide of great inspiration in a Christian soul, and that will be immortal.

This is true of some of the psalms of David and the other Hebrew bands; psalms that had a strong and enduring power over the hearts of ancient Israel, and will hold an immortal influence in the Jewish and Christian world while time endures. The fifty-first Psalm—the Miserere—has nothing like it in all the literature of the world as a cry of deepest mortal penitential agony. "The Song of the Bow," that broke forth from the heart of David at the tragic death of Saul and Jonathan, and which the children of Israel were taught to sing, to awaken and keep alive in them a lofty spirit of patriotism, was born of a special occasion of extraordinary tragic sorrow.

Such poetry as this is real, not artificial. These songs are true to the feelings that indited them, and to the aspirations and voices of our souls. This gives them their value with the hearts of men. For this reason they will never die. They are known, understood and sung by all, from the highest to the lowest. Cowper's hymn,

> God moves in a mysterious way,
> His wonders to perform, will never die while the English language lives. And so George Neumann's blessed song of hope and trust in God—

> Wer nur den lieben Gott laest walten,
> (He that puts all his trust in God), is known, cherished, and sung in every pious German home on the earth. Both of these men wrote their hymns of joyful trust in God, on being lifted up, as they believed, by the hand of the divine Providence from the darkness of despair into the bright noonday light of God's love and mercy.

I am sure that the touching story of the birth of this sweet Christmas hymn will be welcomed by many of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I give it in English from the original which I find in an American German religious journal.

The holy Christmas tide has a significance and meets with a hallowed response in Germany that is not found in any other Christmas land.

The Story.

It was the sacred Christmas eve of the year 1818. On the Bavarian Highlands the last daylight had disappeared, and left a red glow on the summits of the mountains; deep shadows had settled on the valleys.

High up on a narrow footpath, that wound forth from a rocky gorge, a wanderer with quiet steps was passing along. It was the assistant pastor of Oberdorf, near Arnsdorf, Joseph Mohr. This solitary walk on the silent mountain height was to-day especially delightful to him for in his soul he heard the sweet songs and melodies of Christmas joys and Christmas peace. Therefore he did not hasten his steps, but walked slowly downward toward the valley, while the night spread out its black wings more and more, and now covered the lofty white mountain peaks. On the dark heavens one star after another appeared, until the entire bright celestial host shone in all their glorious splendor.

A turn of the path brought our traveler to a rocky projection. Here he halted and sat down on a fallen tree. At his feet there stretched out before him a wide pasture. Deep down in the valley shimmered the lights of Arnsdorf, and farther off those of Oberdorf. Distant soft tones of church bells came to him through the quiet air. And now there arose from behind the dark pine forest the crescent of the moon, glowing bright like silver, and mirrored its form in the small dark lake beneath the overhanging mountain. It was a wondrous night.

Mohr sat long and looked with rapture over the wide region stretched out before him; but his thoughts were elsewhere; and what he saw in his spirit assumed form and life before his eyes.

Down yonder where the lights of Arnsdorf gleamed, lay to him Bethlehem. That hut by the side of the village, with its faint trembling flame that shone through the small window, became to him the stable where Mary and Joseph, their hearts glowing with thankfulness and joy, were watching by the infant Jesus.

Nearer him in the valley on the pasture grounds lay the shepherds with their flocks, their souls ardent with earnest desire for the promised Son of David, and their eyes fixed on the wondrous star that burned with such strange brilliancy in the heavens.

Mohr also looked with fervent longing upwards. He felt as if he saw the heavens opened and the choir of angels in celestial glory descending to announce to this poor earth a great joy which was to be to all people. He folded his hands, and poured out a silent prayer to God, the giver of all good, from whom the hope of Israel was to come. Then he left the quiet region and descended into the valley, as he was expected in the schoolhouse at Arnsdorf.

His friend, the organist Gruber, met him at the door. "Welcome!" he called out to him. "We are all here waiting for you. We are assembled for the Christmas festival. See what dear visitors we have."

Joyfully Mohr greeted the two brothers and the two sisters from Zillerthal, whose songs had so often filled him with delight. "How good in you," he said to them, "to have come here! Now we can make sweet music and sing to the honor of the Christ Child."

While the organist Gruber was busy in making preparations for the festival, Mohr withdrew into an adjoining room. Soon his friend came to give him the Christmas salutation. Mohr handed him a little paper, and said, "This is my Christmas gift to you, dear friend; I have no other. You know I am not rich in the treasures of this earth." Gruber took the paper to the Christmas tree, brilliant with lights, read it and joyfully cried out "But you are the richer in the treasures of heaven. Hear, dear friends, what a present for our festival he has given us." With deep emotion and in earnest tones he read the song:

Silent night! hallowed night!
Land and deep silent sleep!
Softly glitters bright Bethlehem's star,
Beckoning Israel's eye from afar,
Where the Savior is born.

Silent night! hallowed night!
On the plain wakes the strain,
Sung by heavenly harbingers bright,
Fraught with tidings of boundless delight.
Christ the Savior has come.

Silent night! hallowed night!
Earth awake! silence break!
High your anthems of melody raise,
Heaven and earth in full chorus of praise;
Peace forever shall reign.

All with deep feeling pressed the young preacher's hands, and thanked him cordially for his precious gift. "It is only a simple song," said Mohr, "just as it came into my heart this evening. But you can sing it, for with you everything turns into music and song."

It was late that night when these good friends separated, after they had sung many happy songs together. Mohr retired into his bedroom, but it was long before he could give himself to sleep, for his heart was too full of the sweet songs they had sung.

He went to the window and looked out once more into the silent, holy Christmas night. Everything was also silent and holy within him; his heart was full of praise and thanksgiving, for "Christ the Savior has come," he kept constantly repeating.

Suddenly tender, sweet sounds reached his ears. Was it not his own song? The music floated to him in sweetest rhythm, soft as the tones of shepherds' flutes, by four wonderfully gifted voices.

"Silent night! hallowed night!" was sung for the first time on Christmas eve in the quiet village of Arnsdorf in the Bavarian Highlands.

With deep emotion Mohr listened to the song, until the last tones had died away.

"Is it not so that it has already become song and melody?" Gruber called out to him. "We could not do otherwise than keep repeating your delightful, sweet song. Therefore the melody at once came to me, and while you were gone I played it on the organ for our friends Strasser, and together we have been practicing it."

On the next Christmas festival the Strassers came to Leipsic and brought the song to the eminent cantor Asher. Friese in Essen had faithful copies made of song and melody for the general public; and thus it has found its way into the widest circles.

By many thousands of children in Christendom it is sung every year at Christmas tide; and wherever it is heard it transports Christian souls to Bethlehem's fields, where heavenly glory and angel songs surround them. And with joyful hearts we also unite with the choirs of children as they sing,

"Silent night! hallowed night!"

Dividing the Blame.

A little girl in Brooklyn was discovered by her mother engaged in a spirited personal encounter with another little girl of her own age. Both combatants showed signs of the encounter.

The mother took her daughter into the house, and talked to her regarding the awfulness of her conduct. "Don't you know such conduct is wrong?" asked the mother. "It was Satan that urged you to fight."

"Well," said the little girl, "maybe he told me to pull her hair, but I thought of kicking her shins all by myself."—Woman's Home Companion.

Things to Forget.

If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbors' faults. Forget all the slander you have ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding, and give a little thought to the thought which provoked it.

Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and only remember the good points which make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories you may have heard by accident, which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are.

Blot out as far as possible all the disagreeables of life; they will come; but they will grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thought of the acts of meanness, or, worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday, start out with a clean sheet for to-day, and write upon it, for sweet memory's sake, only those things which are lovely and lovable.

Paying for the Bible.

Of the eight million copies of the Bible sold every year by the British and American Bible societies, many are paid for in queer coin. In Uganda, the natives pay for their Bibles in cowry shells. In New Hebrides, copra and arrowroot are used for money. In other places swords, daggers, sandals, amulets, straw hats, pieces of silk, eggs, butter, rotten cheese, dogs' teeth, sea birds' eggs and other odd things are paid.

Of the 2,000 colporteurs and Bible women who travel and sell the Bible, not all travel by rail or boat or carriage. Some ride bullocks; some use wheelbarrows; some ride bicycles; some go by jinrikishas, and many go afoot. I wonder how many of us would be willing to give our best Christmas present, or trade our dog or canary for a Bible, if we had none? If people gave their diamonds and sealskins and automobiles for the Bible, they would not pay more than it is worth.—Junior Christian Endeavor World.

Better Pasture.

The Baptist Commonwealth tells a story of a parson and a shepherd who did not attend church regularly.

"Well, John, I have missed your face in church," said the parson.

"I dinna doot that."

"And have you not been to church all this time?" was the parson's next question.

"O't aye have I; I've been many times in the kirk ower the hill."

"Well," said the parson, "I'm a shepherd myself, and do not like to see my sheep wandering into other folds and among other pasturage."

"Well," said John, "that's a difference, ye ken; I never mind where they gang if they get better grass."

A Point in "Ivvolution."

"Have ye iver noticed how a crab does be walkin' backwards most av th' time? Well, accordin' to th' laws av nature, 't will only be a matther av time till they'll be gettin' heads on th' other ind to be seein' where they're goin'. 'T is that makes ivvolution. * * * Nature is a wonderful thing whin ye come to study it."—From Charles D. Stewart's "The Fugitive Blacksmith."

Double the Power of the Preacher.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is entering upon a campaign to improve the PULPIT POWER OF OUR BROTHERHOOD. We invite a symposium on the subject of preaching—short articles and good illustrations from the experienced preachers of our brotherhood.

We propose to do our part by sending to the Summer Training School, under the direction of Dr. Edward Amherst Ott, as many ambitious preachers as are ready to accept our offer on a co-operative plan.

Special Advantages.

A special opportunity for practical lessons in voice culture and for instruction in pulpit action and gesture will be features of this school. An opportunity to meet, for a six weeks' term, preachers from other churches, from country and from city, to ask, and hear answered, questions of pastoral theology and sermonic difficulties, will make this course an exceptional opportunity for any man who has the Master's cause at heart, and who feels that it is a duty to succeed.

Bible lectures will be given by a carefully selected group of practical men, both laymen and preachers, which alone would make the conference and training school invaluable.

An Opportunity.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has decided to offer scholarships to this work, the regular price of which is $30, to all interested readers, on a co-operative plan. Any preacher who would like to take advantage of this course, or any church or society wishing to throw this opportunity open to the preacher of their church, should address the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST immediately for particulars.

Pastoral Helpers.

The same privileges will be extended to Pastoral Helpers, and a course in Bible reading, extemporaneous speaking and general elocution will be especially interesting to the women who are making this their life work. Dr. Ott has planned to give four free scholarships in his regular classes to four helpers next year. These will be selected from the class next summer. The number of scholarships is limited, and immediate response is, therefore, necessary. All preachers or individuals interested should make application for the scholarship, and write at once for particulars to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE THIRD DAY.

Mace's mother was found in the barn loft with "Ramona," just as Mr. Woodney had suspected. The unpacking and cleaning went on the rest of that day and the next without many interruptions, and at last the house began to present a respectable interior. It was just after sunset when Miss Lizzie Day came over from the next house to invite Mace to take a walk. As the family had been too busy to look at the village, Mace was glad to have this chance to make its acquaintance. She hastened to change her dress and smooth her hair, and when she set forth with Miss Lizzie she looked fresh and bright. Miss Lizzie was in pink, and almost looked like a girl herself. "I am afraid," she said with a gentle smile in her blue eyes, "that I must seem an old lady to be your companion. But my sisters cling to the fiction that I am only a child, and they insisted that we should be chums at once."

Mace laughed, but whether at the thought of being chums with one almost as old as her mother, or at Miss Lizzie's apology, did not appear. Miss Lizzie was a little troubled by the laugh, fearing her company might not be altogether acceptable. "Oh, wait!" said Mace, after they had come up the steps out of the yard. She jumped back and rushed toward the side fence, calling, "A chicken! A chicken!" Old Mrs Woodney burst from the front door and Mrs. Geraldine Woodney from the rear as if acting upon an expected signal. A large fat hen was circling curiously about two stones which lay upon the naked earth. Mr. Woodney issued from the house almost at the same time. "Stand there, papa!" cried Mace, taking his arm and stationing him, "and when I cry 'Wave!' then wave both arms." Miss Lizzie, much interested, stepped down into the yard again. Mace ran at the hen, crying to Miss Lizzie, "If it comes your way, catch it!"

The hen started straight toward the visitor. "I'm afraid!" cried Miss Lizzie timidly. The hen suddenly changed its course. "Wave, papa, wave!"

"I wave!" responded Mr. Woodney, his arms going like windmills. Old Mrs. Woodney pounced at the hen, but it darted past and started down the back yard with Mace and her mother after it. "Mr. Woodney," said Miss Lizzie diffidently, "I wouldn't wave any more; the hen has gone."

"I thank you," said the blind master, ceasing his violent exercise. A terrified squawk told the sequel to the chase. Presently Mace came around the cottage carrying the hen by her legs. Bob Enderthorpe had come out of his house, next door, to learn the meaning of the cry of distress. Mace walked defiantly to the dividing-fence and flung the hen over into the Enderthorpe yard. "Now, you stay there!" she cried. She gave Bob a look as much as to say, "That is the way I'd like to treat you when you get into our yard."

"Those chickens must be a great annoyance," remarked Bob who, being a boy, was made unhappy by the look, without feeling any dislike for her who gave it.

Mace turned from him, considering h remark worse than another hen. She said to Miss Lizzie as they walked away, "That is the tenth time since dinner that I have thrown their chickens over into their yard; and we mean to continue to do it till we break them from coming here. We must have grass like other people, and those chickens have made the place look as bald as an old man. Grandmother was looking out of the window this afternoon, and I saw her jump up and run out and I followed. She got two stones—you saw them—and carried them to the spot where she had seen something green trying to push its way through the earth. And that mean old hen was going all about the place, trying to find a way to destroy the only blade of grass or weed—we don't know which." Mace was very indignant. Her eyes sparkled and her dark cheeks showed red spots. Bob sighed. She was so pretty and so unfriendly! They were now upon the sidewalk, and as they went on, Mace continued, "At first I told papa, 'Let's get a lot of game chickens and train them.' But we decided it was best to catch every chicken and throw it over the fence. In the course of time they must learn that to come to our place simply means to be caught and thrown over the fence. A chicken has less sense than any other animal, but its instincts are very strong and if directed in the proper channel, papa thinks they will take the place of an education. A chicken loves comfort and clings to life, even after it has lost its head."

"Yes," said Miss Lizzie, whose mild spirit had been depressed by the recent scene. "Mace, I thought we would go to one end of the street, then make the entire transit of the village, and see everything. There is only one street. We will go up one side and down the other, and that will make it last longer."

"Then don't tell about the places till we begin at the west end," said Mace. "That is the end we entered when we moved here. How long ago it seems, and how many books I have handled, since then! Why, Miss Lizzie, do look! There goes that hen I threw into the Enderthorpe yard."

"Yes," said Miss Lizzie, watching a hen which had squeezed itself under the fence and was now fleeing before them with both wings wildly flapping, "it is going home."

"What do you mean by that?" asked Mace. "Its home is at the Enderthorpes. By the way, Miss Lizzie, how large a family is that?"

"There are Mr. and Mrs. Enderthorpe

For Whom Intended. THE ROUND TABLE is a paper for wide-awake, bright-eyed Boys and Girls in their "early teens," who are a little too old for The Young Evangelist and not quite far enough along in years and in their tastes and acquirements to be greatly interested in the material which goes into the columns of Our Young Folks, which is intended for young men and women who are engaged in Bible Study and Christian Work, especially along Sunday-school and Endeavor lines.

Its Contents. THE ROUND TABLE is quite distinctly a "Story Paper," five of its eight pages will usually be occupied with Serial and Shorter Stories, always pure in tone and instructive in character, with fine illustrations. The remaining pages will be filled with Table Talks on a great variety of themes; Odds and Ends of useful information; Outlines of the Sunday-school Lessons and Endeavor Topics; A Puzzle Drawer full of Riddles, Charades and Problems, to exercise the wits of young readers, and in each issue a sufficient amount of Pepper and Spice to keep its readers awake and smooth out any wrinkles that may have a tendency to gather in their faces.

Subscription Price. One copy, one year, 50 cents; in clubs of five, to one address, 40 cents each; in clubs of ten or more to one address, 36 cents each. Quarterly subscriptions at proportional rates.

and their four boys," said Miss Lizzie, "but we mustn't talk about that till we come to their house, or it will spoil the story of the village; it will be like looking ahead in the book, you know."

"I wish that hen wouldn't keep in front of us," Mace presently remarked, "it reminds me that I got out of humor, and I'm always ashamed of it, afterwards. Do listen at its screaming; it is like a sort of Nemesis! Wasn't it Nemesis that always reminded you of your crime?"

"Yes, but Nemesis always came behind, didn't it? Now, the hen is at home." The hen darted into the yard of the first house on the street. "I was quite sure it belonged to Mrs. Tumbleton."

Mace turned pale. "You mean it wasn't the Enderthorpes' chicken?"

"The Enderthorpes do not keep chickens in town," said Miss Lizzie; "their chickens are all out on their farm—I mean the farm they rent."

"Then all those chickens I have been throwing over their fence—" gasped Mace.

"I have no doubt they were some of the Tumbleton chickens," rejoined Miss Lizzie.

"But Mr. Tumbleton told me," stammered Mace, who was red and pale by turns, "that it was the Enderthorpes' chickens that had eaten every spear of grass on our place."

"Now, this first place is the Tumbletons'," remarked the elder, dryly. "It is usually overflowing with children, but nobody seems to be at home." Mace stared at the frowsy, unkempt yard, the log cabin which had an air of chronic untidiness, the fence with its missing planks and sagging posts. A weather-beaten, time-worn wagon stood at one end of the cabin, its tongue propped against the wall. "You see it is just across the street from the saloon; but we will save the other side till we come back."

"I cannot understand about those chickens," persisted Mace.

"The place you rented has been vacant almost a year," Miss Lizzie explained. "It belongs to Mr. Winterfield. He allowed Mr. Tumbleton to keep his chickens there till it should be rented, and Mr. Tumbleton used it as a chicken farm; he raised a great many chickens, and his neighbors helped him. Our place has sustained a good many of them. When he learned you had rented the place, he sold most of the chickens in Jefferson City, and took the rest home; but they have not yet been broken from coming back to their old home."

"But what did Mr. Tumbleton mean by telling us it was the Enderthorpes' chickens?" cried Mace, her eyes flashing.

"If Mr. Tumbleton makes one believe him while telling a tale," rejoined Miss Lizzie, "he is quite undisturbed if detected afterwards in a falsehood."

"Did you ever hear," Mace began, her voice trembling, and her eyes filling with tears, "about the killing—or the stealing—of a-a-a sheep, Miss Lizzie?"

"Yes, indeed. The Enderthorpes had a pet sheep and one night it was stolen. Mr. Winterfield had occasion to go to Jefferson City not long after, and learned by chance that Mr. Tumbleton had been there with his wagon, selling fresh mutton. People thought it significant."

There was a pause while Mace stood staring at the rude log-cabin through tears of mortification. Then she murmured, "I wonder what Bob Enderthorpe thought of my throwing the chickens over into his yard?"

"I will tell you what I thought," said Miss Lizzie timidly, "because I want to apologize for having such an unfair opinion of you. I thought it was because he let your organ get damaged and that you were trying to have some revenge. I cannot tell you how glad I am to know you better, for I felt that the pleasure in our walk was all spoiled."

"I suppose he thinks that, now!" exclaimed Mace. "Let us walk on—I hate the sight of the Tumbleton place! What a pity for the village to have such a bad beginning!"

Reub reminds one a little bit of the late lamented Ben King, who was indeed a lovely soul; but Reub's is rather a broader kind of laugh-making product. . . . .

His book is already heading the list of "best sellers" and deserves to go. It is good.

A new book but one that is springing rapidly into popularity, because of its telling wit and humor and its freedom from coarseness.

Has your school ever tried the "button contest"? Nothing more interesting and helpful than this simple device introduced by the Y. M. C. A., on the order of the old-fashioned spelling match—two sides, two captains, a number of assistants, red and blue buttons at $1 per hundred. Try it.

Another great favorite at this time is "The Christian Use of the Tithing System," by G. L. These are sold same as the Power tract, and are doing good in many communities. It will justify any financial board in our congregations putting them out broadcast, such are the needs of the Disciples.

B. B. Tyler writes: "The Foundation for Christian Liberality" is a good book. I marked such passages as "covetousness is the besetting sin of to-day," "the sacred and secular are one." He says, " 'The Law Needed,' I found especially helpful." Brother Tyler also commends especially the chapter on "The Question that Confronts Us." This is the book that is being sold at 75 cents in good and durable cloth binding. Read and inwardly digest.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Vol. XLII. No. 14. April 6, 1905. $1.50 A Year

WE stand face to face with the historical Christ, as it has been said, "in a sense and to a degree unknown to the church since the apostolic age." It is a most significant fact that every single great life of Christ since the Gospels is the product of the last sixty-five years. Every ray of light---historical, critical, philosophic, ethical, religious---has been concentrated upon him. No such study was ever given to any theme. It would be criminal thoughtlessness that could make that fact without effect in theology. Better to know Christ is, certainly, to be able to speak more adequately about him. And it would be our shame, not the glory of the fathers, if in spite of the deepening knowledge of Christ, we were content to speak precisely as they spoke. We would much rather try to speak as we believe they would speak now. The very movement itself makes it certain, however, that this is not to make Christ less, but more.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Rockefeller's Money.

All of Mr. Rockefeller's gifts in recent years have not occasioned as much comment and controversy as his offer, a few days ago, to give $100,000 to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (Congregational). According to one account, the money was offered after repeated solicitations on the part of members and representatives of the board. Another report says that it was not asked for, but that Mr. Rockefeller on his own initiative just asked for information about the work and needs of the board and then voluntarily made the offer. However that may be, protests began to come in almost as soon as the gift was announced. The leader of the opposition is Dr. Washington Gladden, of Columbus, O., who embraced the first opportunity to preach a sermon on the subject. As some paragraphs of that sermon include the substance of all that has been said on that side of the question, we quote:

> "The money proffered to our Board of Missions comes out of a colossal estate, whose foundations were laid in the most relentless rapacity known to modern commercial history.
>
> "The success of this business from the beginning until now has been largely due to unlawful and outrageous manipulations of railway rates.
>
> "The United States government is now engaged in a strenuous attempt to ferret out and punish this injustice. And the people of the United States have a tremendous battle on their hands with the corporate greed which has intrenched itself in this stronghold, and has learned to use the railways for the oppression and spoliation of the people.
>
> "And now, on the eve of this battle, they are asked to accept a great gift of money from the man who more completely than any other represents the system they are summoned to fight.
> "I hope they are not mean enough to take his money and then turn around and fight him. I hope they are not so faithless to their obligations as to take his money and shut their mouths or become his apologists.
> "We do not want this man's money. To accept it will be to merit the contempt of millions of honest men; to reject it will strengthen our churches in the affection and respect of millions who are inclined to doubt whether the churches love God more than mammon.
> "Our missions will be richer and stronger without it than with it, and we shall lose nothing by our loyalty to the things unseen and eternal."

Since Dr. Gladden's sermon there have been innumerable sermons, editorials and comments on the case. Many agree with Dr. Gladden, who is moderator of the Congregational council, that the gift should be refused. Others take the opposite view on various grounds. The church needs the money. However acquired, the money must be spent and it is better that it should be well spent on missions than ill spent in some selfish or worldly way. The church cannot investigate the pedigree of every dollar which is put into its contribution plate, and it does not stamp its approval upon the moral character or business methods of every contributor to its treasury. The operations of the Standard Oil company are bigger, rather than worse, than those by which many of the church's most valued supporters get their money.

The church is not asked to take the money for itself but merely to use it for the benefit of others; the church or the board is not the beneficiary but only the administrator of the gift. With these and similar considerations those who favor accepting the money support their side of the argument. An interesting feature of the controversy is that it has drawn from Mr. H. H. Rogers, vice-president of the Standard Oil company, a reply to Dr. Gladden. His argument was that railroad rate rebates, which furnish the chief ground for the indictment against Standard Oil, were not illegal until the law was passed making them so, and he asserted that no rebates had been received since then. Dr. Gladden's reply to this is that rebates were immoral even before the law made them illegal, and that the church must reject immorally acquired wealth as certainly as it rejects that acquired illegally.

True and False Distinctions.

The question raised by this episode of Rockefeller and the American Board is too important to be waved aside or answered with easy pleasantries. It is too intricate, also, to be solved by sweeping denunciations and off-hand condemnations. We do not propose to discuss either the morality or the legality of Standard Oil methods. For those who approve the methods, no problem is presented by the present case, but it is conceivable that a problem might be raised in some future case where a gift comes from a man or company whose methods they do not approve. We are not going to tell the American Board exactly what it ought to do in this case, but there are some considerations which ought to be brought forward as elements in the solution of the problem.

1. There is a certain type of financial operation in vogue in this country which, whether legal or not, is distinctly immoral, anti-social and destructive of the best interests of a democratic community. Against such methods, and those who employ them, every righteous institution, whether church or college or any other, must protest. Only the blind are unconscious of the real dangers to industrial prosperity, free government and sound character, which are involved in these perversions of industry. It is not enough to distinguish between the legal and the illegal in business; the courts can do that for us. We must distinguish between the moral and the immoral, the wholesome and the demoralizing.

2. We must also class the little sinners with the big sinners. If we are against greed, we must condemn it in the poor as well as in the rich, in the unsuccessful as well as in the successful. No church ought to make a spectacular denunciation of a billionaire who proposes to give a large sum for missions unless it is quite willing to go carefully over its own membership lists and brand the tricky deacons and the over-sharp elders and the covetous laity and see what sort of dollars they are that go to pay the preacher's salary. It would be a wholesome process in some places, but a very intricate one.

3. It is notable that a good many of the backers of Dr. Gladden in his protest against the acceptance of Mr. Rockefeller's money are men who do not scruple to have profitable financial relations with the oil trust and with other corporations which pursue the same tactics to the limit of their opportunities. In other words they think that the task of testifying against the iniquities of trusts, rebates and the rest should devolve upon the churches and colleges, while the business world attends strictly to business and makes what profit it can by co-operating with the evil-doers. They will urge a church or college to refuse a gift of trust-made money, but will themselves accept that same money as salary or fees for services rendered. This false distinction involves the fundamental heresy of the whole matter. If the brand must be put upon certain men and methods as anti-social, it must be done most of all by the men who are engaged in business by legitimate methods. There are always two parties to a rebate transaction; there is the shipper who receives and the road which gives. If it is desirable that churches and colleges refuse to countenance one party to the transaction by accepting his gifts, is it not equally desirable and necessary that upright men who wish to testify against unrighteousness shall refuse to countenance either party by accepting dividends from them or by receiving salaries as managers, attorneys or engineers? We are not saying what these men ought to do, but we are saying that that question is intimately involved in the question as to what churches and schools ought to do. The question has roots to it and we are willing to admit that perhaps we have not gotten to the end of all of them.

War or Peace?

In the absence of any decisive war news from the front, attention naturally turns to peace news from the rear. This, unhappily, is equally indecisive. One suggestion, which has become familiar by reiteration, is that Japan may very likely and very reasonably demand as one condition of peace a limitation of Russian naval increase for a term of years. The great problem on Japan's part is not only to find terms which Russia will accept—which will be difficult enough—but to make a settlement which will not amount merely to a truce of a few years during which Russia can prepare for another and perhaps more successful attempt to realize her ambition on the coast of the Pacific. The terms of peace, to be at all just to Japan, must be of such a nature that the result of the war in the checking of the Russian advances will be as nearly permanent as possible. A limitation of the Russian navy would be as effective as anything, unless Russia should treat the agreement as she treated the agreement to evacuate Manchuria. It is particularly certain that, unless she is subjected to some such limitation, Russia will start on a plan of naval increase as soon as the war is over—or as soon as she can raise the money—and, indeed, by the experience of this war, will try within a few years to win back her lost prestige and property. Against this possibility Japan must defend herself if possible in the terms of peace, since it is scarcely possible that the war can be pushed to the point where Russia will be permanently crippled internally

Russia's Suggestion.

The Associated Press reports that Russia has indirectly but unmistakably conveyed to Japan the suggestion that no terms of peace which involve either a cash indemnity or a cession of territory will be considered. This leaves Japan free to offer terms if she desires, with a fair chance of knowing in advance whether or not they will be accepted. In this hint from Russia of course Manchuria is not considered as Russian territory. It has never been technically so and it will be possible to make its restitution to China or even its occupation by Japan one of the conditions of peace without involving any cession of Russian territory.

A rumor, which has proved to be foundationless, had it that President Roosevelt had offered his good offices to both contestants as an intermediary for peace negotiations. On the basis of this rumor an enterprising Chicago paper collected a number of opinions from leading European editors as to the President's suitability for this function. Most of them thought he would be the ideal man for it. The editor of the Novoe Vremya, the leading Russian paper, naively suggested that President Roosevelt could scarcely be disinterested since Japanese success would be such a serious blow to our commerce in the east.

Another report, unconfirmed and doubtful, says that Japan has signified to Russia that an indemnity of $800,000,000 will be demanded, and to this fact is attributed the delay of peace negotiations. Perhaps after all the Paris bankers will be the real peacemakers by refusing to handle any new issues of Russian bonds. The St. Petersburg correspondents of the London dailies were recently allowed to inspect the Russian gold reserve, by special permission of the Czar and at his suggestion. They counted 15,913 gold ingots and 12,500 sacks of gold coin. So the Czar is not yet down to his last penny. But this is not all available for war. There is a currency to be maintained and interest on millions of bonds to be provided for. The correspondents were not, on the whole, so favorably impressed as the Czar hoped they would be and they have been no more inclined to encourage public confidence in the solvency of the Russian government than they were before they investigated the treasury.

Premature Fireworks.

We are having beautiful balmy spring weather but there is danger that a late frost will catch and kill (together with the usual fatality to the Delaware peach crop) one or two presidential booms which have blossomed untimely. Mr. Fairbanks is being mentioned in connection with the presidential nomination in 1908 much too persistently for his own good. He is hurrying hither and yon to make speeches and to allow himself to be surprised by the spontaneous suggestion from various quarters of the country that he is the logical candidate for the next campaign. Of course everybody knew that Mr. Fairbanks had hopes, but it is much wiser to let a matter of that sort rest as an open secret, to be politely ignored by all well mannered people during at least the first two years of an administration. And now comes Secretary Taft as another prospective nominee and, as it is said, with the backing of President Roosevelt who would rather have Elihu Root as his successor but thinks him practically ineligible this time because he is a New Yorker and so picks Taft as second choice. Taft is to be chairman of the Ohio Republican convention and in that capacity will have opportunity to make a "keynote speech." This is supposed to be favorable to his chances; in fact, a semi-official launching of his boom. But the band may possibly wish to change both its tune and its key during the next three years. It is too long a race to be run with comfort or safety. Even the friends of the candidates will be tired of them, as candidates, before the real campaign begins. Let them rest two years more before they begin. As the New York Sun says, the meanest thing the enemies of a candidate for 1908 can do is to begin to boom him in 1905.

Wine or Whiskey?

It would be a pity if ardent spirits, in the shape of whiskey and brandy, shall take the place of wine in any country. If people have to drink there is usually a great deal less harm in wine than there is in those drinks containing a larger quantity of alcohol. It would seem from the board of trade returns that there is a change in the public taste of England. While economic conditions, no doubt, account for the decrease in the wine bill of the country, it would seem that the dinner table no longer keeps people, as it formerly did, and that instead of lingering over the walnuts and the wine, men now are wont to indulge in a smoke, and a glass of whiskey and soda.

Devil Glass.

"The stained glass in churches is to keep the devil out; that in saloons, to keep the devil in." So said one of the members of the Missouri Legislature in reply to the argument of another that as churches have stained or ground glass windows, saloons ought to have them. A measure was before the House to prohibit saloon keepers from resorting to any device to prevent a full view of the premises from the outside. The bill passed by a vote of 84 to 22 and it is one that even those who favor the tolerance of saloons have no real reason to combat. It is a sensible measure, passed in the interest of the saloons themselves, and were there no special reasons for insisting that saloons be open to public inspection, we may be sure that no man would be in favor of the open window.

Is There Not Common Ground?

The Baptist Argus of recent date takes to task the Christian Standard of Cincinnati for assuming a position which it designates as "half evangelical and half Catholic." The statement of the Christian Standard which calls out the opposition of the Baptist Argus is the following:

> Baptism is not a re-generation, but a re-birth. Re-generation must come before re-birth. Why will not intelligent men distinguish between "being begotten and being born"? "Listen! The man who truly believes on Christ is re-generated or begotten of God. Is he a son of God? Yes, as the unborn child is the son of its parents. Is he a son of God in the sense of enjoying the privileges of the kingdom of heaven and the church? Certainly not."

Replying to this statement of the Standard, our esteemed Baptist contemporary makes the following reply:

> This doctrine puts the large majority of Christians in an un-"born" condition, though they are living Christian lives, reaping spiritual harvests, and going to heaven in an ever increasing procession. If these many millions of Christians would consent to make facts conform to the Christian Standard's theory they would have to resign from Christ's conquering army and become helpless indeed. "Why will not intelligent men" see that a theory which runs counter to the facts in the case is a castle in the air, a bubble?

It is no part of our purpose to take up the cudgel for or against either of these brethren. No doubt the Christian Standard has some way of harmonizing its theory with the fact mentioned by the Argus. It is always bad to have our theory run up against facts which it cannot contain or account for. Our only purpose in referring to this matter is to point out a common ground upon which these brethren and the peoples they represent may unite.

In the first place, we are bound to say that the Christian Standard seems to us to have pressed the figure of the new birth to an untenable extreme. The analogy between the new life in Christ, and a birth, is no doubt helpful, but it may easily be pressed to an unwarranted extreme. For instance, we have heard it said that in the new birth the Holy Spirit is the father, and the water is the mother! It requires only a little sober thought to see the crudity of this conception. We know that the mother, quite as much as the father, gives character to her offspring. To affirm this of the water of baptism would be absurd, not to say irreverent. Again, to assert that in the birth from above baptism is as essential as is the mother in our natural birth, is to pass far beyond the limits of safe and sound exegesis, and to press a mere figure of speech beyond anything which the author of it could have had in mind.

And yet the figure is a very obvious one—one which would naturally occur to the mind of a writer or a speaker who had a clear grasp of the fact that in Christ Jesus we have a new type of life, quite distinct from the life of the flesh. This life is begotten in us by the Holy Spirit, through the truth of the gospel. This fact is expressed in such Scriptures as, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God" (Jno. 5:1); "Of his own will he brought us forth by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures" (Jas. 1: 18); "For though ye have ten thousand tutors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I begat you through the gospel" (1 Cor. 4:15).

But back of all these passages lies the statement of Jesus in his interview with Nicodemus: "Except one be born anew he cannot see the kingdom of God." And again, "Except one be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." In a recent editorial paragraph on this passage, we stated that it was the purpose of Jesus in this last statement not to exalt the importance of baptism but, on the contrary, to indicate to Nicodemus its insufficiency without the agency of the Spirit through whom the new life is begotten. It is probable that at that stage in the life of Jesus it was the baptism of John that was in the mind of Nicodemus and of the people generally. No other baptism had been instituted. Nicodemus was a member of the Jewish Sanhedrim, which had just sent a deputation to John the Baptist inquiring into the nature of his mission. It is evident that the attention of the Jewish rulers was attracted by John's baptism, and hence the inquiry, when John had disclaimed that he was the Christ, "Why then baptizest thou?" Perhaps if we had the entire conversation, or knew what was in the mind of Nicodemus, we should see that he was prepared to accept the baptism of John, and thus enter into the kingdom which Christ came to establish. If so, the words of Jesus would exactly meet the situation. They would mean, "You have overlooked the most vital thing about my kingdom. You cannot even apprehend it or understand it, without being born from above." When the Jewish ruler seemed unable to grasp this fact, he explained more fully, in the fifth verse: "Ye must be born of water and the Spirit, to enter into the kingdom of God. John's baptism in water will not suffice: you need a new life, and this can only come through the agency of the Holy Spirit."

It is probable, however, that Jesus had in view, also, the use of baptism in the new dispensation, and that he here purposely united the two for the obvious reason that the Church was to be a visible organism in the world, and must have some outward form of initiation. Baptism would serve this purpose admirably, being an impressive symbol, while the Holy Spirit alone would impart that life and power which would fit one for citizenship in his kingdom and membership in his visible Church. We cannot suppose, for a moment, however, that Jesus Christ, the great spiritual Teacher of man, could ever teach that the lines of his kingdom would be conterminous with the lines of his visible Church. Any theory that proceeds on such supposition is bound to run against facts of the most impregnable character. It is impossible that Jesus could have made baptism an equally important condition with the work of the Holy Spirit in the re-generation and salvation of men. And yet it does not follow that baptism does not have an important place in the divine method of evangelization. As a matter of fact the great commission gives it such a place, and inspired apostles used it in that place in their work of planting churches and spreading the gospel.

What is that place? It is an overt act of surrender to Christ; it is the confession in deed; it is the outward expression of the faith of the heart; it is the formal part of the marriage of the soul to Christ; it is the enlisting soldier's oath of allegiance to his new Commander; it is the human acceptance of the divine offer of pardon and the Holy Spirit. It is therefore the divine pledge, to the obedient believer, of remission of sins.

It is just here, we think, that most of our Baptist brethren go to the opposite extreme. In its reply to the Christian Standard's editorial the Baptist Argus says:

> Baptists are divided about a good many things, but they are one the world over in rejecting the doctrine of the "church," and in holding that re generation, conversion, remission, re-birth, all come before baptism.

This statement fails to recognize the unmistakable meaning of certain passages which do make baptism look "unto remission of sins," in some sense. What that sense is we have already indicated. In Peter's language, it is an "interrogation [or inquiry] of a good conscience toward God." As a matter of fact, too, many leading Baptists interpret this and other New Testament passages just as leading men among the Disciples of Christ interpret them.

Dr. Horatio B. Hackett, professor of Biblical Literature in Newton Theological Seminary (Baptist), in his Commentary on Acts, says, on Acts 2:38: "In order to the forgiveness of sins we connect naturally with both the preceding verbs. This clause states the motive or object which should induce them to repent and be baptized. It enforces the entire exhortation, not one part of it to the exclusion of the other." Again, on Acts 22:16, Prof. Hackett says: "'And wash [bathe] away thy sins.' This clause states a result of the baptism in language derived from the nature of the ordinance. It answers to 'for the remission of sins,' in 2:38, i. e., submit to the rite in order to be forgiven." Disciples have no controversy with that view of the subject.

Editor's Easy Chair.

About this time of year, as the almanac-makers would say, look out for symptoms of suburban or country fever. Anyone who has been raised close to the soil and has been accustomed to scratch its surface in the springtime, when the note of the redbird is heard in the thicket down by the branch, and the tops of the trees are growing green, is sure to feel a yearning desire come over him to get out into the suburbs or even farther away, if possible, from the city's noise and tumult, to plant his garden and raise his flowers. This love for the soil and for all growing things is an almost universal instinct. The man who has it not can be but little better than Shakespeare's man who has no music in his soul—"fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils." It is interesting to notice how fond children are of all young and growing things, especially of the flowers, of birds, and the young of our domestic animals. It is as if there were a bond of sympathy between the purity of the child-heart and all that is beautiful and innocent in Nature. Child-life is robbed of one of its greatest sources of pleasure when it is shut up in a city where it can not play on the grass, gather the young flowers in the field, hear the songs of the birds, and watch the lambs and calves play in the meadows. Our trolley cars are doing a great service to the cities in making it possible for people to live out in the suburbs, ten, fifteen, or twenty miles away, where they can see something of Nature in her most interesting periods, and yet do business in the city. Whatever helps to break up the congestion in our city population and send the people out where they can get a breath of pure air and catch glimpses of the blue sky, and enjoy a little of the quiet of country life, is a benefaction. To those who live in the country or even out in the suburbs, April will bring a wealth of the charms and beauties of spring.

While dictating these paragraphs we have been looking upon two pictures that hang above the editorial desk. In them we see the great World's Fair of 1904 in full operation. There is the St. Louis plaza with its statuary, its walks, and green trees, its long rows of buildings on either side, with Peace monument in the distance, ending at the north with the Tyrolean Alps. There, too, in the other picture, is Festival Hall, flanked by the Terrace of States, with the lake in front, and the fountains playing just as they did on one of those bright summer days during the progress of the Fair. By what sort of magic was that great historic scene reproduced in miniature so that we can look upon it to-day, and call up the associations connected with it, so that one who never saw the original scene can form a very correct idea of how it all looked? It is simply the commonplace art of photography that has accomplished this marvel, which we have ceased to look upon as a marvel. By means of certain apparatus the sun's rays were focused on sensitive plates prepared for the purpose, and—presto! we have a perpetual World's Fair! Below these two pictures hangs another. It is of a great Missouri preacher, standing in his pulpit for the last time. It is his seventy-fifth anniversary. The pulpit is beautifully decorated with flowers and plants, but above them all towers the striking personality of the Christian philosopher, the poet-preacher, the profound thinker, the tender-hearted brother, the faithful pastor—Alexander Procter. In his features and very posture he calls up before us that grandly simple life which he lived, and many of the great occasions in which his majestic thought lifted his great audiences to higher conceptions of truth and to nobler ideals of life. The art that can perpetuate scenes and associations like these is no commonplace art!

Lower down still, on the inside of the editorial desk, there is another picture—a cheap copy of that great painting, The Angelus, the original of which sold for over $100,000. It is the picture, as our readers know, of a man and his wife, poor peasants, toiling in the field, who have caught the notes of the far-away village bell, announcing the hour of prayer. Ceasing their toil, they stand reverently with bowed heads at this summons to prayer. The presence of an unseen power seems to rest upon the picture. There is the human and the divine, and the human bows in worship before the Infinite. The brush of the artist has thus fastened on the immortal canvass the idea of worship. The light of the glory of God seems to rest upon the field, upon the humble instruments of toil, and upon the faces and forms of the peasants, as they recognize, by their reverential attitude, the presence of the Infinite and Eternal, and offer up their tributes to him. How much art has done to enrich and ennoble human life by lifting it out of bondage to the material and bringing it into a wider range of vision and of feeling! Perhaps there is not a picture on the walls of your home, which, if you will permit it, will not lead your mind out into vast fields of thought, and up to higher and nobler ideals. What we need to do is to cultivate the power within us to appreciate all that is true and beautiful and good without us and about us. To do this is to live in a larger and better and brighter world. So shall we contribute not only to our own higher enjoyment, but to the happiness and well-being of others. Jesus spoke of those who have eyes but see not, and who have ears but hear not. What this world needs to make it a better world are eyes that see, ears that hear, hearts that feel, and hands that are strong and willing to help lift the weight of the world's sin and sorrow.

One of the things most needed to enhance our enjoyment of life is a higher appreciation of the commonplace. Every day we are witnessing events or using arts and inventions, which, because they are so very common, we have ceased to regard as valuable or noteworthy. What an infinite blessing it would be if we could always retain the freshness of appreciation for our old and familiar blessings and privileges which we felt for them when they were new. Our homes, our family relationships, our books, our friends, our health, our religious associations and privileges, our government, our national peace and prosperity, our positions in life, our opportunities, the useful inventions which make the life of even the poor luxurious as compared with that of the ancients—how often these become stale and commonplace to us because they are old and familiar! Thus we go through life missing the largest part of its enjoyment because we do not appreciate what we have. When suddenly deprived of any of these common blessings of life we learn, for the first time, perhaps, how much they have been to us, and how much they have ministered to our comfort. Strange that invalids are almost the only people that appreciate health, and the exile from his native land the only one who can sing, in immortal strains, of "Home, Sweet Home"!

> "Strange we never prize the music
> Till the sweet-voiced bird hath flown."

Burns sang truly,—

> "O wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursels as ithers see us!"

But an equally desirable boon would be—

> If some power the gift would give us
> To know the worth of blessings with us.

It would increase our gratitude, enrich our lives, and greatly enhance our happiness.

Perfecting Holiness.*

The one end which God has in view with reference to man is to recreate him morally and develop him in righteousness and true holiness until he is brought into the divine image. For this purpose all his revelations have been made, and for this consummation Christ came into the world and offered himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world. Sin is the one blot on the fair face of the universe, and to eradicate it from the hearts and lives of men, has been the motive which has prompted all the redemptive measures which God has instituted for man's recovery from the guilt and dominion of sin. For this end the Holy Spirit was sent into the world to become embodied in the church. The Father's relation to this great enterprise of saving men from sin and making them holy, was that he "so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." The Son's relation to the same work, was, that he came to reveal the Father and to give his life a ransom for many, that he might bring us to God. The Holy Spirit's relation to the work of effecting man's recovery from sin, is that he came to "convince the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment"; to reveal Christ to men, and to carry forward the work of sanctification in the believer until he attains to the image of Christ.

*Extract from the Editor's forthcoming work on "The Holy Spirit," Chapter X.

It is evident, then, that without the Holy Spirit there would have been a missing link in the chain of God's purposes and plans which would have rendered abortive all that had been done by the Father and the Son for man's salvation. In other words if God had ended his labors for man by his self-revelation in Christ, that revelation and sacrifice would not have availed for man's salvation. It required some form of power divine to bring to the hearts and consciences of men the meaning and might of these great gospel facts in order to convince men of sin, to beget in them through these truths, a new life, and to lead, strengthen and comfort those thus begotten until they shall be conformed to the divine image. The Holy Spirit's agency is no less indispensable in the Christian's sanctification, than in the sinner's conversion. If sin be displeasing to God, it follows that nothing short of its complete extirpation from man's character and life will fulfill his purpose concerning us.

The extreme claims of some "Holiness people," of having attained perfection, together with the absurd notions which some of these fanatics entertain about the divine method of making men holy, have had the effect of leading some writers to assume a wrong attitude toward the subject of personal holiness, and to almost apologize for living in sin, as if it were the normal, or at least the inevitable, lot of man. God can maintain but one attitude towards sin, and that is one of eternal antagonism. Those who have the mind of Christ are bound to maintain the same attitude toward sin, as the supreme foe to man's happiness and the chief obstacle in the way of his attainment to that destiny for which he was created.

Holiness is wholeness. It is completeness, as relates to man's ethical nature. It is spiritual sanity. It is moral health and soundness. It is man's normal condition—that for which he was created. Sin is the abnormal, the destructive thing, that like an insidious poison has corrupted the fountains of our being and polluted all the streams of human life. Sin is a loathsome disease which, allowed to run its evil course, paralyzes the moral faculties, blunts the higher sensibilities, benumbs the conscience, clouds the intellect, dwarfs the spiritual nature, and results in moral death. Is it any wonder that God should undertake to relieve man from this foul leprosy, and bring him to wholeness of being—morally, intellectually, and bodily? How the Holy Spirit contributes to this work will now engage our attention.

Notes and Comments.

Attention is called to the article of Brother Carlisle, elsewhere, entitled, "Let It Stand." The suggestion that there is an outward as well as inward step, in our translation into the kingdom of God, in its visible form, points to the true solution of the passage under consideration—John 3:5. The reason why so many people balk at understanding water to refer to baptism, in the passage, is the Protestant dislike of making any outward act the condition of a spiritual change. But the spiritual change is not dependent on the outward act of baptism; on the contrary baptism is dependent on the spiritual change. But there is a formal, outward change, in order to church membership—a visible manifestation of the kingdom of God—which requires an external, visible act, and so Christ unites the two—the spiritual change—with the outward manifestation of that change in the overt act of baptism—as constituting a birth into his kingdom as visibly manifested in the church. His view relieves the passage of any objectionable sacramentarianism, while it preserves the significance and value of a divine ordinance.

In a communication found elsewhere, by Dr. B. B. Tyler, of Denver, he gives the personnel of the International Lesson Committee which is to hold its next meeting in Toronto, Canada, June 23-27. Brother Tyler, however, modestly omits one important member of the committee. B. B. Tyler has been a member of the Lesson Committee representing the Disciples of Christ since 1887, when the convention met at Pittsburg. He is the president of the International Sunday-school Association. Brother Tyler, however, is too well known to readers of the Christian-Evangelist to need any further introduction. In the second article he will give us a sketch of the work of the Lesson Committee, in which our readers are interested. We believe one of the greatest steps forward in biblical study in our times was the adoption of the international uniform series of Sunday-school lessons, thus uniting the whole Protestant religious world in a common study of the word of God. It would be an unspeakable calamity to break up this great union movement in Bible study for some supposed advantage of a separate and independent series of lessons. There are, no doubt, improvements to be made in our methods of Bible study, but these are coming through the International Lesson Committee as rapidly, perhaps, as we are prepared to accept them. Of all the religious bodies in Christendom, the Disciples of Christ should be the last to lend its influence to any movement looking to breaking step in this united march of the religious forces of Protestantism.

The recent conference at Tuskegee called for a united effort to reduce the number of idlers and vagrants, especially in the cities, and to make negro labor more reliable. "The moral and religious standards must be kept high and inflexible by putting a premium on right living and condemning wrong living; the constant cultivation of pride of race is an element which we should not overlook in the training of our children," was the sentiment expressed. Altogether the meeting must be productive of great good. It showed that calmness and confidence are powerful factors in the progress of a race.

Questions and Answers.

"What is meant in Eph. 5:18 by 'being filled with the Spirit,' and is it the privilege of Christians to be filled with the Holy Spirit today? Is being filled with the Holy Spirit what is called elsewhere in the New Testament 'baptism in the Holy Spirit'? Are we filled with the Spirit through faith? Reader."

The exhortation of Paul in the passage cited above means that the Ephesian Christians were to put themselses completely under the dominance and guidance of the Holy Spirit. As one filled with wine is subject to the influence of the wine and controlled by it, so one filled with the Spirit is completely under the control of the Spirit. It is the privilege of Christians to-day, just as much as it was the privilege of the Ephesian Christians. It is impossible for us to distinguish between "baptism in the Holy Spirit," and "being filled with the Spirit." It is true that supernatural phenomena were associated with the baptism in the Holy Spirit in a few recorded instances in the New Testament, but this does not justify us in claiming that these supernatural signs were an essential part of the baptism in the Holy Spirit. Those "baptized in the Holy Spirit" were said to be "filled with the Holy Spirit" so we might as well claim the supernatural signs as inseparably connected with the filling. They were accompaniments simply. But whatever may be our opinion as to the identity of meaning of the two phrases, "filled with the Spirit" and "baptism in the Spirit," the main thing is to believe in and seek for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit to fit us for Christian service and to perfect us in Christian character. Yes, the Holy Spirit is received through faith—the faith that unites the soul to Christ in loving, loyal obedience.

Take North America

By B. F. Manire

[The following is a portion of the address, "The Day of Pentecost as the Beginning of Christian Missions," delivered by B. F. Manire at the Florida state convention.]

The kingdom did not come to North America or South America on the day of Pentecost. It did not come to all or any of the islands of the seas on that day, nor did it come to any of them for centuries afterward, that we know of. To some of them it has not come to this good day; but to them it is coming, and soon will reach and bless them all. Large portions of the earth are lying yet in the region and shadow of death, and more than half the human race have never heard the "Word of Life." May they not pray, "Thy Kingdom Come"?

Even in our own beloved land, there are benighted places into which the light of God's redeeming love has yet but dimly shone. In all our great cities, are there not veritable Sodoms and Gomorrahs, where the reign of God in human hearts and over human lives is utterly unknown? Oh, brethren, are there not deep down in our own neglected souls some dark recesses into which the sovereign rule of Christ has not yet come in all its sweetness, love, and power? Should it not go without the saying that where the gospel of Christ has not been heard or read, the kingdom of Christ has not yet come?

The kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Christ, is each equivalent to the reign of heaven, the reign of God, the reign of Christ in the hearts and over the lives of men and women; but this transcendent reign has not yet come into all the world. It is now, as it has ever been, the great mission of the church as the body of Christ to extend this reign of God, of heaven, of Christ, over all the earth.

When this great work has been achieved, then the will of God will be done on earth as it is in heaven. May God in mercy hasten this day by waking up his sleeping church to this most glorious mission.

The churches of the first century, which were planted and trained by the apostles, were pre-eminently missionary churches, of which the church at Thessalonica, in sounding out the word through Macedonia and Achaia, is a striking example; and had the work been carried on as at the first it was begun, the world long since had been converted to the Christ. But when the teachers who came after the apostles began to dogmatize, theologize, formulate systems and adopt creeds of human origin, instead of preaching the gospel of Christ for the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints, the "Man of Sin" was born, and the great "Apostasy" was soon developed.

Instead of extending the kingdom or reign of heaven to the uttermost parts of the earth, which the Lord intended should be done, they established a great ecclesiastical hierarchy with a sinful, presumptuous man at its head, who claimed the homage of all the world. Then for hundreds of years the means and energies of this politico-ecclesiastical organization were largely expended in persecuting those intrepid souls who would not bow to its assumed authority or acknowledge its supremacy over all things both temporal and spiritual. During all these centuries, it was by those who were denounced as heretics, and often put to death, that the true faith was kept alive and the continuity of the church preserved.

The great revolt from Rome in the sixteenth century led at last to the revival of the missionary spirit that pervaded the primitive churches. This work, however, has been hindered much by the unholy strifes and jealous rivalries of the many sects and denomnations into which the Protestant world has been so unfortunately divided; but a brighter day is dawning, yea, has already dawned, and the kingdom is advancing, the reign of Christ is spreading, as not before since John the last apostle died.

It now behooves us, brethren, to become the greatest missionary people in all the Christian world. We claim to be Christians and Christians only. We claim to stand on original apostolic ground. We claim to be engaged in a work of restoration, rather than a work of reformation. It is not our aim or effort to reform any or all of the existing denominations; for when reformed, if that were possible, they would only be denominations still. It is our avowed purpose, and has been the great aim of all our efforts and prayers, to restore the apostolic church in faith and worship, in principle and practice. To make good this high and holy claim, we must restore this universal missionary feature of the apostolic churches by going forth in faith and love, in hope and joy, to preach the "Word of Life" to all who yet in sin and darkness dwell.

Our mission is to all the world, including all the sects and feuds and factions which have so rent and marred the church of God and Christ. It is ours to exalt the Christ in human hearts as he has never yet exalted been since men departed from the truth; to preach the Christ as he has not been fully preached since apostolic days; to worship and to serve the Christ as he has not been served and worshiped since the "Man of Sin" was born. To do all this, we must restore the missionary zeal and self devoted labor of the apostolic churches. If we succeed in this, it will result in bringing back the long-lost oneness of the church in mind and heart, in faith and work; and the restoration of this unity will hasten on, as nothing else can do, the universal reign of Christ our Lord.

In the prosecution of this work, the great commission of our risen Lord must ever be our guide, the rule by which we work; and the practice of the apostles must be our example. According to the Savior's solemn charge, the work consists of two departments: first, making disciples of all the nations; and second, teaching these disciples to observe all things commanded by him. The first was done by preaching the gospel to the world and baptizing those who received the word; the second, by collecting these disciples into churches or local assemblies, and training them in the work and worship of the Lord. The direct object of the first is the conversion of sinners; of the second, the edification of Christians. The great object of both is the extension of the kingdom of God throughout the world, the establishment of the reign of Christ over all the inhabited earth.

These two great departments of missionary work were carried on simultaneously by the apostles and their colaborers, and should be carried on in the same manner now. Unless we make disciples from year to year, the churches already planted will soon cease to exist, and no new ones will arise to take their places. On the other hand, unless we maintain and strengthen the churches, we will soon fail to make disciples, and the entire work will languish and die. The utter neglect of this second department of the work is the great defect in some of the modern methods of evangelization.

Paul says to Timothy, "And the things thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." In accordance with this apostolic injunction faithful men in every age have carried on the work, although they often had to hide in dens and caves or flee to forests dense and dark. But now the doors are opened wide to all the world as not before since Christ the Lord was glorified. If we would faithful be, the message must be taken up, and sounded out through all the earth.

In this our own beloved land, much mission work needs to be done. More races, kindreds, tribes and tongues are found in this our wide domain than came together on the day of Pentecost. In leading these to Christ we enter here at home on a world-wide mission; for many of them, as heralds of the cross, will bear the "Word of Life" back to their native lands. Take North America for Christ. When we look abroad o'er many lands, what dismal sights our eyes behold! When

The International Sunday-School Lesson Committee and Its Work.—First Paper.

By B. B. TYLER

This committee consists of fifteen men and three are Methodists, three are Baptists, three are Presbyterians, one is a Congregationalist, one is an Episcopalian, one is a Lutheran, one is a United Brethren, one is a Disciple of Christ, and one represents the German Reformed church.

The chairman of the committee is John Potts, D. D., of Toronto. Dr. Potts is at the head of the educational work of the Methodist church in Canada. He is a trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. He has been a member of our committee since 1878. He succeeded Bishop John H. Vincent as chairman. Dr. Potts is thoroughly interested in young people.

Bishop Henry W. Warren is the oldest man, in years, on the committee. He is in the seventy-sixth year of his age, but he is in active service. Recently Bishop Warren completed the circuit of the globe. His home is in Denver. He is easily the leading citizen of Colorado. Bishop Warren has been a member of our committee since 1896. He is an older brother of the Dr. Warren who was president of Boston university from 1873 to 1903. For a number of years the Bishop was a teacher. He occupied, at different times, the chairs of natural sciences and ancient languages. In early life he dipped into politics and was a member of the Massachusetts legislature. He is the author of four books worthy of mention in this connection: "Studies of the Stars;" "Recreations in Astronomy;" "The Bible in the World's Education," and "Among the Forces." Bishop Warren is also a great preacher.

John R. Pepper is the most prominent layman in the Sunday-school work of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. His home is in Memphis. He is, and has been for twenty-five years, superintendent of a great Sunday-school. He has official connection with the Sunday-school work of his denomination. Mr. Pepper is a successful business man. He has visited Bible lands as a student of the word, He gives time and thought to the work of our committee. Mr. Pepper is one of our most useful members.

John R. Sampey is a professor in the Southern Baptist theological seminary. His residence is, of course, Louisville, Ky., the home of this seminary. Prof. Sampey was born in the state of Alabama in 1863. Bishop Warren is the oldest man on the committee. Dr. Sampey is the youngest. His scholarship made him a contributor to the revision of the Old Testament scriptures. In 1897 Prof. Sampey spent eight months in travel and study in Egypt and Palestine. He represents the best thought and scholarship in the southern Baptist church. Dr. Sampey succeeded, as a member of our committee, the late John A. Broadus.

Ira M. Price is a Baptist and is a professor of Semitic Languages and Literatures in the University of Chicago. Dr. Price is about forty years old. He is the author of "An Introduction into the Inscriptions Discovered by Mons. E. de Sarzac;" "Syllabus of Old Testament History;" and is associate editor of "Gesenius Hebrew Grammar." Prof. Price is a Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Leipsic, 1887.

O. P. Gifford is pastor of the Delaware Avenue Baptist church, Buffalo, New York. Dr. Gifford is a graduate of Brown university and of the Rochester (New York) theological seminary. Pastor Gifford was elected a member of our committee by the Denver convention in 1902.

There is only one A. F. Schauffler, and he is a member of the international Sunday-school lesson committee. A. F. Schauffler was born in Constantinople in 1845. His father was a missionary of the American board in the capital of the Turkish empire at that time. A. F. Schauffler is a graduate of Williams college. The University of the City of New York conferred on him a degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1887. He is one of the foremost Sunday-school men of the age. If any one is an authority on Bible-school work, Dr. Schauffler is the man. He has written the following books: "Ways of Working;" "The Teacher, The Child and The Book;" "The Pastor as Leader of Sunday-school Forces." The last named book is a course of lectures before the Southern Baptist theological seminary. Dr. Schauffler is the secretary of the lesson committee. He is, and has been for years, president of the New York City mission and tract society. When I became acquainted with Dr. Schauffler he was in affiliation with the Congregationalists; he is now a Presbyterian.

William Patrick is a Canadian Presbyterian. Winnipeg, Manitoba, is his home. Dr. Patrick is president of Manitoba college. This institution is one of the colleges affiliated with the University of Manitoba. The Presbyterian church is the leading religious denomination in the province. Dr. Patrick is at the head of the educational work of this great church.

At present the Congregationalists are not represented on the lesson Committee. The last representative was Samuel Ives Curtiss, a professor in Union Park theological seminary, in Chicago. Prof. Curtiss was one of our best men. The Congregationalist of December 31, 1904, in an editorial on "The Eminent Dead" of the year, characterized Samuel Ives Curtiss as "a progressive and acquisitive oriental scholar." There is not space to mention, in this paper, the titles of books on scholarly topics which came from the fertile brain of Dr. Curtiss. It was his custom, for a number of years, to spend a portion of each year in the lands of the Bible as a student. He died last year while on his annual journey to the Orient. He was in the sixty-first year of his age.

The Episcopal church is represented on our committee by Principal E. I. Rexford, of Quebec. He is at the head of the public schools in that city. Principal Rexford, and other members of the lesson committee, are presumed, from their positions and work, to know something about pedagogy.

Mosheim Rhodes is pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran church, St. Louis. He is also a trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Dr. Rhodes is a successful pastor and is heartily interested in Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work. He is the author of the following books: "Life Thoughts for Young Men;" "Recognition in Heaven;" "Expository Lectures on Philippians I;" "Life Thoughts for Young Women;" "Vital Questions Pertaining to Christian Belief;" and, "Scriptural Giving."

E. L. Shuey, a member of the United Brethren church, is a Master of Arts of Otterbein University. He is a member of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Shuey is also connected with the American League for Civic Improvement, Chicago. He is the author of a book on "Factory People and Their Employers." Mr. Shuey is a manufacturer.

J. S. Stahr is president of Franklin and Marshall college, Lancaster, Pa. Dr. Stahr represents the Reformed church, sometimes called the German Reformed church. He became a member of our committee in 1890. He was a member of the editorial staff in the preparation of the Standard Dictionary.

What do you think of this committee? Could you select a better? Are the men here named qualified to select courses of lessons in the Bible for the millions who use the international Bible lessons?

The second paper will contain an account of the work of the international Sunday-school lesson committee. How does this committee do its work? What is its work?

Denver, Colorado.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

The matter of greatest interest at present agitating our Washington society is a proposition to introduce moral and religious instruction into the public schools. A sermon from one of our leading ministers on the increase of crime, and attributing it to the neglect in part of religious and moral training of the young led to a conference of citizens where representatives of all religious bodies came together to consider the matter. There were ministers, pastors, rectors, bishops, priests, and rabbis, and prominent laymen—people of all religious faith and of none. Resolutions were introduced deploring certain conditions, setting forth the need of better moral culture, declaring the code of precepts known as the Ten Commandments the best basis for the teaching of morality and for enforcing the duties of the citizen to the state and to his fellow-citizens, and recommending a petition to the board of education to introduce the study of the decalogue in the schools, and the preparation of a lectionary with selections from the Old and New Testaments, and the use of text-books on morals. Considerable opposition was developed and the whole subject was referred to a committee of fifteen, of which Dr. Merrill E. Gates, former president of Rutgers and Amherst, Edward Everett Hale, D. J. O'Connell, rector of the Catholic university, Rev. Dr. Radcliff of the Presbyterian church, Bishop Satterlee of the Episcopal and Bishop Cranston of the M. E. church, President Needham of George Washington university, former attorney-general Wayne Macveagh, Rev. Dr. McKim, the mover of the resolutions, Rabbi Stern, and the Seer from the Dome, and others were members. For three days the committee diligently sat upon the resolutions. It was an amusing seance for the most part. Most of the time was allotted to the opposition which was confined largely to the rabbi and the Seventh Day Adventist member. It seemed curious that the Israelite to whose people Jehovah gave the ten words, and the strenuous advocate of the literal interpretation of the fourth commandment, should have been in the objective case, but they were the chief obstacle. Our Catholic committeeman was far more reasonable. He could not promise the active co-operation of his people, but was heartily in favor of the general purpose of the movement. In the most amicable spirit the committee conducted its deliberations, and all but two—our Israelite and our Seventh Day man—signed the report.

The committee declared its belief in the American principle of the entire separation of church and state, but held that the maintenance of this principle should not be interpreted as necessitating an irreligious state or an atheistic education. It heartily commended the regulation long in force which provides for the reading of the Bible and the use of the Lord's prayer in opening the sessions of the schools. It claimed that to exclude the teaching of theistic morals and biblical righteousness from the public schools would be not simply to ignore the principles on which our fathers founded the Republic, but to reverse utterly those principles; that our fathers rightfully incorporated into our statute law the recognition of certain principles of religion and morality, as in laws against blasphemy, polygamy, and perjury; that the state justly retains laws and customs which are rooted in principles of religion common to all civilized nations, and retains them in obedience to the will of the overwhelming majority of our people; and asserted its belief that it is right and fitting for the state, in the public schools which the state maintains, to make provision for the teaching of these common principles of morality and religion.

We heartily commended the recognition of a common basis of religious belief underlying our common American citizenship, which led to the adoption of Rule 46, for the government of the public schools of the District of Columbia, which requires each teacher to "endeavor to inculcate truthfulness, self-control, temperance, frugality, industry, obedience to parents, and obedience to the laws of God." While moral and religious training should first of all and chiefly be given in the family and the church, and the doctrinal teaching which is peculiar to each church or religious body should be given in that church, or in the home, and should be excluded from the public school, the committee declared its conviction nevertheless that the first principle of morality, based on the belief in Almighty God, should be carefully and systematically taught in our public schools; the state has undertaken the maintenance of the public schools for the children of all, and has based the right of the state to educate the young on the duty of the state to fit the young to become good citizens; the only foundation for good citizenship is in morality based upon belief in Almighty God, therefore, it is the duty of the state to incorporate such teaching in its school system.

The committee expressed its belief that it was entirely practicable to make such a selection of readings from the Old and New Testaments as would prove acceptable alike to Protestants, Roman Catholics and Hebrews, and urged that steps be taken to provide such a lectionary that by its use the children of our schools may have instilled into their minds the principles of the most exalted morality, together with reverence and love for Almighty God, provided that such a lectionary should be of optional use by the individual teacher, in place of the present method.

We recommended to the people's conference that it petition the board of education of the city to introduce into the schools the systematic study of morals, by making use of the Ten Commandments which have served as the basis of morals and law for all modern civilized nations, and of the beautiful summary of those commandments in the Law of Love of God and of our Neighbor, and also by the introduction of carefully prepared text-books upon morals as applied to conduct. We asked this not only in behalf of children from homes and churches where moral and religious training is systematically given, but still more earnestly for the sake of that great multitude in our public schools who have no such training at home or in any church. Any parent who might conscientiously wish to do so should be allowed the right to have his child excused.

The proposition caused spirited discussion. Jews, Seventh Day Adventists, agnostics, secularists, and Baptists fought it, but it passed by a vote of two to one. Since then "Tray, Blanche, Sweetheart, little dogs and all," have been barking. "The three tailors of Tooley street," writing themselves down "We the people of England," have been making all the clamor. It has been a curious condition. At the recent meeting of the Religious Education Association in Boston it was stated that in a school of 365 pupils the principal hung a sheet containing the ten commandments on the wall and asked those who could tell him what they were to raise their hands. Only five hands were raised. They were all Jews and these were all the Jews who were in the school. It may surely be a question whether the state has the right to punish the child for larceny or murder if it has never taught him, thou shalt not steal, and, thou shalt do no murder.

The Significance of the New Berlin Cathedral.

old Lutheran choral "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," come in triumphant strains from the lips of the three thousand people gathered there, could doubt the courage, the conviction and the sincerity which animated it.

The statues of the great fathers of the Reformation looked down from their places, and the spirit of the mighty Luther seemed hovering in benediction over the twentieth century warriors who were renewing their religious vows in the strains of this religous and inspiring "Marseillaise of the Reformation."

The Significance of the New Berlin Cathedral

By Caroline V. Kerr

After long years of waiting the cathedral in Berlin has been dedicated. Amidst the joyful pealing of all of the bells of the city, the magnificent building was opened. In the presence of the Emperor and Empress, and their distinguished guests from all parts of the Protestant world, this new Christian temple was dedicated to its solemn purpose.

Between the royal palace and the royal museum rises the massive Renaissance structure, the three forming a "Triple Alliance" of those monumental buildings which are making for the realization of the Emperor's dream that "Berlin is to be the most beautiful city in the world."

But it is neither the architectural value nor the consideration of the building as a thank-offering for the Prussian victories in 1870–71, which gives to the event its greatest significance.

The God-fearing veteran, Emperor William I., saw in the cathedral an expression of the nation's gratitude for "the divine mercy which revealed itself in the glorious occurrences of 1870–71, and which led Prussia and the allied states to victory."

Undoubtedly, this will be the chief message which the cathedral will bring to many Germans, who hold in almost sacred reverence every thought, word and deed of their beloved monarch. But its significance would be limited did it not extend farther than a gratification of civic or national pride.

It was to the entire Protestant world, that the bells on dedication day rang out a message of courage and cheer and from every Protestant land came representatives to take part, by the invitation of the Emperor, in this great Protestant event.

It may be the beginning of a new era in the religious history of Germany. The present Emperor has made no secret of the fact that he hopes to make of the new cathedral the great Protestant shrine of the world, toward which pilgrims will journey as do Mohammedans to Mecca or Catholics to Rome.

Prussian history is symbolized by the placing of the cathedral in close proximity to the royal residence. Church and castle belong together. It is not easy to say in a few words how much the Brandenburg-Prussian reigning house and German Protestantism, for whose promulgation and glorification the new church has been built, owe to each other.

Albrecht of Brandenburg, the founder of the old Prussian states, stands not far behind the representative of the Ernestine-Saxon house as a promoter of the work of the Reformation.

The great elector was one of the first statesmen who out of the principles of the Reformation formulated the political conditions of a land which has since stood for religious tolerance.

A tremendous impulse to general culture arose out of the circumstance that Brandenburg-Prussia offered an asylum of religious freedom to the French refugees. Space for a colony of their own was granted them in Berlin, and they brought an incalculable fund of idealism and civic competency into the sandy wastes of the Mark. With justice could Frederick the Great be proud of the fact that not a member of the family had gone over to Catholicism.

As a Protestant he could declare in his celebrated marginal on a report of Minister v. Brandt: "All religions must be tolerated, but care must be taken that no one of them interfere with, or injure, the other. Here every one must be blessed after his own fashion!"

This religious tolerance led to a union between the Reformed and Lutheran churches, for which the Prussian rulers have won the gratitude of all Germany. Even when, through the acquisition of Catholic territory, Prussia forfeited more and more its religious homogeneity and the Protestant state, as such, became only a preponderant Protestant state machine, still the old traditions were preserved in the reigning house.

A significant characteristic of the first German Emperor of the House of Hohenzollern, William I., was his simple, unaffected Protestant piety.

"It is not good, in any case, to do that of which our own conscience and conviction can not approve—least of all in religious matters."

"The evangelical faith to which I, like my ancestors, and most of my subjects subscribe, does not allow us, in our relations to God, to accept any other Mediator than our Lord Jesus Christ. These doctrinal differences do not prevent my living in peace with those who do not share them."

"With great earnestness we must oppose the views which have for their aim the making of religion a mantle to cover political machinations. All dissimulation, all hypocrisy, in short, any use of religious interests to serve egotistic ends, must be unmasked wherever it is possible."

These expressions, from various periods and varying occasions, prove how firmly the first Hohenzollern on the imperial throne of Germany planted his house on sound Protestant traditions.

But Protestantism in the strength of a Luther, the seriousness of a Kant and the mental nobility of a Lessing, has not been embodied in any other Hohenzollern prince to the same degree as in the high-minded Emperor Frederick III. On the occasion of the dedication of the Luther hall in Wittenberg in 1883, he spoke these memorable words:

"May this celebration in memory of Luther be for us a sacred admonition to preserve the great blessings gained for us by the Reformation, with the same courage and spirit once displayed in the acquisition of them. May the possession of them strengthen our resolve, at all times, to take up arms for our evangelical faith, for freedom of conscience and religious tolerance. And may we, at all times, bear in mind that the strength and essence of Protestantism consists not in characters and strict forms, but in the active, and at the same time humble, striving for a knowledge of Christian truth."

And a confirmation of this candid avowal still sounds from the speech with which the noble sufferer, with the arrow of death in his breast, opened his all too brief period of rule.

"I desire," so reads the mournful proclamation "To My People," "that the sacredly preserved principles of religious tolerance, which for centuries have been maintained by my family, shall be extended to all of my subjects, to whatever faith they belong."

In recent years there has been anxious questioning as to the religious attitude of the present Emperor. The fear was openly expressed that the powerful suggestions of the past glory of the early German emperors might stifle the Protestant traditions of the Prussian king.

But it is the son of Emperor Frederick, who, in words possible only on Protestant soil, has spoken of the further development of religion, who has enthusiastically praised the towering greatness of Luther and who has recently erected a statue of Admiral Coligny before the royal palace. As the great-grandfather of Louise Henrietta, the wife of the great elector, the blood of this distinguished Frenchman flows in the veins of Emperor William II. The inscription on the monument immortalizes the fact that Coligny, for his faith's sake, fell as the first victim of the bloody St. Bartholomew massacre. It may be an accident that the erection of the statue coincides with the dedication of the cathedral, yet it furnishes a striking suggestion. It may be regarded in the light of a solemn vow on the part of the Emperor, that, in the new court church, no other gospel will be preached than that for which a Coligny suffered a martyr's death; that no other faith will be revered than the one to which, in weal and woe, the history of the Hohenzollern house has been so closely bound.

No one who was present at the dedication services and heard the grand

Why Not Let It Stand?

By C. B. Carlisle.

An editorial paragraph on page 370, of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, tells me that the mental tussle Nicodemus had with Christ's words has come along down the pavement of time. Is John 3:5 such an enigma? Many seem to think it should read, "Except a man be born of water, even of the spirit," using kai, and, in the sense of even; just as it is said, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire," where it evidently means with the Holy Ghost, even as with fire. Why not let it stand, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit"? Born by the one for the outer kingdom, and by the other for the inner kingdom. The translation of a soul from spiritual death in the unregenerate man to life in Christ is the work of the Holy Spirit. Spiritual existence must be preceded by spiritual birth. Birth of the spirit is a real change; not a change of worlds, but a change of disposition. Not only an external, but an internal change. Not mere reformation of manners, but a change of principles. Man may be lost after a ceremonial change. He is safe only after a moral change. The baptism by water substantiates, or ought to, the fact of the moral change. In our courts the right of a man to his ancestor's property is the will or intention of the ancestor. But because that will is invisible, it is necessary that it should be made manifest in a visible symbol, a "will." So baptism is the will of God the Father; in other words, the instrument that declares his will. So let it stand, Except a man manifest in this visible symbol of baptism in water the will of God, and his translation into the spiritual existence by the baptism of the Holy Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.

The Prayer-Meeting—Now and Forty Years Ago.

By S. W. Crutcher.

We see an occasional hint that the midweek prayer meeting waxeth old and is ready to vanish away. I have a memory very distinct that enables me to be a witness in this case.

Forty years ago I heard in our churches no woman raise her voice in prayer. We have in our church in Lamar about 140 members; of this number, there are more than a dozen women, some of them not yet twenty years of age, who will make about as good a prayer in public as the preacher. Sometimes these young women, with the aid of our topic helps from our weeklies, will conduct a prayer-meeting to edification. Thanks to the Endeavor along these lines.

Last night we had 15 members out through mud and snow. On a recent bad evening we had eight at prayer-meeting, six of whom led in prayer, and two of these had never led in this act of devotion before. Forty years ago the preacher and about three or four old brethren would lead in prayer. All the worshipers knew those prayers perhaps better than they did the Lord's prayer.

I remember one church at that time that had no preacher, no Sunday-school, no prayer-meeting. The wealth of that church ran up towards half a million. A young girl offered to superintend the Sunday-school if one brother would do the public praying. This brother did not offer himself. The young woman proposed to have all join her in the Lord's prayer in Sunday-school. To this the brother declining to pray objected, saying, "You can't say the Lord's prayer now, for the kingdom has already come." So it went on for a good while. No preacher, no Sunday-school, no prayer-meeting. About all there was to that church at that time was its soundness in the faith.

It wanted a preacher who could expound first principles, and carry a chip on his shoulder all the while, as a challenge to any preacher who questioned that we were right in our doctrinal views. We have never had more spiritual, helpful prayer-meetings than we have at Lamar—not so largely attended as we would like.

'Tis a time with us for inquiring after the sick and the stranger. While some young Christians must be at their school books, some good members can't leave their work, and some of the aged and feeble must stay at home, it should be a pleasure to them to know that some of their brethren are at the house of prayer, remembering them in their appeals to the throne of grace.

Spirit of Forgiveness.

In proportion as we think kindly of all men, are we brought into humbleness where we may receive pardoning grace and love. The spirit of forgiveness draws us into harmony with God's spirit. God has the power and willingness to forgive, and in this only may we share his prerogative. The obligation we owe to others in the spirit of forgiveness is based upon our own need of forgiveness. Some men seek to be above their fellows.

Such should bear in mind the above truth. In the spirit and grace of forgiveness only have men power to be above others and deal with them as God deals with men. No greater power has ever been given man than that of binding the strongest spirits with bonds of love. We may bind the physical man, but this helps not the spirit. The man who is powerful in love and able to bind the spirit, both blesses the flesh and saves the soul. He who would wrong us we should see as God sees him. That soul is diseased. As the sick man, he is not responsible. He needs a physician, not an executioner.

we listen to the winds, what piercing wails fall on our ears! The Macedonian cry is heard as never heard before since it was heard by Paul. Heber's grand missionary song is just as true to-day as when it was written.

What response shall we make to this heart-rending cry? Will we, can we, let them wander on in darkness and despair, and never give them the "Bread of Life" that they may eat and live forever? May God forbid that we should prove so heartless, and thus dishonor him who pleads for us on high!

CHILDREN AFFECTED

By Mother's Food and Drink.

Many babies have been launched into life with constitutions weakened by disease taken in with their mother's milk. Mothers cannot be too careful as to the food they use while nursing their babes. The experience of a Kansas City mother is a case in point:

"I was a great coffee drinker from a child, and thought I could not eat a meal without it. But I found at last it was doing me harm. For years I had been troubled with dizziness, spots before my eyes and pain in my heart, to which was added, two years ago, a chronic sour stomach. The baby was born seven months ago, and almost from the beginning, it, too, suffered from sour stomach. She was taking it from me!

"In my distress I consulted a friend of more experience than mine, and she told me to quit coffee, that coffee did not make good milk, I have since ascertained that it really dries up the milk.

"So, I quit coffee, and tried tea and at last cocoa. But they did not agree with me. Then I turned to Postum Coffee with the happiest results. It proved to be the very thing I needed. It not only agreed perfectly with baby and myself, but it increased the flow of my milk. My husband then quit coffee and used Postum, quickly got well of the dyspepsia with which he had been troubled. I no longer suffer from the dizziness, blind spells, pain in my heart or sour stomach. Postum has cured them.

"Now we all drink Postum, from my husband to my seven months' old baby. It has proved to be the best hot drink we have ever used. We would not give up Postum for the best coffee we ever drank." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Our Budget

—March has made a splendid record for spring weather.

—April promises to imitate the example of its predecessor.

—All this will help the churches to get ready for the May offering for Home Missions. There is no cause that challenges deeper interest and higher enthusiasm than the evangelization of America.

—Let every preacher in the brotherhood get this subject of saving America so much on his own heart and mind that his spirit will be contagious throughout his church. Preach about it and pray for it.

—The city election in St. Louis will be over before this reaches our readers. Twenty saloon keepers are on the three tickets, asking for our votes to make them custodians of the city's honor and safety and development! Isn't there some work of reform to be done in St. Louis yet? The fact is, we have only begun the work of political purification.

—One of our senators from St. Louis in the State Legislature, in an interview concerning the repeal of a gambling bill, expressed his opposition to its repeal, saying: "I am an admirer of horse races, and don't object to bookmaking and pool-selling; in fact, I am not a Sunday-school man at all." Just so! No one would suspect that he was! But what an unintentional compliment to the Sunday-school! Some day politicians will not feel it necessary to disclaim any connection with the Sunday-school in order to retain their popularity with their constituents.

—Professor Clinton Lockhart is planning for some study in Europe.

—H. E. Stevens has resigned at Van Wert, O., to take effect May 1.

—A city all-day rally for home missions will be held at the Union avenue church, St. Louis, on Wednesday next. A fine program has been prepared and E. L. Powell will be one of the speakers.

—Clark Bateman has been called unanimously for the third year at Carlisle, Ia., for half time. The church raised the full amount to cover the salary and current expenses at a recent morning service.

—President Zollars dedicated a church at Holland, Tex., March 26. The debt had all been paid in advance of the dedication. Prof. F. H. Marshall, of Texas Christian university, preaches for this church once a month, and has done so for four years.

—A preacher with an active ministerial record of sixteen years, up-to-date, in perfect health and prime of serviceable life, in town or city, is ready to accept contract of three months with a view to permanent pastorate. C. B. C., this office.

—D. W. Connor, pastor, reports that the church at Savannah, Mo., is out of debt. Since last August, when he took charge, over $2,000 of indebtedness has been removed, and everybody is now happy. The church recently enjoyed a visit from Bro. Chilton, of St. Joseph.

—Columbia papers announce that at the request of the Christian church there Dr. W. T. Moore consented to deliver a series of sermons from Elder C. H. Winders' pulpit, on "The Distinctive Plea of the Disciples." Two of these sermons were given on Sunday. Brother Winders preached at Keysetville, where Dr. Moore has been preaching.

—Bro. Chas. G. Stout, an evangelist who is making a good record, has been having some experience in a union meeting. It was understood that the preachers take their turn in the pulpit. Brother Stout writes that he feels quite at home preaching but the "turn-about" part of the program is something which he will yet have to learn to appreciate.

—J. E. Cresmer having accepted a call at Manhattan, Kan., W. A. Webster will succeed him at the Ninth and Shaw street church in Des Moines. Brother Webster held them a meeting in February, and believes that a good work can be done here if the whole church will awake to its opportunity und responsibility. He writes cordially of Brother Cresmer's labors.

—O. C. Bohnan has just closed his work for the congregations at Pleasant Hill, White Hall and Bay, Ill., and will take charge at Mason City April 2. The closing day of his pastorate in each of these places was observed as foreign mission day, the offerings being $22, $12.40 and $13.50 respectively, giving a total of $47.90 for the three places, with more expected to be reported.

—The Foreign Society is in need of a medical missionary for India. Whoever goes ought to be about thirty years of age. He ought to have a thorough medical education, and at the same time he ought to be prepared to expound the scriptures to the patients. For one who wishes a large field of the greatest usefulness, there is no better opening in the world than this.

—The Valdosta Times says that our congregation in that Georgia city has made an excellent record lately, especially since Richard Wallace took charge. Art glass has been put in all the windows of the church, new oak seats have been ordered and other improvements will be completed. A debt of $2,600 has just been paid off. Everything seems to be in fine condition.

—We very much regret to report the death of Bro. T. A. Abrams, some account of whom we gave in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Brother Abrams was one of our oldest ministers. After four months of intense suffering he has just gone to his reward. His wife, Rachel M. Abrams, survives him and will have the sympathy of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—A. R. Teachout and family have become a living link family. Father, mother, daughter and two sons are all deeply interested in missions and all actively engaged in different departments of church work. Miss Kate Teachout is superintendent of young people's work in Ohio. Brother Teachout has expressed a wish to support W. E. Gordon, who will sail next September for Mahoba, India.

—The Central Illinois ministerial institute meets at Eureka next Monday and Tuesday. Bro. Alva Taylor, pastor of the church at Eureka, writes that lodging and breakfast will be furnished free. The program is an excellent one, with some live subjects and strong speakers among them. Dr. Henry Churchill King, who made such an impression at our Congress, is down for three addresses.

—"At the conclusion of the day there was nothing but satisfaction and enthusiasm manifest among the church members." Such is a sentence from the Frankfort local paper giving an account of the warm welcome which W. J. Russell has just recieved from his Indiana congregation. The reporter was very much pleased with "the new addition to the Frankfort clergy." Of course, this is nothing but what we would expect.

—R. R. Hamlin, pastor of the First church at Ft. Worth, Texas, writes that Sister Sue Groves has just died there at the age of 94 years. She was a Disciple for 70 years. Born in Kentucky in 1811, she was baptized by Jacob Creath in 1835. She was the oldest inhabitant of her county, and was thought to be the oldest member of the Christian church in north Texas. There surely could not have been many older anywhere.

—There were two reports of unpleasant happenings at the Congress. One was that Dr. Willett's son, Paul, had fallen from the third story window. This prevented Brother Willett's presence at the Congress. The other was that Sister Lhamon had to undergo a serious operation during the sessions of the Congress. It is a great satisfaction to know that this operation was not so serious as at first supposed, was entirely successful, and that Brother Willett's boy is improving.

—Norman W. Philips has been called to the work at Greensburg, Pa., and will begin his labors at once. We are glad to learn that the church is taking on new life and the prospects for substantial growth are bright. Bro. J. A. Atha reports that old factional differences have been buried, and harmony now prevails. All the societies are taking on new growth and the recent foreign offering exceeded expectations.

—Geo. L. Bush had a large amount of space given to one of his sermons in the daily paper at McKinney, Tex. His subject was "Tares in the Wheat," and in the course of his remarks he declared that the "church is not a police court, nor the minister a prosecuting attorney." "Are we able to stand before the Christ?" was the question that Brother Bush insisted upon having answered.

—From Sister B. B. Norman, one of the members at Mena, Ark., we hear of the good work of J. W. Monser at that place. He has been there only four months, having first gone on a visit, and then receiving an invitation to remain. The condition of the church was far from good, there being no pastor, and considerable debt, and many of the members afflicted with the stay-at-home fever. But a change has come. The debt is paid, the church board is now looking out for a pastor who will continue the good work Brother Monser has inaugurated.

—E. A. Orr and family, who recently took up the work at Mankato, Minn., have just been tendered a reception in their new field. Brother Orr frequently visited this people during the pastorates of H. D. Williams and J. K. Shellenberger. He is well known to the Disciples of Minnesota as having held a successful pastorate at Redwood Falls. Bro. C. F. Greenwood reports that the Mankato church is planning special meetings with home forces to begin April 9, and now that a good pastor has been secured the church is facing the future with hope and the prospects are very encouraging for large success.

—J. E. Dinger and family, prior to their removal to Chandler, Okla., where the recipients of a cordial reception from members of the Second Christian church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., to whom Bro. Dinger has been a most acceptable and much loved pastor. A testimonial in the form of a beautiful set of Haviland china was presented, merely expressive of the affection and good will of his many friends in Cedar Rapids. Mr. Allen Jackson, one of the members, in some very appropriate remarks, gave expression to this fine testimonial of Bro. Dinger: "During your ministry here, you have labored with us as a winner of souls."

—Wm. Rothenberger's pastorate of four years and eight months at Ashtabula, Ohio, was closed with all the societies in good shape. The Bible-school has an attendance of 460, the church a membership of 525 (450 are on the active list). During the pastorate there have been 350 additions and during the last year the amount raised for all purposes was $9,000. A modern enlarged building was re-dedicated at a cost of $7,000, and the people are united and ambitious for larger things, and under Louis R. Hotaling, of Chicago, who has been selected as pastor, there is promise that this church will go on and fulfill all that may be expected of it.

—Z. T. Sweeney has sent a letter to Benj. L. Smith, congratulating him on the work of the Home Society during last year. He appreciates the great opportunity of our brotherhood, and suggests that it might aid the Home Board "to get up an excursion and take 500 or 1,000 of our non-missionary brethren a kind of circuit over this country, and let them hear the appeals that come from every quarter. It would bring them back home thoroughly missionary in every respect. But if, perchance, some old moss-back should remain incorrigible, an arrangement might be made with the train crew to have him left at some lonely spot in the Indian Territory where he would not bother the board again with his croaking."

—We believe that the largest amount reported to us from the foreign offering is $800, raised by the High street church, Akron, Ohio. This is the best offering of the present pastorate of five years. Bro. J. G. Slater reports that the Bible-school expects to add at least $500 to this amount on children's day. W. J. Allen and his sister Cynthia again support their own missionary at a cost of $600. A praise service has just been held, and preparations have been begun for a decision day in the Bible-school on April 18, and baptismal service at Easter. The decision day has become established here. Last year 29 were received, notwithstanding a meeting had been held in January, and the year before, when there was no meeting, 60 decided for Christ on this special day.

—Bro. E. H. Calkins, who has been foreman in our compositors' office for more than a score of years, has purchased a farm near St. James, Mo., and has moved on to it. On the eve of his departure his friends of the Christian Publishing Co. gave him a dinner, in which he was toasted, and many kind wishes expressed concerning him. Brother Calkins has been a faithful employe of the company, and we cordially wish him success and happiness in the bucolic life on the farm, amid his crops and herds. If he should for any reason not prove to be a good type of farmer, nor give good proof of his ability to raise corn and wheat, or even should make pi of the whole business, mixing his hogs and chicken and sheep together, he will always find a stick ready for him in our printing office.

—The Christian church at Sheridan, Ind., where W. T. Bartle ministers, has published a little bulletin that ought to help its work and may be suggestive to other churches. On the first page is quoted the authority for the name "Christian"; on the second page we find the verses from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "What We Stand For." The next page gives a succinct account of the Disciples of Christ, and their plea; then follows a brief history of the Sheridan Christian church, and a church directory giving the leaders of the work in all departments, and some report of the past year's accomplishments. Following this are two pages devoted to the general work of our mission boards, and presenting a missionary calendar. A list of members, a brief letter of greetings from the minister, and a page of "doughnuts," which in plain English means "do nots," complete a useful little booklet.

—A subscriber relates his conversion under the preaching of the Editor of this paper more than 30 years ago. He says: "It was a sermon preached on 'The Wedding Garment.' While reading the scripture, 'Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless,' you stopped reading, and looked over the congregation and said: 'No matter where the gospel finds a man it leaves him without excuse: he was speechless!' I have forgotten everything of that sermon but the words I have written." The incident had long since passed out of our mind, but it is an illustration of how good seed, falling upon good ground, springs up and bears fruit to the glory of God. We hope soon to print a poem from this brother, entitled "My King" which the writer says was suggested by a picture of Christ which appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST some time ago, below which was printed, "Our King."

The Christian-Evangelist Special to the San Francisco Convention.

It will be a great delight to go on the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special to the San Francisco convention on Aug. 17-24. This trip has been organized with a view to the comfort, enjoyment and restfulness of all who go with us. Every detail will have special care; your meals, sleeping arrangements, your baggage, etc., will have special attention.

The outward trip will be by the way of Denver, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak, and much of the grandest mountain scenery in the world.

Then on to Salt Lake City, and from there southwest over the new railroad to Los Angeles, where we will spend two days among the Orange Groves, the most beautiful country in the world. We shall then go northward to San Francisco for the convention, from the convention on to Portland, where the Lewis & Clark Exposition can be visited. Then the itinerary will be through Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, by way of the National Park, then through Wyoming, South Dakota, Nebraska, and home. Of course it is not necessary to take the northern route unless you desire it, but the expense will be only $6 more than to return direct from San Francisco.

There will be stop-overs at all important points, such as Colorado Springs, Manitou Springs, Salt Lake City, etc., where the most wonderful scenery of the American continent will delight all. In addition, the National Convention at San Francisco is sufficient of itself and will be worth a trip across the mountains to the Pacific Coast. This trip will be the opportunity of a lifetime to view the most remarkable scenery in the world. The railroad fare for this round trip will be from Kansas City and return, $56; from St. Louis and return, $62.50; from Chicago and return, $68.50. Double berth in tourist sleepers for the round trip will cost about $6 per person from Kansas City, $6.50 from St. Louis, and just twice this amount for Pullman sleepers. A large number of persons have already indicated their desire to take this opportunity to see the great West.

All the above tickets are good for ninety days, and you can stop over as long as you please west of Denver, Cheyenne and Billings at any place you desire, providing you get back within ninety days.

The trip will be as follows: We leave St. Louis on Aug. 10 at 9 P. M.; Kansas City, Aug. 11, 8:30 A. M.; Denver, Aug. 12, 5 A. M. Arrive at Colorado Springs 7:30 A. M., leave 11:30 A. Arrive at San Francisco, Aug. 17, 8 P. M. This is the way to go to see all that is grand and beautiful in a single trip. After the convention you can come home direct in a little more than three days. Or you can go north by way of Portland and stop a day or as long as you wish at the Lewis & Clark Exposition, then return home as indicated above. If, however, you would rather take the Oregon short line, you can do so, or if you wish to come home over a route still further north by the way of St. Paul, you can do so without additional cost. Do not forget that your tickets will be good for ninety days, and you can stop over at any point you wish. For further particulars write at once

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL,
2712 PINE STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

—D. W. Moore has recently celebrated seven years' work with the South street Christian church at Springfield, Mo. During that pastorate a total amount of $27,122.55 was received, and the financial growth was healthy. The increase in the collections for all mission work was over 100 per cent; last year the amount raised for this purpose being $1,218.46.

The church aids all our organized work, national, state and county. During the seven years Brother Moore has preached 788 sermons, organized two churches, dedicated two buildings, and had 593 additions, besides the usual heavy work of pastoral calls, funerals, public addresses, etc. The local membership is now 734 in the city, and 73 on the out-of-town list. Only half the membership could be seated if all should come to the church. Under these conditions it is not unlikely that a new and up-to-date building will be erected at no distant date on the lot that has already been contracted for. We congratulate Brother Moore on the fine showing of this church.

March Offering is Great.

During the month of March 1,711 churches sent offerings for foreign missions. This is a gain over the corresponding month last year of 274. The churches, as churches, gave $36,076.70, a gain of $6,239.05, or 21 per cent. The total receipts for the month amount to $44,840.97, a gain of $9,887.53, or 28 per cent. This is by far the best March record in the history of the Foreign Society.

For the first six months of the missionary year the receipts amount to $81,056.06, a gain of $22,839.96. If we can gain $15,841.44 between now and Sept. 30, we will land square on the $250,000 mark. We must not fail now!

Hundreds of churches have not responded. It is hoped they will do so in great haste.

Mr. Carnegie Gives $50,000 to Drake.

President Bell has just announced that Mr. Andrew Carnegie has notified the trustees of Drake university that he will give $50,000 for the erection of a library building on the campus on the condition that the trustees raise $50,000 additional for maintenance. And the president says there will be no question about Drake's meeting the condition, and an effort to raise the money will be at once inaugurated.

Pres. Bell had an interview with Mr. Carnegie in New York in February and secured a promise of a gift. Drake now has about 12,000 volumes. The new development will add immensely to the facilities now enjoyed by the students and townspeople.

The Drake College Building.

For many years Drake university felt the need of a commodious building for the Bible college, and many generous friends were solicited for donations to erect such a building. Just before the death of Governor Drake he agreed to give $10,000 on the condition that the dean of the Bible college would undertake the raising of $5,000 more. Dean Haggard, hoping that at least $25,000 could be raised, generously undertook this task, and began immediately to carry his promise into effect. After one year had expired the total amount raised, including $1,000 that had been given before the Governor's offer,, was $17,000. One other thousand was also promised on the condition that $24,000 be raised.

About the beginning of the present year R. A. Long, of Kansas City, gave a pledge of $200, and some days later F. H. Lemon, of Iowa, offered $100, provided nine other persons would give as much to complete an additional thousand by the first of February. This was raised as already reported in the Christian-Evangelist.

Almost immediately after this, one of the trustees of the university, who had already subscribed $500 for this purpose, offered another $100 on the condition that a thousand be completed by April 15; and efforts are now being made to raise this sum. Dean Haggard, in whose hands this enterprise has been placed, is making every effort to quicken the interest already taken by the brotherhood, and hopes to clear the nineteenth thousand within the time specified. In order to do this he has arranged to receive subscriptions of $100, $50, $20, $10, and $5.00. It is believed that by the time this thousand has been subscribed the effort will be so well advertised and the interest so intense that good people who are friends of the institution will quickly pledge sums large enough to complete the $25,000 in a short time, so that the building may be soon erected.

This building is needed, partly because the large attendance at the university crowds all its buildings beyond convenience, and partly because the classes of the Bible college are necessarily scattered hither and thither in such rooms as may be found available in the buildings which they already have. The inconvenience and irregularity of such circumstances greatly hinder the progress of the work. It is certain that if the sum named can be raised, a very commodious and worthy building can be constructed, and a beautiful site already belonging to the university and very near to the University church has been selected. When the Bible college building is completed the church will have reason to prize more highly than ever the work of Drake university, and be far more able to recommend its facilities to the whole brotherhood.

Dear Sirs: Jan. 11th, 1904.

Ever since I was in the Army, I had more or less kidney trouble, and within the past year it became so severe and complicated that I suffered everything and was much alarmed—my strength and power was fast leaving me. I saw an advertisement of Swamp-Root and wrote asking for advice. I began the use of the medicine and noted a decided improvement after taking Swamp-Root only a short time.

I continued its use and am thankful to say that I am entirely cured and strong. In order to be very sure about this, I had a doctor examine some of my water to-day and he pronounced it all right and in splendid condition.

I know that your Swamp-Root is purely vegetable and does not contain any harmful drugs. Thanking you for my complete recovery and recommending Swamp-Root to all sufferers, I am.

Very truly yours,
I. C. RICHARDSON.

Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything, but it promptly cures kidney, liver and bladder troubles, the symptoms of which are, obliged to pass your water frequently night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, poor digestion, sleeplessness, nervousness, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood, neuralgia, rheumatism, diabetes, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion, or Bright's disease.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty-cent and one-dollar. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

The Congress of Disciples—Continued

Miracles.

Owing to the absence of M. M. Davis, who had been originally appointed to prepare the paper on "The Gospel Miracles," there was found a place on the program for the presentation of the claims of the Bible-school work. This was entrusted by W. H. McClain to Professor Coler, of Ann Arbor, who made an able plea for specialization in Christian work, after which it fell to the lot of Howard T. Cree, of Augusta, Ga., who had been the selected reviewer, to give an original essay on the subject of the Gospel Miracles.

Howard T. Cree's paper was divided under three heads: 1. The possibility of miracles, philosophical in the realm of theory. 2. Credibility of miracles, scientific in realm of fact. 3. Place and purpose of miracles. The following is an abstract outline of the treatment under divisions one and three:

It is not a little remarkable that the great stumbling block to-day to many investigating the Christian religion for signs of its divine nature should be the statement of the very fact that in the apostolic age was the one convincing proof of its claims—the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The progress in natural science has resulted in the conviction that nothing happens abnormally, and a "miracle," which is an anomaly in the realm of "natural law," is unworthy of belief to a scientifically educated mind. If by "nature" is meant the sum total of all the mechanical and chemical forces of the universe, the implication being that there is no mode of existence than that perceived by the bodily senses, then a miracle is an impossibility. Such is the claim of the naturalist. But the operation of spiritual forces is just as real, just as familiar an experience, as the operation of material forces. An illustration of the intervention of spiritual forces in the phenomenal world, is found every time we exert our free will; originating impulse is in a region other than the physical and an intrusion into the realm of the physical. The fundamental characteristic of mind or spirit, in human personality, is self-consciousness and self-determination. "Matter subserves spirit constantly, but never is the reverse true." The material order is marvelously ministrant to spirit, and finite beings, finding it so, yet conscious they had no share in its original production, no control of its general course, infer that it must be guided by a spiritual Being of commensurate capacity and will. The possibility of a miracle involves the existence of God. Granting the existence of God, who stands in relation to nature both immanent in it, and transcendent to it, analagous to the relationship of mind and body, are these reasonable grounds for denying his intervention in the universe which he has made? Bushnell conceives of nature not as a final end for God, but an instrument to be played upon by him. If nature could not be so used and set in new conjunctions by God and his children, it would be a wall, a catacomb, and nothing more. From the action of human personality, there is no difficulty of conceiving analagous effects produced by wills other than human, divine, or it may be angelic or diabolic. Neither is it necessary to conceive of miracles as lawless, they may be wrought for a worthy end and in accordance with a wise plan; nor are they explicable on purely "natural" grounds. They may indeed be natural to God, if not natural to us.

* * * * *

The important position occupied by the miraculous element in the gospels leads to ask the function of that element. What mission does the miracle perform? Some have felt they were almost unnecessary appendages to the Christian revelation, now that the heart of the Christian message is discernible in the words of Jesus and commends itself to the conscience of man; the mission of miracles, so far as present purposes are concerned, is minimized if not altogether destroyed. To such Jesus as a "miracle-worker," is lowered to the level of a thaumaturge—wonder-worker. Older apologists have difficulty with this problem because they considered miracles mostly as mere credentials of the messenger that he has a special mission from God; "the ringing of the great bell of the universe in order to summon men to listen to the sermon." Doubtless this was in part the mission of miracles, especially in an age which expected them, but under such view they assume the position of detachable and dispensable incidents. Besides, the miraculous element is the chief thing and any kind of miracle would do; the thaumaturgical element is uppermost. Moreover such a view furnishes ground for the query, "If this was their function, why were they not perpetuated?" The newer view is to conceive of miracles not so much as credentials as revelatory, vehicles of the revelation itself. As such they take a position alongside of Christ's preaching to the poor and his kindly intercourse with social and moral outcasts. All proclaimed one grand, profoundly significant truth—the human sympathy of Jesus. All taught the sublime thought—the infinite importance of man, mind, body and soul. Jesus' healing acts became media of revelation, proclaiming the presence of a law altogether unique, revealing that the religion of Jesus was one of humanity. Likewise miracles by their character prove the religion one of redemption; mind and body were both redeemed, and all pointed to the redemption of the soul. His cures of bodies were but analogies of spiritual truths.

With Bushnell, "miracles are produced by immediate divine causality, wrought for a worthy end." That end is the reclamation of the race to oneness and fellowship with God.

C. C. Morrison, of Springfield, Ill., (there being no reviewer in this instance) supposing that he was to have 30 minutes, the time allowed to the regular reviewers, was cut off with the usual 15 minutes permitted to the leaders of discussion. Hence he was unable to complete his argument. He confessed he had never been able to construct a satisfying place in the universe for miracles as defined in the essay. He had no constructive contribution to the subject and would take the unsatisfactory one of destructive criticism. The problem, he said, was one of reconciling the particular with the universal.

Prof. C. M. Sharpe, in criticising the former speaker, maintained that the idea of progress and purpose in God prescribes that the habits of God do not rule out the uniqueness of what God brings to pass. J. M. Rudy, J. B. Briney and R. G. Frank also took part in the discussion.

The New Theology and Missions.

Prof. W. M. Forrest, of our Bible Chair at the University of Virginia, read a very able paper upon "The New Theology in its Bearings upon the Problem of Christian Missions," at the last session. The following is a synopsis of his paper:

The new theology, he said, is a process rather than a fixed body of dogmas. As a working definition for the purposes of this paper, we may say, the new theology is the systematic consideration of God and his universe, of Christ and man, their nature and relation, in the light of evolution, the higher and lower criticism of the scriptures; the new ethics, psychology and philosophy. It deals, in the main, with the same great questions that occupied the old theology. But it seeks to interpret them under the categories of modern thought, and in language intelligible to modern thinkers.

The problem of Christian missions is to secure the prayerful interest, money and workers necessary to the world's evangelization, and so to present the gospel to the non-Christian nations as to induce them to accept Christ. To determine the bearing of the new theology upon this problem, it is necessary to learn how it is affecting the message and message bearers abroad, and how it is influencing missionary zeal at home.

Abroad, the missionary deals largely with elementary truths. But in deciding how he shall present them, how he shall approach the problems growing out of the non-Christian religions, and how he shall defend his own religion, he may get much aid from the new theology and the related sciences of comparative religion and higher criticism. In the hands of able adherents of the ethnic faith, these modern systems and methods become offensive and defensive weapons. The sudden influx of the new thought among native converts is likely to work confusion and disaster. Yet the process is inevitable, and, in the end, aids rather than hinders the missionary.

Among the ways that modern thought might have an ill effect upon missionary zeal at home would be, by encouraging excessive speculation, by disturbing faith and by engendering strife in the church. In none of these respects is the new theology worse than the old, but rather better. There is less impractical theorizing now than formerly. Some destruction is always neccessary to any construction, and especially, to any reconstruction. Between radicals and conservatives there always has been and always will be contention. Progress holds a middle course between the two. Their discussions are necessary and can do no harm if both preserve a Christlike spirit.

It is encouraging to note that the century of modern progress has been also the century of missionary progress. Though the new thought is more and more gaining sway over the colleges of England and America, their students are more and more going to the foreign fields, or developing the zeal of their home churches. Missionary societies, missionaries, contributions, and converts have phenomenally increased in the recent past.

Further encouragement is found in the fact that whereas the work of criticism was in the hands of scoffing infidels like Voltaire and Paine, it is now conducted in the interest of the church by reverent scholars, who delight to wear the name of Christ.

The need of the hour, to still the strife, to banish all fears, to quicken missionary zeal, to conquer the world for Christ, is for theologians of every school, and disciples of every name, to come to the conviction that simple faith in the living Christ is the one thing essential for high and low, for those who are afar off, and those who are nigh.

G. D. Edwards, of Nevada, Mo., was the reviewer. He criticised the paper's conception of the New Theology and the position taken that what differentiates the new from the old theology, is the fact that the new is Christocentric. With a few other points of special criticism, he passed on to commendations and followed with a re-outlining of the subject:

1. The New Theology may affect the message itself (1) in its intent; (2) in its content; (3) in form. But does it? It does not affect the content of the message at all. It affects the intent somewhat. Both believe in saving men. But one works to save a man from his sins now in the belief that if this be accomplished the future can be trusted to take care of itself, while the other works more with a view to saving a man from the consequences of his sins in the hereafter. The chief effect of the New Theology is on the form of the message. The essential things for which Christ stands in a doctrinal, ethical, and spiritual way, are embodied in a series of dogmas compacted into a more or less systematic whole. This is true with respect to each of the theologies. But, even though the dogmas are given the same name, they are given such different interpretations that they virtually become new dogmas. Among these are the Fall of Man, the Incarnation, Atonement, Inspiration, Miracles, etc.

2. The New Theology may affect those responsible for giving money or life to missionary enterprise. If any change here it is in favor of the New Theology. Missionary zeal is not injured.

3. The form or method of carrying the message. (1) Organizations. This point is not material enough to merit further consideration. (2) Healing, teaching, preaching, and the different kinds of missionary activity. The method would not be materially affected. The proportion of the methods to each other might vary somewhat, teaching of a certain sort being given a more prominent place than it has held, and a certain kind of preaching receiving less emphasis. (3) Ritual, ceremony and such like. The New Theology conforms to customs which if dependent on it for existence would never have been originated. The New Theology magnifies the ethical and spiritual too much to give great weight to external observances. For it arbitrary commands do not exist.

4. The New Theology may affect the reception of the message on the part of those to whom it is sent. It has done so, and sometimes in a hurtful way. However, this was the fault of the old school missionaries rather than of the new theology. Taking everything together, the advantage here also is in favor of the new theology.

* * *

J. M. Philputt, of St. Louis, led the discussion, in which Prof. C. M. Sharpe, Pres. C. C. Rowlison and others took part. Dr. Philputt thought the paper was lucid, sane and fair. He said that the New Theology can never be anything but a process. Its very nature prohibits its results from settling into fixed dogmas. Each age must have new wine-skins into which to pour its new wine. The New Theology is, too, Christocentric, by which is meant that Christ is the key that unlocks all the treasure-houses of spiritual truth. Its influence in missions is indirect; it has given them freedom to think and a better understanding of, and more sympathy for, the ethnic religions. At home it has delivered us from the old-time speculative discussion and has given us more time for the real problems that confront us. The heart of the theology of the future will be the soul's personal relation to Christ.

A GROUP OF CONGRESS MEMBERS TAKEN FOR THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST IN FRONT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, COLUMBIA, MO.

FROM PLACE TO PLACE

Being southwestern evangelist for the A. C. M. S., the writer went to Lampasas, Tex., on Jan. 1 of this year to assist the brethren in buying a lot in the central part of the city and building a neat house of worship.

The weather was bad all winter, and our work was badly hindered, but we went to work as earnestly as possible. We first raised the money and purchased a beautiful lot on the main street of the town, for which we paid $800 cash. We then went to work on a subscription list for the building. In exactly two months and seventeen days from the time we began a telegram from Bro. Benj. L. Smith called us away to make a tour in behalf of the May offering. But our work at Lampasas was practically finished. We had secured the lot and paid for it and raised a subscription large enough to guarantee them a nice, comfortable stone church building. We got the building committee appointed and all things touching the building enterprise safely landed.

In obedience to Brother Smith's telegram, we boarded the train at Lampasas, Tex., for Joplin, Mo. We are now on the tour of 50 appointments in Missouri, Kansas, Illinois and Iowa. We find the church, in the main, strong and hopeful and led by as royal a set of pastors as can be found in the world. We are much encouraged over the prospect for the greatest May offering we have ever had. A number of churches we have visited will double and treble and even quadruple their apportionment. We doubled the apportionment at one place in five minutes, and we only gave the offering a start. It will, I am sure, be quadrupled. We collect no money, but where the pastor desires it, we pass pledge cards to be signed and collected at the May offering.

Just one thing is necessary to make this May offering a success, and that is this: let the preacher take the matter up with his church board, or at least with his church, as a serious matter, at least four weeks before the first Sunday in May. Let him determine to at least double the apportionment, for they are never half as large as the strength of the church will justify.

It takes a month to make a success of any kind of a missionary offering. It will take up the better part of three good sermons to state the winning facts of home missions. A man could not read the potent facts in a full hour if they were printed. Home missionary sermons will fire a church in a surprising way.

If the preacher will acquaint himself with these facts until they are a part of his own nerve and blood and bone he can set his audience on fire and nerve them up to double their apportionment to home missions as a first step, and often raise his salary as a second step. We, as a people, have "money to burn," and can take America if we can just create the habit of giving. No church has a minute to lose between now and the first Lord's day in May, if it make that offering a creditable one.

Monett, Mo. JOHN A. STEVENS.

Advertising Churches.

The churches about the Hub are advertising in the newspapers and street cars, and two or three use a sort of poster-bulletin, and now Tremont Temple aims to attract attention to its services by flying a long burgee from its flag staff. I'ts a blue starred streamer, with these words, "Strangers' Sabbath Home," and with a slight breeze the white letters standing out conspicuously make a good advertisement. —Printer's Ink.

Chicago Social Union Banquet

BY GEORGE A. CAMPBELL.

On March 20 over two hundred representative Disciples from a score of the Chicago churches met at the Lakota cafe to enjoy the sixth quarterly banquet of the city social union. These gatherings have become an important feature of our common life. After we eat and laugh together we are better ready for large co-operative work. The indirect road is often the quickest. Only recently have the Chicago Disciples begun to laugh together. We are now learning the value of the broadly human basis.

The subject of the last banquet, "The Union of the Baptists and Disciples," was of especial interest. A banquet is a good place to discuss union. The magnifying of differences seems inappropriate. Essentials appear in bold outline. I wonder if separation would have occurred if the consideration of differences had taken place around a banquet table over which the spirit of good cheer and humor presided, creating a human atmosphere which keeps people normal.

It might have been better if the Baptists had been invited to this gathering as well as the Disciples. As it was, there were three Disciple speakers and one Baptist. And the auditors were with three or four exceptions wholly Disciples. However, Dr. Soares, the Baptist speaker, was accorded the chief place on the program and acquitted himself with ability. Dr. E. S. Ames, the president of the union, acted as toastmaster in a most acceptable manner. The first joke was labored; but having the instinct of the orator he felt the wave of response coming from the auditors and "limbered up." The number of jokes "repeated" were more than I would want the brethren out of Chicago to know. As they were all new and good I cannot discriminate and have not room for them all.

C. C. Rowlison, president-elect of Hiram, was the first speaker. On account of having to take the train for the Congress his remarks were necessarily curtailed. He disavowed any patience with some who summed up the difference between the Baptists and Disciples in such a pat phrase as "You have to be baptized to be saved," say the Disciples, while "You have to be saved to be baptized," say the Baptists. After commenting on the narrowness of this view he proceeded to give the remainder of his time to remarks on the growing spirit of unity as affecting all people. He was somewhat fearful that in our strenuous advocacy of union that union which is already here might escape us. This present day union he illustrated by the prayer-meeting which he attended while at Harvard. There were all faiths represented—yet there was the unity of prayer and worship, which unity is overshadowing all the churches to-day. The Disciples ought not to be blind to this union. He thought union did not make faster progress in an organic way because of denominational customs and because each preacher is engaged with his local work. Closing he said the ideal union could only be secured when all had come under the influence of Christ and knew him the object of our common belief.

In introducing Dr. Theodore G. Soares, the pastor of the First Baptist church in Oak Park, a prominent suburb of Chicago, Mr. Ames quoted President Harper as once saying, "There is very little difference between Baptists and Disciples—that is, good Baptists and good Disciples." Dr. Soares is a small man and appears considerably under forty. In style he is clear, concise, courteous. He does not antagonize. His convictions when expressed have no sting. His position on things religious may be given to the understanding ones in one statement made towards the close of his address in language similar to this: "I believe there ought to be just two denominations, for there are two very marked temperaments which demand different denominations. There should be a sacramental denomination and a spiritual denomination. These began in the New Testament. There were the Judaizers—the first close communionists—and the other party who declared that neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availed anything. As soon as you attach essential value to the Lord's supper or baptism you belong to the sacramental faction and not to the spiritual." In hearing these words one could but wonder how large a percentage of the Baptist church the speaker would represent—and also of the Disciples. Dr. Soares in the beginning of his address pointed out the evils of division, using arguments very familiar to a body of Christian church members such as he was addressing. He showed how division encourages competition, is wasteful, causes churches to be too numerous in some fields, and far too scarce in communities that have much of wickedness but little of money to support religious work.

The argument that denominations are true expressions of different temperaments, he regarded as no longer tenable; for if all divisions were broken up, and afterwards formed according to the different temperaments, no one thinks that they would be as now existing.

Very courteously the speaker suggested that the Disciples were a denomination and their name in the necessity of the case must be a party name. Therefore, as much as he would like to wear just the name Christian, but being prevented by the present conditions, he was glad that the body to whom he was speaking was taking the more party name, the Disciples of Christ. The name "Populist," being too general, has had to go, so will the name Christian used as a party name.

As practical suggestions looking towards closer relations between the Baptists and the Christians the speaker suggested the following:

1. The recognition on part of each of the other's church letters.
2. The recognition by each church of the other's ordained ministry.
3. Exchange of ministers—a Baptist minister becoming pastor of a church of Disciples, when desirable and vice versa.
4. And any man who can thus step over the 2x4 separating us ought not to be called a jelly-fish—lacking backbone.
5. Comity. No conflicting over fields. No crowding into a community with both churches where there is but room for one.

C. G. Kindred followed with a very stirring and feeling address. He spoke of the sweet unity of prayer and worship that reaches beyond any denominational barriers. He eloquently pled for devotion to Christ and a passion for men. He said: "Although I can not see now what we as a body must give up in order for a united church, for all we hold seems true; yet if there is something wrong to be thrown overboard in order to bring a united church, powerful and mighty, may we come to have the grace and humility to be able to see what it is."

Following, Jno. R. Ewers spoke most emphatically in favor of bringing the two bodies together and was not in favor of delaying the wedding. Such sentences as these were sprinkled throughout his ardent plea: "The Baptists and Disciples ought never to have been separated." "In the seminary now we and the Baptists are one—when we go from its walls we will be separated by the faults of our grandfathers." "The hard shell deacon and the proverbial elder are now the barriers to union." "It is now old men for war and young men for counsel." "It is a crime for Disciples to start a church in the shadow of a great Baptist church."

Oliver W. Stewart, candidate for mayor, was the last speaker. He said if he were elected mayor he would solve this whole problem of union by giving all members of the Christian churches free transportation on all the street cars. He thought by that plan we would soon take all the others in. Mr. Stewart, as might be expected, saw union realized in that future day when every man confessing Christ would seek to serve him in every effort to usher in his kingdom of righteousness. "When every one of us is dead in earnest to make the world better we will have little time for absurd discussions of differences." The speaker thought union in fact would precede union in name. He wondered if, when the psychological moment for a great united forward movement comes—as come it will—the Disciples will be ready to grasp its meaning and its opportunity. He was somewhat fearful.

At eleven-thirty all were gone. Already the Disciples are planning to open two new missions in easy reach of large Baptist churches and the Baptist speaker is planning to move his church out of a churchless community to the side of five large churches of other bodies. Thus we talk. Thus we do.

I cannot refrain from raising the query, In communities in which we have no churches do more of our people find their way to Baptist churches than those of other bodies? Like a friend of mine, I raise the query to answer it myself. No. As many go to the Congregational and Presbyterian. Our young people get acquainted with these churches through the Union Endeavor meetings. They do not meet the Baptists.

We advise every one interested to get this free information now, for Miss Wetmore is very positive it will lead to their complete cure.

Dr. Madison.

I desire to call attention of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the full page (back cover) advertisement of Dr. P. Chester Madison. Some of our readers are acquainted with this eminent oculist and to them he needs no word of introduction, but to those who do not know of him or his work, I desire to say that as a man, as a member of the Church of Christ, and as an expert in his profession he bears an excellent reputation. His office, situated in the very heart of Chicago, is furnished with all the modern conveniences for first-class work. His office practice is of enormous proportions. Besides giving personal attention to this, Dr. Madison lectures at the College of Medicine and Surgery and is altogether a very busy and exceedingly useful man. Anyone needing the services of an oculist will do well to write to him, mentioning the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The Missouri Endeavor Increase Campaign.

President Sweeney of the Missouri Endeavor Union, was recently in conversation with the writer, and as the conversation drifted naturally to the Increase Campaign he asked me if I could not take up the work of publicity for our people through the columns of the Christian-Evangelist. Of course, I said I would if the matter could be arranged for the space in the paper. The editor very kindly opened the columns to the matter. So this first letter on the subject is going out to the public.

It occurred to me that something more than an agitation could be accomplished among our Endeavorers. The society at Maryville had just closed a campaign of four or five months, during which time the membership of the society had been increased from 75 to 166. The promptness with which the members entered the meeting, the general growth in knowledge and spirituality, and the liberality of the offerings, which amounted to something like $75 during the time of the campaign—these and other good things too numerous to mention gave me the thought of getting the plan ready for use throughout the state.

Copies of the "Maryville plan" are on hand for distribution, a tract explaining how to use the plan, and samples of the pledge cards and buttons, all of which will be sent to any society in the state writing for same. After carefully reading and studying these plans, you can call a meeting of your society, vote to join the forward movement, and write for buttons, get your printing done, set a day, and launch the campaign.

The campaign is now on. Sixteen societies are making the preliminary arrangements. The close of the campaign will be on the first Sunday in June. The society making the largest actual gain in membership during the time and having a delegate at the state convention at Marshall on the Endeavor days, June 17, 18, 19, will be given for one year the beautiful banner made expressly for this campaign. It will be a $5 pennant banner.

The United Society of Christian Endeavor will give to all societies in this campaign making a 25 per cent increase, a beautiful group picture, suitable for framing, as a recognition of the good work. Let every society send definite reports to me so I can send the names of all societies entitled to this recognition to the United Society.

Now, then, in the commonly accepted phrase of the day, "get busy." There is a great work before us from now until our state convention. Do you want your society to have a part in this work? Act at once.

More next week on the same subject. I will give a list of societies as they enter the campaign.

Good News from Drake.

The March meeting of the board of trustees of Drake university was considered one of the best meetings that that body ever held.

For some years the board has been striving to reach a basis upon which the university could carry on its great work without creating a deficit in the current expense fund. The outlook for the ensuing year is such as to justify the hope that the university will be able to do this work next year without creating any further deficit.

At this meeting, the by-laws of the board require that the salaries of the different members of the faculties shall be fixed for the ensuing year; also that any vacancies shall be filled. The board found that it was not only able to hope for no deficit another year, but, owing to the excellent outlook, they would be justified in increasing the salaries of the leading professors of the university and also that of the president. Few changes were made in the faculty. Dr. H. J. Hoeve, of Chicago, was elected to the chair of anatomy and pathology in the College of Medicine, vice Professor Kitterman, who resigned. Prof. Claude B. Davis, the principal of the School of Oratory, tendered his resignation to take effect at the end of the year. The resignation was accepted, but his successor has not yet been chosen. Here is an opening for a competent teacher who is a member of the church.

Dr. Clinton Lockhart of the College of the Bible was granted a leave of absence for the ensuing year in order that he may spend some time in Europe and Palestine. Prof. A. D. Veatch, who was for some years professor of Hebrew in the university, but who has been during the past year and more in Chicago university, was re-elected to his old position. The university is exceedingly fortunate in his return, as he is considered one of the ablest teachers of Semitic languages and Old Testament history that we have in the brotherhood.

Gifts to the amount of $10,000, $5,000 of which was from R. Z. McCoy, of Allerton, Ia., and $5,000 from other friends, were announced at the meeting by the field secretary. Brother McCoy paid his $5,000 to the financial secretary and was made, in accordance with the articles of incorporation, a life trustee of the university, and suitable resolutions were spread upon the minutes and a copy given to Brother McCoy.

The announcement of the endowment of a chair in the medical college by Brother and Sister A. G. Downing was also announced. Brother and Sister Downing undertook the endowment of this chair some ten years ago, and by great sacrifice have succeeded in completing the full amount. The purpose of this endowment is to further the training of medical missionaries. The board express the hope that Brother and Sister Downing may live many years to see the good work that will surely be accomplished by this splendid gift.

The board of trustees also took up the question of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the university in June, 1906. A committee was appointed and elaborate preparations are already being made to insure a large crowd of former students and teachers and friends of the university on that occasion. The committee of the board will act conjointly with committees from the alumni and faculty. All former students are asked to form university clubs in their respective localities for the purpose of furthering this notable event in the history of the school.

The board were much pleased with the progress made during the current school year, and anticipate larger things for the future.

Nebraska.

M. E. Miller, who will graduate from Cotner this June, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Exeter, beginning now and continuing until a year from Sept. 1, next.

D. C. Kratz has taken half time at Ox Bow, and will move to Angus shortly. Has half time to give to some other church near.

Exeter will build or buy a parsonage so that their new pastor will have a place to live when he is ready to move there.

W. B. Harter supplied at Greenwood, March 12. We may secure Brother Harter in Nebraska again.

L. A. Hussong was debarred from going to his pulpit at Wilbur last Lord's day, and supplied at Havelock instead. Two were added, one by letter and one reclaimed, who had formerly been a Methodist.

Three confessions at Clay Center, March 12, all adults. A. G. Smith is the pastor there.

Four recent confessions at Grand Island, under the regular preaching of pastor Z. O. Doward.

Twenty-three baptisms and nine other additions at Talmage, Melvin Putman meeting. Closed Tuesday after report was made.

J. S. Miller just closed a meeting with his home church at Edison, resulting in 21 additions.

District No. 2 convention at the First church, Lincoln, April 12-14.

The secretary spent Lord's day at Minden, March 12. The church is preparing for the Whiston meeting to begin March 19. The outlook is hopeful and the prospects good. The new seats add very materially to the appearance of the interior of the church.

On Monday evening I met with the church at Kearney, to discuss the situation there, and plan for the salary of a preacher. Prof. O. A. Thomas, principal of the city schools, will supply for them March 19.

Bro. Geo. Gray, of Kearney, will visit Elwood March 19.

Bro. Frank Janes reports 66 baptisms in his meeting at Marshalltown, Iowa. Will begin a meeting at Eddyville for the state board on the first or second Lord's day in April. Bro. Will Lintt was compelled to come home on account of his throat.

Geo. W. Muckley, church extension secretary, spoke at Cotner chapel and lectured to the students March 14. He made this office a very pleasant call.

Information comes that the $600 necessary to make the Lincoln First church a living link church for foreign missions has been pledged, and Miss Olive Griffith has been chosen as the representative of the church.

The B. B. Burton and Lucille Park meeting at Hastings closed March 12, and is counted a very successful meeting for the church. The large audiences that greeted Brother Burton were well pleased with the preaching. The exact number of additions can not be given now. The church will surely be greatly benefited both within and without.

Magnet has called S. A. Kopp for full time, and the work is to be pushed.

The St. Louis Letter.

The St. Louis letter writer has just returned from the Congress of the Disciples at Columbia. He is naturally fuller of Congress thought than any other. There are some things he would like to say and he knows of no better way to say them than through the St. Louis letter. He does not desire to be considered harshly critical, and nothing said here is in the spirit of harshness, but he would like to suggest a few things that may be of value to such assemblies.

The Congress was a great treat. Any one of our ministers who could have attended, and through indifference did not attend, has done himself an injury that he will never be able to overcome. The papers all moved on a high plane, and the spirit throughout was beautiful indeed. The addresses by our distinguished guest, Pres. H. C. King of Oberlin college, were alone worth the trip to Columbia.

The writer of this letter noticed one thing of which he desires to speak especially. It is with regard to the spirit of the old and the young men of the Congress. The man occupying the middle ground between the two positions is better calculated to judge of such things than a representative of either of the classes. There was a time when but few of our young men were recognized or expected to take any active part in our conventions and institutes. The old men were generally harshly critical. Many of the discussions were carried on in the spirit of vituperation The general spirit was dogmatic. Many of the young men did not have the reverence for the fathers that was conducive to the best interest of both. Throughout this last Congress the mutual spirit was most beautiful. If a young man had anything worth while to say, and many of them did have, they were treated most kindly by the fathers, and when one of the fathers arose to talk every young man in the house showed by his attention that he was sitting at the feet of one who could teach some of the things he ought to know. Every speech made by an old man was conciliatory, sympathetic, and most beautiful in spirit as well as thought. If any young man allowed himself to be carried off his feet for a moment he was generally followed by some father who would immediately pour a bountiful supply of oil on the troubled waters, and make him heartily ashamed that he permitted himself even for a moment to lose his balance.

One thing tended to injure several very excellent papers; they were entirely too long. The readers of the leading papers were allowed 50 minutes for their opening papers, which we think is 10 minutes too long. Even then several went from 10 to 25 minutes over time. Any man who is capable of writing a 40 minute paper for such an assembly as our Congress ought to be capable of cutting it down to the time allowed on the program. There was not a paper that went over time that would not have been a stronger paper if it had been pruned quite enough to bring it within time. We think it would be a good plan for program committees and presidents of assemblies to agree together, and whenever a man agrees to read a paper in so many minutes, to call him down at the end of that time whether he is through his paper or not; and the audience ought to support them in doing it.

Another little thing which provoked the writer to make a note of it was the reading of newspapers or books while a speaker was presenting the paper of the program. He noticed several persons with outspread papers before them sitting in conspicuous parts of the church while the regular program was being presented. The writer remembers about the greatest embarrassment he ever felt before one of our institutes was caused by a prominent brother sitting near the front of the church and reading a newspaper while he was trying to present an essay that had caused him weeks of hard labor. Of course this was thoughtless, and no offense was intended but it is a kind of thoughtlessness that is hardly excusable. No man who does such a thing would like to be treated in the same way. If a man be tired and has lost interest in the program and desires to spend a little while with his paper, he should quietly withdraw to some side room or take a walk on the street while the program is going on.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Avoid Imitations. John I. Brown & Son

Another habit into which many of our preachers have fallen, and which showed its influence especially in this Congress, is that of leaving before the close. The papers presented on Thursday morning were equal in every way, and in many respects superior to any papers read at any time during the Congress. And yet two-thirds of the brethren left before the papers were presented. Candidly, brethren, we think this is wrong. It is not fair to the men who prepare the papers. They put as much time and thought on their papers as do the others. They come as far to present them (one of the readers of the last papers spent nearly $50 to get to Columbia and return), they are as deserving of a fair hearing, as those who have the middle positions, and we do not treat them fairly when we all leave them simply because it is a little more convenient to us to do so.

The Columbia church is a beautiful structure. There is just one suggestion that we would like to make to the house committee, not of that church alone but of all of our churches, and that is to have the lights about the pulpit so arranged as to save people's eyes. It is one of the easiest things in the world to have a pulpit lighted so that a speaker may have a perfect light on his book or manuscript and the audience be spared the pain of looking straight into a glaring light all of the time. If the choir loft is directly behind the speaker and the choir have lights they should always be turned out during the time of the speaking. People with good strong eyes have no idea how much all this means to those not so fortunate. The writer lost half of the pleasure of the Monday and Tuesday evening services because he had to look straight into a glaring light in order to see the speaker.

The hospitality of the Columbia people was absolutely perfect. The writer, with Brothers Dungan, Hieronymus, Hart and Tyrrell, enjoyed the hospitable home and charming family of Brother Robnett whom we all learned to love. F. N. Calvin.

Ohio Letter.

Secretary Bartlett spent March 15-17 at Blanchester, helping to provide means for the debt on the new church. The meeting held by Brother Crites resulted in nine additions to the church. Blanchester has been influenced for years by Universalists' teaching, and while that church is losing ground every year, it will take time and patience to counteract the false teaching. Albert Stahl held a successful meeting at Brink Haven with about a score of additions. A pastor will be located at once. The semiannual meeting of district 19 was held at Cygnet, March 16, 17. The Ohio man was in attendance for Secretary Bartlett, and did some speech-making. The brethren came in large numbers and held an excellent convention. The new men in the district are: C. H. Bess of First church, Findlay; A. B. Cunningham, of Tiffin, and W. P. Carter, of Fostoria. H. C. Saum and wife, of Prairie Depot, will go from this district in September to India. They are well fitted for this work. B. L. Smith dropped in on the convention with his map of the United States, and all know what he talked about. He will spend five days in this district in the interest of the May offering. The unique feature of the convention was the address of W. H. Wagner, of Rising Sun, on Christian union. Brother Wagner is a Baptist preacher. He showed himself a clear thinker and Christian spirited man. He did not deal in taffy, but said his say boldly and kindly, and the happy feature of it was that we could all endorse all he said entirely, even in his basis of union, except that he spoke of "our organization." The Disciples of Christ have no organization. With a word of explanation as to this point, we can all unite with Brother Wagner at once. His address was well punctuated by amens and a hearty applause. Here is a suggestion, brethren; why not put a Baptist or Free Baptist on every district convention program for such an address? Let us hear them everywhere.

Miss Mary A. Lyons was severely burned by gasoline very recently. In cleaning some garments the gasoline ignited and her hands and face were badly burned. She has the sympathy and prayers of all Ohio Disciples.

W. B. Hartzog, a Baptist preacher of Cleveland, spoke to our preachers' meeting on Monday, March 20, on "How I Preach Baptism." This scribe was not able to be present, so will have to preach it in the old-fashioned way.

A brief note was in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST about the election of C. C. Rowlison, of Kenton, as president of Hiram college. While Brother Rowlison has been a preacher exclusively hitherto, his broad culture and success in the ministry ought to be a sufficient guarantee of his fitness for this very responsible place to which he is called. Hiram has a glorious history and fine prospects. The Ohio Disciples must stand by the institution and its new president, and increase, yea multiply, the usefulness of Hiram college.

We all rejoice in the very successful meeting at Hopedale. This church has, like many another, had its ups and downs. The half a hundred additions will put new blood in the veins, and ought to mean better service.

An Apostle of Cultured Evangelism.

W. J. DAWSON, IN CLEVELAND.

The foremost herald of the new evangelism has visited this city. He came Saturday, March 25, and left Tuesday, March 28. While here he delivered some five or six addresses which attracted much attention. It is interesting to study this man, whose message is so mighty and yet so very simple. Tall, dark, with a high, scholar's forehead, from which is combed back bushy black hair, Mr. Dawson is striking in appearance, if not exactly prepossessing. His voice is of considerable range, quite clear, though occasionally it falls to a whisper audible only to the hearers in the front seats. Compared with the other great preachers from across the sea who have recently visited us, Mr. Dawson holds his own. He seems to lack the keen analytic or expository skill of G. Campbell Morgan, as well as the sweet devotional style of F. B. Meyer; he has none of the nervous, highly dramatic power of Mark Guy Pearse, nor the bubbling, genial humor of John Robertson, of Glasgow, and yet it seemed to the writer that in evangelistic fervor he surpassed them all. So far as his style of preaching is concerned, Mr. Dawson himself says that it has been born anew. He is a scholar with scholarly tastes and instincts for all that is beautiful in art and literature, but he has sacrificed everything for a plain, pointed proclamation of the gospel. To win souls is his passion. It is not difficult to see that this passion has mastered him. I give an extract from his address before a great gathering of ministers and Christian workers last Sunday afternoon:

"Christianity has become respectable and is now very conventional. It is trammeled by many forms and customs. Over the primitive principles of the true Christianity we have erected a massive golden dome for a temple, but it is really its mausoleum.

"History shows that no sooner does Christianity return to its primitive principles in any age, than power comes back to it and there is a movement, a strong one, for the Christianizing of the world. You can point to all the changes in history and find that statement true. There was the Reformation when people started afresh with the simple principles. John Wesley forsook conventionality and now to-day there is a great church, the result of his return to the simple principles of Christianity. The causes are all the same, high respectability, overlooking of the working man, a regard for outward forms, all the same. It seems that the devil himself shuffles the cards, knowing full well that whatever card turns up it is the right one for him.

"Down in Manchester, England, some time ago, a company of ministers decided to have a united prayer-meeting. For one solid hour they discussed as to the most convenient time for holding the meeting. At last a minister rose and said he was tired of the arguing and suggested that the most inconvenient time be selected. That is true of many Christians of to-day. Their Christianity is merely a convenience, used at convenient times."

Surely it is an occasion for rejoicing that this is the man who contemplates coming to America next fall for a series of great union revival services. EDGAR D. JONES.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

[Telegram.]

CHAMPAIGN, ILL, March 3.—Interest intense. One hundred seventy-two to date. Continue. Marshall and Millard evangelists.—STEPHEN E. FISHER, minister.

[Telegram.]

Paris, Ill.—Forty-one added yesterday; over one hundred this week; five hundred and three to date; continue a few days. Totals: one hundred in nine days; two hundred in seventeen days; three hundred in twenty-four days; four hundred in thirty-one days; five hundred in thirty-seven days. Finis Idleman is an ideal co-worker; De Loss Smith, singing evangelist. God gives the increase.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

CALIFORNIA.

Imperial.—Three additions since last report. Two by statement and one by confession and baptism.—J. F. SLOAN.

Vacaville, March 26.—We had six additions this morning, making 14 in all this month, none of which has been reported; eight were by confession and baptism, three by letter, two by statement, one from the Baptists. These all came at our regular Sunday morning services, but some of them at least were doubtless the result of a union meeting, in which Bro. J. P. Boyd, a Baptist evangelist, did the preaching. This meeting closed a week ago and was a benefit to all the four churches co-operating, and a practical illustration of the economy of union. This is our second union meeting here, and we have about concluded that no other kind can be held successfully here. One of the ministers (a M. E.) said in our late meeting that he thought by another year the churches of Vacaville would be one.—J. E. DENTON.

ILLINOIS.

Mechanicsburg, March 27.—Had a splendid day yesterday, five added by letter and a good interest.—L. A. CHAPMAN.

Augusta, March 30.—I baptized two more here last night. The work is prosperous.—N. E. COREY.

INDIANA.

Noblesville.—Richard S. Martin closed a three weeks' meeting March 26. Large congregations heard him gladly. At times many were turned away. There were 60 additions—21 came at one service; 13 the last day. Brother Martin's visit has done us great good. Singing Evangelist Herbert Saunders did good service during the meeting.—E. B. BARNES.

Spartanburg, March 29.—Meeting at Lynn closed last Sunday night. Results, 15 additions and every one feeling good. We began here Monday night. Willis M. Cunningham, pastor, is doing the preaching.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, song evangelists.

Indianapolis, March 27.—Yesterday closed my third year as pastor of North Park church. There were 101 additions during the year, and 252 during the last three years. The Sunday-school has more than doubled. It has a men's Bible class with an enrolment of more than 150. We enter upon another year with bright prospects.—AUSTIN HUNTER.

CURE YOUR OWN KIDNEY

And Bladder Disease at Home at Small Cost—One Who Did Gladly Tells You How.

Mr. A. S. Hitchcock (the Clothier), East Hampton, Conn., says if any suffering man or woman will send him their address, he will, without any charge whatever, direct them to the perfect cure he so successfully used. We advise every one to take advantage of this free offer, for Mr. Hitchcock is positive it will result in their permanent cure.

Indianapolis, March 27.—There have been 20 added to the Third church during the month of March: 11 by confession and nine by letter.—CHAS. B. NEWMAN.

New Albany, March 29.—The S. M. Martin meeting of seven weeks' duration closed Sunday, March 26, with 143 added to the Central church. Four others made the good confession, but because of home and ecclesiastical opposition cannot be baptized. There were 100 baptisms, 26 from the denominations, 29 by letter and statement and one reinstated. This is the greatest meeting we have ever had in New Albany, and the opposition was about as strong as it could be made. One union revival, with 11 churches engaged, failing to diminish our crowds and to fill their own house, sent their evangelist home, and after a week's rest started in again with a stronger evangelist. In the meantime five pastors in the name of the New Albany ministerial association published resolutions condemning our meeting. This being treated with silent contempt, reacted to their injury. In the face of all this Brother Martin kept sweet, abused no one at any time and won for us such a victory as few men could have won under the circumstances. Everywhere you could hear religious discussions—on the street, in school rooms, lodge halls, club gatherings, social assemblies, etc. People sat astonished as they heard the scriptures unfolded. Many who did not, and possibly never will, unite with us, have had their faith so shaken in sectarianism as to be forever dissatisfied.—B. F. CATO.

IOWA.

Jefferson, March 20.—Three additions recently: two by confession and baptism, one by letter.—E. W. BOWERS.

Charles City, March 27.—Closed a three weeks' revival with 20 added. Mason City loaned W. W. Burks for eight days. Bro. D. L. Dunkleberger preached four days and I preached 10 days. This makes a total of 41 since I came here Oct. 1, 1904. Prof. W. E. Dorsa, of Farlin, Ia., led the singing.—G. A. HESS.

Knoxville.—The work is moving forward again after my sickness. I was quarantined 28 days and the church work was at a standstill. Seven new members were received last Sunday morning, making 37 by statement and confession in the past four months. There are four candidates for baptism. We are recipients of a donation of good things and a purse of free silver from the people.—F. E. DAY.

Villisca, March 27.—Six added since last report. Bible-school the largest in our history as a congregation. The church has unanimously invited me to remain with them a sixth year.—S. M. PERKINS.

Cherokee.—One addition—a young man.—S. R. REYNOLDS.

Carlisle.—There have been six additions at regular servives during the winter that have not been reported. Our effort to hold a meeting was defeated by the severe weather.

Ames, March 31.—We closed our two weeks' meeting March 19. Twelve came forward—four by confession and baptism. The pastor did the preaching. Buel A. Fuller, of Eureka, Ill., conducted the song service. The church feels encouraged. This is the fourth effort in special meetings by the pastor during his four years of service here, during which time more than 120 have been added to the church.—F. D. FERRALL, pastor.

Des Moines.—I held a meeting for the Ninth and Shaw church of three weeks. Eight persons responded to the invitation. We took the offering for foreign missions on the first Sunday in March and raised $5.28.—W. A. WEBSTER.

Deaf People Now Hear Whispers

Listening Machines Invented by a Kentuckian.

Invisible, When Worn, but Act Like Eye-Glasses.

Ever see a pair of Listening Machines?

They make the Deaf hear distinctly.

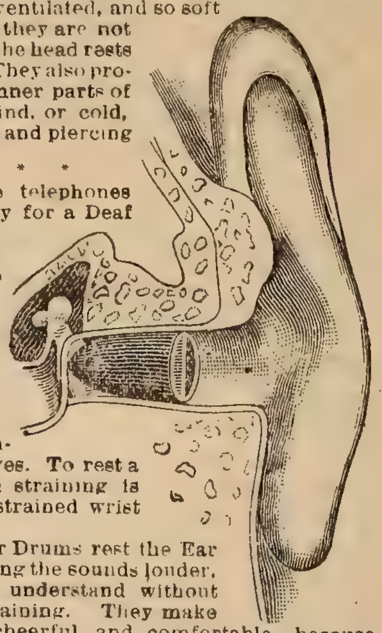
They are so soft in the ears one can't tell they are wearing them.

And, no one else can tell either, because they are out of sight when worn. Wilson's Ear Drums are to weak hearing what spectacles are to weak sight.

Because, they are sound-magnifiers, just as glasses are sight-magnifiers.

They rest the Ear Nerves by taking the strain off them—the strain of trying to hear dim sounds. They can be put into the ears, or taken out, in a minute, just as comfortably as spectacles can be put on and off.

And, they can be worn for weeks at a time, because they are ventilated, and so soft in the ear holes they are not felt even when the head rests on the pillow. They also protect any raw inner parts of the ear from wind, or cold, dust, or sudden and piercing sounds.



* * * *

These little telephones make it as easy for a Deaf person to hear weak sounds as spectacles make it easy to read fine print. And, the longer one wears them the better his hearing grows, because they rest up, and strengthen, the ear nerves. To rest a weak ear from straining is like resting a strained wrist from working.

Wilson's Ear Drums rest the Ear Nerves by making the sounds louder, so it is easy to understand without trying and straining. They make Deaf people cheerful and comfortable, because such people can talk with their friends without the friends having to shout back at them. They can hear without straining. It is the straining that puts such a queer, anxious look on the face of a deaf person.

* * * *

Wilson's Ear Drums make all the sound strike hard on the center of the human ear drum, instead of spreading it weakly all over the surface. It thus makes the center of the human ear drum vibrate ten times as much as if the same sound struck the whole drum head. It is this vibration of the ear drum that carries sound to the hearing Nerves. When we make the drum vibrate ten times as much we make the sound ten times as loud and ten times as easy to understand.

This is why people who had not in years heard a clock strike can now hear that same clock tick anywhere in the room, while wearing Wilson's Ear Drums.

Deafness, from any cause, ear-ache, buzzing noises in the head, raw and running ears, broken ear-drums, and other ear troubles, are relieved and cured (even after Ear Doctors have given up the cases), by the use of these comfortable little ear-resters and sound-magnifiers.

A sensible book, about Deafness, tells how they are made, and has printed in it letters from hundreds of people who are using them.

Clergymen, Lawyers, Physicians, Telegraph Operators, Trainmen, Workers in Boiler Shops and Foundries—four hundred people of all ranks who were Deaf, tell their experience in this free book. They tell how their hearing was brought back to them almost instantly, by the proper use of Wilson's Ear Drums.

Some of these very people may live near you, and be well known to you. What they have to say is mighty strong proof.

This book has been the means of making 326,000 Deaf people hear again. It will be mailed free to you if you merely write a post card for it today. Don't put off getting back your hearing. Write now, while you think of it. Get the free book of proof.

Write for it today to the Wilson Ear Drum Co. 188 Todd Building, Louisville, Ky.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

NECESSITY OF PRAYER.—Matt. 26:36-46.

It is very instructive to observe how large a place prayer fills in the life of Jesus. A sufficient answer to all the objections which skeptics have made to prayer is that he who is the acknowledged specialist and leader in religious teaching, both taught his disciples to pray and himself was often found in prayer.

Prayer as a Refuge from Trouble. The present lesson—Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane—presents our Lord in one of the great crises of his life. He has been betrayed into the hands of his enemies, and they are marching to the garden for his capture. He knows that the hour of his crucifixion is at hand. It was given to him in that hour to taste the bitterness of the cup of which he was soon to drink. There came upon him with all the vividness of reality not only the agony and shame of the cross, but, bitterest of all, the weight of the world's sin and sorrow. In such an hour there is no refuge for the soul but God, and there is no way by which God can become a refuge to us in such an hour but in prayer. How many a soul since the time of Jesus has felt the bitterness of its Gethsemane, and has sought refuge in prayer! However much we may forget to pray in times of joy and prosperity, when the shadows fall deeply about us, and the heart is crushed with its weight of sorrow, then it must cry unto God. Prayer is then a supreme necessity.

The Spirit of Prayer. Leaving his three chosen disciples a little ways, that he might be alone in his sacred sorrow, his thrice repeated prayer is, "My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt" (v. 39). This is the true spirit of all acceptable prayer. Gladly would Jesus have waived this cup of sorrow had it been possible for him to have accomplished his mission otherwise. He felt deeply its mysterious and awful bitterness. Nevertheless he prayed, "Not as I wilt, but as Thou wilt." It is not easy to utter these words in the presence of some great threatening sorrow which we would avert, if possible, but whoever prays in the spirit of Jesus must bring himself to this point of submission to the divine will. After all, if we but remember that God is our Father, and wishes only what is best for us, it ought not to be hard for us to put our case entirely in his hands.

Was the Prayer Answered? The cup did not pass. Jesus had to drink it to its bitterest dregs. Was the prayer then unanswered? It was answered. God heard the prayer, and sent an angel to minister to Jesus (Luke 22:43). God always gives us strength to bear the cup which he does not remove from us. Let us not be so foolish and unbelieving as to think that God does not hear us, and does not answer our petitions, if he does not grant us just what we ask for and in the way in which we expect. He knoweth best. Prayer accomplishes an infinite good for us if it only brings us in submission to the divine will.

Prayer. Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that we may come to Thee in our troubles as well as in our joys, and that we may always have the assurance that Thou dost hear our cries. We do not ask Thee to remove from us any cup of sorrow which thou seest to be best for us; rather would we pray with our Lord, "Thy will, not mine, be done." Nevertheless, we beseech Thee that Thou wouldst give us strength and grace for every burden, every sorrow, and every trial in our lives, that we may glorify Thy name, whether in life or in death. In Christ's name. Amen.

THE SUPPER AT BETHANY.

John 12:1-11.

Memory Verses, 2, 3.

Golden Text.—She hath done what she could.—Mark 14:8.

After the raising of Lazarus, for which Jesus had returned to the vicinity of Jerusalem, there was another period of retirement to the city of Ephraim, as the synoptic gospels inform us. Luke 17:11 to 19:28 tells of the events of this sojourn, which probably included a somewhat extensive but unrecorded journey to the north, for we find in Luke 17:11 (which is generally placed after John 11:54 where the retirement to Ephraim is recorded) this statement: "And it came to pass, as they were on the way to Jerusalem, that he was passing through the midst of Samaria and Galilee."

The passover was now at hand and Jews from all parts of the country were coming up to Jerusalem in large numbers. It was a matter of common wonder among them whether Jesus would come up to the feast (John 11:56). Perhaps they knew that it would be dangerous for him to appear openly in Jerusalem, or perhaps they gathered from the reports of his teaching which had gained currency that he no longer cared for the feasts and formalities of orthodox Judaism. But Jesus came. Doubtless the feast had a real religious value for him, and a much truer one than for his contemporaries, and besides, any occasion for an assembly of many people was an opportunity for him.

So, six days before the passover, probably on the eve of the Sabbath, Jesus and his disciples came into the village of Bethany, just outside of Jerusalem, to visit his friends, Mary and Martha and Lazarus. Jesus was their friend as well as their Lord and they entertained him with true friendly hospitality. To have raised a member of the family from the dead would have gone as far as anything could toward setting the miracle-worker apart from men as a being to be worshiped rather than associated with. But such was the personality of Jesus that this impulse was counterbalanced by the stronger impulse to treat him as a friend. So instead of setting up an altar to him they gave him a supper.

But it was no ordinary friendship. Mary's act of devotion shows something of its quality. After all it was worship but in the form of friendship. It was friendship rising to the sublimity of worship.

The foolish waste of precious ointment was an offense to the careful and short-sighted disciples. John says that Judas complained because he carried the purse and stole what was put in it, but Matthew (26:8) and Mark (14:4) describe a more general indignation among the disciples, who certainly had no such thievish motive for their criticism. And this latter phase of the matter seems by far the more suggestive. Honest men may perhaps not learn much from the gross dishonesty of a thief. But they may learn from the mistakes of good men.

The church, to be sure, needs good business management. If it collects money for religious uses, it should administer the funds so as to get a dollar's worth of results for every dollar expended. But the relation between religion and property can not be completely stated in terms of business administration. There are occasions which call for offerings to the Lord, not for the sake of the good that the offering will do or for the sake of the worthy "cause" that is to be helped, but because an overflowing heart demands an avenue of expression for its love. Sometimes such offerings will take directions which seem no more "practical" than the outpouring of the ointment. But the Lord to whose honor they are given is not displeased.

It is only because professedly Christian people are, to speak bluntly, so miserably stingy in their offerings to the Lord that we all get into the frame of mind which Jesus rebuked at this supper at Bethany, and insist on judging all gifts by visible and immediate objective results. The good "causes" in which we are rightly interested are always in such dire need of money that the necessity of getting, by hook or crook, enough to carry on their work decently, seems the most important aspect of the question of giving. It is impossible not to believe that Jesus was far more interested in getting men more thoroughly devoted to himself and to God than in persuading them to raise their average per capita contributions from ten to eleven cents because of the needs of the field or the poor.

GLORIFYING GOD IN OUR RECREATIONS.—1 Cor. 10:31; Ps. 16:5-11.

For the Leader.

As followers of the Lowly Nazarene, who was by no means sad and pessimistic and sour and out of touch with the world in which he lived, but who was, on the other hand, a cheerful man, a man of the people, going sometimes where the leaders of the strait laced Jewish sects thought he should not have gone, we have a right to the pleasures of this world, as well as the world to come. We must learn to distinguish what is true pleasure. We must know that Jesus' life was a happy one not in the sense of being one of "the boys," nor in the sense of the enjoyment of that which tendeth to vice, but in the sense of a knowledge of the true life and a cheerful giving of himself to its pursuits. All he did glorified God in the doing. He did nothing that did not glorify God. There is, then, a happy life for one to live in which every act and every turn will lead on to greater good in a world to come, and, while we are going on, bring greatest pleasure here. Let us see about this in the meeting to-night.

For the Members.

1. Recreation is necessary. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." The nerves need rest. In this modern world everything goes with a rush. There is little leisure for any of us save a very few who have no particular thing to do but to do nothing, and yet there is in the modern world a strenuous way of doing even nothing. It is not a sin to take time to rest oneself. Rest. Sweet rest. A real rest from toil and care. How many need just a rest.

2. But there is a sense or shade of meaning in recreation that is more than rest. It has reference to the occupation of mind and body aside from the regular work at one's business. In this to so conduct ourselves as to glorify God is the thought that is to be brought out of this topic. This is a hard thing to do if we have no well defined convictions to lead us. The recreation of the world is a thoughtless round of sport. It is not done to glorify anything. It is a gluttonous way of satisfying a crazed appetite for abnormal things.

3. If we are to do anything as unto God in order to derive benefit, if we are to intentionally do a thing in order to get credit for the intention of doing it, then the recreation of many clubs, resorts, excursions, etc., is an empty vanity so far as glorifying God in recreation is concerned. How many ever think of recreation as having anything to do with religious service? The people put it outside the pale of things necessary and religious. The people of the world would laugh at the thought of making anything of recreation save just what it is to them, a thoughtless way of gratifying a desire to do something that pleases for the moment.

4. Let us, then, make our sport, our recreation, as we do our daily toil, a part of our religion. That is to say, let us understand that its controlling motive must be associated with the true purpose of life, to live as the Creator would have us live, to fill the place in God's plan for every one of his children. When this is realized, there is the greatest glory possible to the Father. God is glorified in our recreation as well as in our toil, in our pleasures as well as in the common occupations of life. What a content this places in life. It gives the world a new meaning. An individual life is no longer a thing apart, but a service in common with all the works of God and an association with the good and devout of all the world.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Do I aim in all I do to let my choice and action glorify God, my Heavenly Father?

WHY $200,000 FOR HOME MISSIONS?

BECAUSE—We should correct our neglect of this great work.

BECAUSE—It is the ripest field in the world.

BECAUSE—It is our base of supplies. The Missions receiving assistance from our Home Treasury sent $2,340.66 to our Foreign Society in 1904.

BECAUSE—Our own brethren—our own flesh and blood are asking help to establish churches—we should certainly hear and heed their cry.

BECAUSE—The Home Board did more work last year than any previous year in our history—165 churches organized and 16,861 additions by our Home Missionaries. This work is a success.

BECAUSE—It is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ—to win souls in America. We should be about the Lord's business.

Ask your minister about the Offering the first Lord's Day in May. Full supplies of envelopes; literature, papers, etc., sent on application to the Secretary.

That Symposium.

Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—The "Symposium" in your recent issues is remarkable for its short cut simplicity and independence. I am not invited to eat at this special table, but I am hungry, and the food is "bread of Life" and the crumbs constrain me. The five stars which appeared in that one galaxy, seem to me real stars. They are all bright, but each one differs from the other.

How blessedly peculiar some men are, in tone, color and suggestiveness. Central to each is a phase of truth. What a wonderful addenda to our world is the atmosphere we breathe! Without this what would be of worth to man? Prayer in evangelical work is but soul-breathing. An evangelist without prayer is a man who does not breathe, although in a world of atmosphere. Our evangelists can hardly hope to succeed without prayer, as a man without breath cannot hope to be healthy. "Enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut thy door" (the natural eyes) "pray to thy Father who is in secret." Let the spectacular go. The Father that "seeth in secret" (without physical eyes) "shall reward thee openly." This communion results in effective action. Preaching without such communion is "walking in darkness," working without "the light that is in the life."

When a man can be healthy without breathing, then may an evangelist be truly successful without praying. Every real step of the soul's approach to God is taken in prayer. The life of each evangelist has its atmosphere. Neither he nor his audience can escape that fact, but both he and his audience can perpetually ascend. The atmosphere is always better further up.

That "Crank" and "Lodge Man"—An Explanation.

[We supposed we had made it clear in our "Notes and Comments" of last week that the widely advertised meeting of the Peoria church was not of the serious nature the newspaper reports indicated. The following letter reached us too late for insertion in our last issue. It gives some further light on the meeting.—Editor.]

Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—In your issue of March 23, under Notes and Comments, you have something to say concerning the notoriety the Peoria church lately has acquired, although you do not mention names. The matter has been advertised in the newspapers of the country, and commented on in an unpleasant way, though not unkindly; rather in the garbled, flippant, facetious style so characteristic of the age and country in which we live. We are very tired of hearing about it, and seeing again and again a "rehash" of the affair. I do not question that you published what you did with the best intentions, and granting the premises your conclusions must meet the approval of people of common sense everywhere. There are some errors, however, which I feel must be corrected, and that is my object in writing this letter. The "action" of the Peoria church in this now famous matter was not action at all in the parliamentary sense, and "members of the official board" did not do what was done. The chairman of the board is the writer of these lines, and he has not said, "It takes a crank and a mixer to move things."

To be as brief as possible, our pastor, Geo. B. Van Arsdall, resigned to take up the work at Cedar Rapids, Ia. The official board of the church voted that the chairman should appoint a committee, including himself, on securing a new pastor. This committee contains two elders, two deacons, and one man not a member of the board. One member of the committee suggested that we devote the time of the sermon on Sunday morning when the minister was to be away to a discussion on the part of the congregation as to the kind of man we ought to try to secure for our new pastor. The other members of the committee agreed to this, because one often hears it said that the "lay" members of the churches do not have much voice in securing the pastor, etc. Notices were sent to every family in the church, with postscript request to quite a number to be prepared to say something at the meeting.

The notices were enthusiastically responded to. The house was well filled, and many of the people stood up and had their say, everything being pleasant and good-natured. Only one member of the official board said anything, and only one of the committee on the new pastor. One "lay" brother did say the minister ought to be a lodge man in order to get men to come to church. A sister arose and replied that she believed that such a minister would be absorbed by the lodges without converting them. The latter sentiment, so far as one could judge, was the general opinion.

Now, of course, this sister's remarks did not appear in the newspaper reports of the meeting. Another man said, "We ought to have a minister who will be a crank on civic righteousness." No voting was done at all, and no resolution offered. The people listened to what was said, and adjourned, some feeling that the meeting, while not valuable, was at least harmless. The speeches were what one might expect in any church of the size in any city in the United States under the same circumstances. The mistake was to give an account of the meeting to the public press.

The word "crank" appearing in the last line of the report was taken out of its setting and put into the head-line by the editor-man. The good brother who gave the newspaper an account of the meeting, has repented and been forgiven. He did not know it was loaded. I hope other churches may profit by our experience.

Very truly,

Peoria, Ill. Chas. R. Vandervort.

Individual Communion Cup.

We are sure the following letter will be of interest to all our readers:

"After examining several Individual Communion Sets, our committee selected your service, which was a gift to us. To be candid, I was apprehensive of the innovation. But I would not now return to the old for the weight of both in gold. The Individual Service has, I believe, a spiritual significance, and emphasizes individual importance and individual indifference. It adds to the solemnity and sweet helpfulness of the Holy Ordinance, and we would not be without it. Your service is wholly satisfactory in every particular, and we thank you."

The above was written by Rev. Geo. Whitefield Mead, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Newport, R. I., to Geo. H. Springer, Mgr. of the Individual Comnunion Service, 256 Washington St., Boston, Mass. Dr. Mead is well known as the author of "Modern Methods in Sunday-school Work," and of "Modern Methods in Church Work."

Family Circle

Road to Grumbletown.

'Tis quite a straight and easy road
That leads to Grumbletown;
And those who wish can always find
A chance to journey down.

'Tis customary for the trip
To choose a rainy day—
When weather's fine one's not so apt
To care to go that way.

Just keep down Fretful Lane until
You come to Sulky Stile;
Where travelers often like to rest
In silence for awhile.

And then cross over Pouting Bridge,
Where Don't Care Brook flows down,
And just a little way beyond
You come to Grumbletown.

From what I learn this Grumbletown
Is not a pleasant place;
One never hears a cheerful word
Or sees a smiling face.

The children there are badly spoiled
And sure to fret and tease,
And all the grownup people, too,
Seem cross and hard to please.

The weather rarely is just right
In this peculiar spot;
'Tis either raining all the time,
Or else too cold or hot.

The blocks are stupid as can be;
The games are dull and old;
There's nothing new and nothing nice
In Grumbletown, I'm told.

And so, I've taken pains, my dears,
The easiest road to show,
That you may all be very sure
You never, never go!

"Post Office."

There is beguilement in the story of Rhoda's first party, to which Florence Tinsley Cox, in the April McClure's, takes this recent addition to the numerous family of magazine children. This dear little girl made her first courtesy to the public in "The Old Major." There were games at the party. One of them was a strange new game called "Post Office." It began by a little girl leaving the room mysteriously, and calling a little boy out into the hall to receive a letter.

"There's a letter in the post office for Davie Williams," she cried in a shrill, high voice that sounded frightened.

All the other little girls laughed. Davie Williams grew very red in the face, but he went out for his letter, and closed the door carefully behind him.

I wondered why he stayed so long, and what they could possibly be doing behind the door. It was very exciting. More little girls went out, and more little boys. Then Theodore Otway went out, and I heard my name.

He was waiting for me with his hands in his pockets.

"Hello," he said in a diffident way.

"Hello," I answered, shyly fingering my hair.

I looked about for the wonderful something which I had come to see. There was nothing, only the hall, and Theodore Otway, still with his hands in his pockets. Strange to say, he seemed embarrassed. He fidgeted. Still, it was nice out in the hall.

A DEFAULTING PAUPER

By James Buckham.

The ingratitude of human nature—even filial human nature—cries to heaven; and when Oliver Blinn was driven to the poorhouse there were not a few who inwardly cursed and openly condemned his son, John Blinn. The matter stood thus: Oliver Blinn, at the age of sixty-five, having accumulated a competency of ten thousand dollars by hard work and economy, was induced to make over farm and fortune to his son John, with the understanding that John and his wife should provide a comfortable home for him as long as he lived, care for him as son and daughter should, and supply the means for gratifying all his reasonable needs and desires. Unfortunately, however, this understanding was not made a written condition of Oliver Blinn's transfer of the property to his son, simply because the trustful old man did not dream that it would be necessary. But when John Blinn came into full and secure possession of his father's farm and bank account the true nature of the man began to crop out. He fell to treating his father like a beneficiary rather than an honored and loved benefactor. Every penny that went toward the old man's support or personal gratification was begrudged, and even the food the father ate was watched by his son and meanly commented upon. John's wife was like him, and between them they made Oliver Blinn's life miserable. But it was too late, if not to repent, at least to repair, his confiding generosity. He was too old to begin life over again, too old and wonted to leave the old homestead, with its hallowed associations of sainted wife and parents, and go out into the world to seek a new roof beneath which to end his days.

And then there was Beth—dear little Beth—his six-year-old granddaughter. Leave Beth? Why you might as well ask a miser to desert his gold as to ask Oliver Blinn to go where he could see no more the shining of that little sunny head. No! Oliver Blinn would rather live on crusts, and be insulted for taking them, than have his fortune and his farm back, and all the wealth and luxury of the world to boot, without darling Beth! And the child loved him as much as he loved her. It was a beautiful devotion, that between the old man and the little girl.

How could Oliver foreknow the tragedy that was to befall? The bitterness of his fate was beyond imagining. He knew that he could not leave Beth But that Beth could be taken away from him? Impossible! And yet so it fell out. John Blinn suddenly took a notion to go west and buy a ranch. He would take his family with him—all but father. The old man would be too much of a burden and expense, he said. If he could not shift for himself in his old haunts, the poorhouse was comfortable enough.

John sold the farm, including the homestead, at auction. It brought him about half what it was worth. But when a man gets the western fever he must have all the money he can scrape together, even at great sacrifice. The conclusion was brutally sprung at Oliver Blinn. He knew nothing about it until the day of the auction. Then John told him the whole scheme in a few heartless words:

"We can't take you, father, and we shan't," he concluded. "The place for a worn-out man of your age, who can't be of any assistance to those who support him, is the poorhouse. You've known that as long as I have, I dare say. I spoke to Mr. Blanchard the other day, and he said you would be welcome any time, if the selectmen agreed. I have talked with the selectmen, and there will be no opposition. Just you pack up what duds you want to take and go along over there, and it will be all right."

Oliver Blinn did not wake from the stunning effect of the blow dealt him by his son until some days after John and his family had started for the west. When he came to a realizing sense of life again he found himself domiciled at the poorhouse, but how he got there he could not remember. It was all like a dreadful nightmare to the old man. Beth was gone—they had taken her away! Had he seen her? Had he bidden her good-by? Had she kissed him? He could not remember. He must sit by the fire and think it all over.

It was late in the fall when John Blinn and his family went West; and all winter long Oliver Blinn sat by the fire in the poorhouse kitchen and thought it over. Mr. Blanchard, the keeper of the poorhouse, with his wife and all the "inmates," were very good to him. He had the warmest corner and the rocker with the thickest cushion, and all the time he wanted to think and think.

The winter and spring passed. June was drawing to a close, and for many weeks Oliver Blinn had been sitting out on the porch of the poorhouse to do his thinking. He had come no nearer the solution of his problem, but the fresh, sweet air, the sunlight, and the sight of growing things seemed to strengthen his body and make him feel more like the man he used to be.

Just before haying time two of the male paupers disappeared. They knew there was hard work coming on. The prospect of it put new life into halting, rheumatic feet and legs, and they went off like two boys a-roving.

"I guess we shall have to depend on you some, Oliver," said Mr. Blanchard. "You seem to be pretty able-bodied this summer, and there are only three of us men folks left to do the haying. I don't believe you're one of the kind that would run off, after being fed and cared for all the winter, just when you might make yourself useful to pay for it."

The bare insinuation hurt old Oliver Blinn, but he replied with dignity: "Mr. Blanchard, I have never been a defaulter in any sense, and you can depend upon it that I never shall be."

Two days after this conversation Mr. Blanchard was surprised to find a letter at the post office addressed to Mr. Oliver

Blinn. He brought it home and held it out to Oliver for several seconds before the hand of the wondering old man on the porch trembled forth to take it. The writing on the envelope was cramped and childish, and Oliver Blinn's heart throbbed as it had not for many days as he clumsily opened the missive. Then he leaned toward the fading light in the west and read:

"Dearest Grandpa: I have been studying hard to learn to write, so that I could send you a letter. I can do it now. I am not going to school now. Papa has faled. He put his money into a gold mind, and it is all gone. We are very poor now. I am hungry a good deal of the time. We live in a hut away out on the prary near Doxey, Kansas. I want to see you so much, grandpa. I love you so! I cried so when they took me away from you, and you looked so queer and pale. I cry now when I think about it. Can't you come and see me, grandpa?

"Your loving Beth."

Between the first and sixth days of July two remarkable things happened in Tunbridge: Gold was discovered near the head waters of Slater's Brook by a party of college students out camping—and Oliver Blinn disappeared from the poorhouse.

It was not at first considered at all remarkable that traces of gold should be discovered in Slater's Brook. It was while the Klondike craze was at its height, and few indeed were the New England brooks where some grains of the precious metal were not found. But the people were not prepared for the rush of prospectors that came down like the host of Sennacherib on the quiet village within a week of the time of the students' reported find, nor could they account for it until the papers suddenly informed them that among the nuggets taken from Slater's Brook by the first prospectors to follow up the students' discovery were two of solid gold weighing seven and five ounces, and half a dozen more weighing nearly an ounce. This was indeed a find, seeming to indicate a tremendously rich lode somewhere near the sources of the brook, with the possibility of much more back among the hills. The Klondike for the moment was overshadowed, and one would have thought that all the adventurers in New England were swooping down upon Slater's Brook.

No one was better acquainted with the mountains for miles around Tunbridge than Oliver Blinn. As a boy and young man he had tramped them and hunted and fished them, till he knew every brook, every hill, every cliff and cave and ledge in the whole township.

On the sixth day of July, when haying began on the poor farm, according to immemorial custom, there were only two 'hands" to start the work—Mr. Blanchard and the one male "inmate" who had not disappeared. Oliver Blinn was not there. And with him were missing one of Mrs. Blanchard's ten-quart pans and a small hammer from the toolhouse. It was evident that the old pauper had defaulted his duties in the hay field, belied his dignified assurance to Mr. Blanchard, and gone prospecting. That seemed to be the long and short of it; but no one could quite unstand the moral lapse of the strict old man, whose word had always been as good as his bond. But nobody else had read the crumpled letter in Grandpa Oliver Blinn's pocket!

After haying was over a party of farmers was made up to search for the old man. The Tunbridge gold craze by this time, like all other local crazes of its kind, had reached a bubble's bursting point and dissolved in thin air. No more nuggets had been found in Slater's Brook or any other brook in the vicinity. To be sure, some ten dollars' worth of gold in all had been laboriously washed out, but it was at an expense of not less than five hundred dollars' worth of time, labor and material. All the prospectors had gone, and Slater's Brook was quietly and decorously filling up the holes they had made in its channel. But Oliver Blinn had not come out of the woods. So they went in search of him.

Away back in the wildest tract of the township, where the bears still made paths through the berry patches, they found a piece of birch bark, with some blurred and weather-stained writing on it, thrust in a cleft stick beside the trail. On the bark was written: "Show what is folded in this to Mr. Blanchard at the poorhouse. He will know then why Oliver Blinn went back on his word."

Folded carefully inside the birch bark strip was Beth's little letter!

An hour or two later they found Oliver Blinn, hammer in hand, lying dead from starvation, exhaustion and exposure beneath a limestone ledge, out of which, in his ignorance, he had tried to wrest the precious metal that would emancipate little Beth—dear little Beth—from poverty and hunger. He had defaulted, and he had failed, poor old man! But there was something in his heart when he died that left a smile on his lips—such a smile as makes one very sure of the tender mercy of our God.—The Christian Advocate.

"A Wonder Worker of Science."

Luther Burbank, the California magician, has developed a verbena with a strong arbutus fragrance. He has made possible a new fruit, the plumcot, a combination of the common wild American plum, the Japanese plum and the apricot. He has accomplished what Darwin hinted at, but accepted with reservations—the grafting of one tree upon another and at the same time the transformation of the tree without fertilization, the accomplishment of a complete cross by the graft. The details of these and other experiments, Mr. Burbank's aims, beliefs and hopes in his work, will be the substance of William S. Harwood's article in the April Century, the second of two papers on "A Wonder Worker of Science."

The Heroic Period Celebrated by the Lewis and Clark Centennial.

It is a mistake to regard the Portland Exposition as a celebration solely of the Lewis and Clark centennial. It celebrates very much more than the feat of the two great American explorers finding the way from the Missouri to the Pacific. The real significance of the exposition is a public and national observance of the heroic period in the history of the American west. And however unheroic our practical commercialism has become, the exposition is a public reminder that all the prosperity, all the national achievement, in the great northwest had its fountain sources in the chimerical dreams of enthusiasts, who were reckoned of small account in their own day, if not actually regarded as fools; but, who, nevertheless, were made of the stuff to risk life and fortune to prove the faith that was in them. They asked no reward but to follow the light kindled by the fires of their own enthusiasm. It was to the great northwest that light led.

England, France and Spain were the actors in the hero-drama of the Atlantic coast. England, Spain, Russia and the newly organized United States acted the hero roles on the Pacific coast, with the important difference that, on the Pacific, the adventuring was nearly always a matter of individual and not of national effort.

Some one has said that there is no heroic period in American history similar to that of the robber barons and the sea Vikings of the older lands; that in America there is only a history of the beaver. That is in one sense perfectly true. But the history of the beaver is heroic. It was the beaver that lured the French westward to the Rockies. It was the little sable that led Russian Cossacks across Siberia to the Pacific; and it was the rare sea-otter that brought Americans, English and Russians around the world to the Pacific coast of America. Spain sought gold, but, like the prospector the world over, was discreetly secret about her findings, and if there was no precious metal, barely troubled to stake out a claim of first possession. Russia wanted furs; England land; but on the west coast the United States came into a heritage of all three.—The American Monthly Review of Reviews.

A Plucky Girl.

"A few years ago a wealthy woman in Denver had a housemaid who attracted the attention of such of her callers as had an eye to see, by her refinement and good breeding. After awhile she disappeared, and her former employer was strictly noncommittal as to her whereabouts, saying nothing except to speak in the highest terms of her qualities. The facts of the story came into my possession, and they are very interesting.

"The girl had been graduated from one of the big eastern colleges for women. She had taken the course at the expense of strenuous sacrifices on the part of her famliy, and was exceedingly anxious to become an earner at once upon her graduation. She was well fitted to step at once into a good pedagogic position.

"But at the very moment of graduation, coming under the care of a physician, he told her the sad news that her lungs were in very poor condition. They were not diseased, he said, and if she could go directly to a proper climate and live in it for some years they would in all probability become perfectly sound, but that by remaining where she was for the next few years she risked tuberculosis. There were tendencies to tuberculosis in her family and she took the advice to heart.

"She started straight for Colorado, hoping to get a school. But just at that time there was a serious agitation in the state over the risk to children of employing so many eastern consumptives in the schools. In response to the searching questions of each board of education to which she applied, her story would come out, and she could get no school. Rather than remain a burden upon her family for another day, she took a place as 'second girl.'

"It was a pretty sad time for her. At the time of graduation she had been engaged to a young college man. He had his start in life to make, and also owed something to his family in the way of helping to educate younger children. It was impossible for them to marry for a few years. When she took the place as a servant she wrote releasing him from the engagement. The man, however, who was a thoroughbred, refused the release. He wrote her to hold on, to get as much outdoor life as possible, build up her health, and eventually they would work out the problem. Two years later he stepped into a professor's berth in a college in the middle west. The pay was not plutocratic, but it enabled them to marry, and the housemaid became a professor's wife."—Correspondent of the New York Sun.

"Moral Suasion."

The writer knows a mother who strongly denounces corporal punishment, whose favorite method of punishment is to send her child to bed without supper, writes William H. Hamby in Good Housekeeping. Perhaps she thinks the gnawing of that child's empty stomach is soul punishment. Another who considers the use of the switch a relic of bloody days, will make her little girl sit for three hours in a straight chair.

In fact, most moral suasion is not moral suasion, it is simply a combination of everything that is not whipping.

The story is told of a small boy who was asked by his uncle if he got a whipping that day at school.

"Naw," said the boy, "they don't whip at our school."

"Don't?" said the uncle in surprise, "how do they make you mind?"

"Moral suasion," replied the boy shortly.

"What's that?"

"Oh, they stand us on the floor, keep us in at recess, make us toe a line, pull our ears, and jaw at us."

Rags and Paper.

The resurrection is symbolized by material things. We see old rags and paper put behind proper mechanism, and it rolls out clear, firm, white paper—no spot.

Anti-Hat-Plume Crusade.

Herbert K. Job, the famous nature photographer and writer, tells Country Life in America for April how he visited what is perhaps the last largest remaining egret rookery in North America. It is from these birds that women's hat plumes are taken. Each year 200,000 of these white herons are shot down in the sacred name of millinery.

It should be understood at the outset that these plumes—which are variously called by milliners "aigrettes," "stubs" or "ospreys," and are dyed to whatever color is fashionable—are borne by herons, and that only during the nuptial season, and can be secured only by shooting the birds when they have assembled in colonies to breed, when their usual shyness has departed, owing to the strength of the parental instinct. Returning to their nests, they are shot down and their young are left to starve.

Let it be nailed as a trade lie that these plumes are secured in any other way. In all my explorations of these rookeries I have found but one solitary "aigrette" feather, badly worn at that. It is inconceivable, impossible, that anyone could find them in paying quantities, scattered about in these morasses and jungles. Neither are they manufactured. This lie has also been "nailed," as when recently a leading firm in England—for whom the claim had been made—although challenged to show one single manufactured plume, was unable to do so. Manufactured aigrettes and hens' teeth belong to the same class.

The Advance Society.

Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "I am almost ashamed to send my report—it should have been sent six weeks ago. The keeping of the Av. S. rules has become a part of my life, and I cannot but keep them, should I want to do otherwise; but the making out of the report is different." (What do you all think of getting into the habit of reading history, poetry and Bible, till you can't quit? Beats some other habits I might mention, doesn't it! Better join the Advance Society, where these good habits are formed.) Harriet E. Dunn, Malta Bend, Mo.: "I am celebrating Washington's birthday by sending a dime, either for our dear missionary or for Charlie. I liked the 'Green Witch' very much, but I was sorry for Marget. We are to have a Blind Boone concert in our church. The janitor told my cousin and me, he wanted to give us reserved seats next the front, but we told him we didn't care about it, as Boone couldn't see how pretty we were, anyway." (If he could, do you think he would be scared off the keys?) "My best wishes for Charlie and the brave missionary." Grace Everest, Oklahoma City: "Must I send my report each quarter, or wait until all are finished, then send? I do not care for history, but the work as a whole is very interesting. For Bible reading, I go by the Sunday-school quarterly references. Each week I try to live up to the quotation I select." (Splendid idea, and you get twice as much out of your quotation that way. I'd rather have the report each quarter as you finish, but you can wait if you prefer. If you'll keep at it, you'll finally get to liking history, and no one can make the most of himself until he has a sound knowledge of what the world has done, suffered and achieved.)

Lorena Ora Frank, Clay City, Ill.: "I enclose a dollar from my grandma, Mrs. E. Hulen, a dollar from my mamma, and 50 cents of my own; half for crippled Charlie and half for our missionary. Mamma and I wish to join the Av. S. Mamma's name is Hester A. Frank, age . . . . I am the unlucky number, 13. We began the rules Feb. 11. My mamma and Miss Tena of the Orphans' Home (where Charlie lives) were old schoolmates. Charlie is fortunate to have such a kind matron as Miss Tena. Success to the Av. S." May Speece, Bucklin, Mo.: "I have written a letter to Drusie Malott, but have forgotten her address; I send it, asking you to please mail it for me. After paying postage, please put the rest of the money in the missionary fund." (It will be a real pleasure to Drusie to get a letter from one of our members. Postage is five cents for each half ounce. Anybody else feel like writing to her, in her far away Chinese field?) Walter S. Whitacre, Mt. Vernon, Ill.: "On receiving the Christian-Evangelist yesterday, I learned that I had won 'Adnah' as a prize, which was a great surprise. It came this morning. I feel a great interest in the success of our missionary undertaking. My interest in Miss Drusie has prompted me to write the inclosed verses." (I sent the poem to the Family Circle.) Mrs. W. P. Bowman, Spivey, Kan.: "I inclose $5 to be used for Drusie R. Malott." Mrs. S., Bronaugh, Mo.: "I inclose 75 cents for the benefit of Charlie, the little orphan boy. God bless him, and may he grow up to be a good man, and help to make this old world a better place." S. A. Seat, Hematite, Mo.: "I send $1 for our missionary. I read her letter in the Christian-Evangelist. She is showing her faith, and God is caring for her." G. E. Wiggle, Bellmont, Ill.: "It gives me great pleasure to inclose you the sum of $4, the proceeds of a quilt made by my Sunday-school class, to be used as follows: $1.50 for orphan Charlie, and $2.50 for our brave and beloved Drusie Malott. I inclose a stamp for a reply, because my children will expect an answer." (Bless their hearts for the noble work they have done, and bless yours for that stamp! What do you think of a Sunday-school like that—a class that is doing something, not just going to church, but both going and working for missions and orphans? What is your Sunday-school class doing? I want everybody to read this letter from Drusie—then say if they don't think a little money invested in our missionary will bring big interest.)

Drusie R. Malott, South Chih-li Mission, Taiming fu, N. China: "Six months have passed away since I left Louisville, and three since I saw the homeland, but months full of blessedness and the joy of the Lord. It is wonderful how God has opened the way, and led me and cared for me. We have just held a two days' sachuhui (big meeting). Many came from villages round about. Some were blessedly saved. Seven were baptized. Pray for these native Christians, that they may be established in the faith. Pray the Lord to send more laborers to tell the glad story to those who have never heard the name of Jesus." (Reader, think of it! Thousands and thousands have never even heard the name of Jesus, yet some of us at home are arguing about organs!) "The first Tuesday in each month is our special day of fasting and prayer. We had a blessed day the last time, meeting for two hours in the early morning. Most of the time we were on our knees in prayer, but there were many glad songs, and some were not ready to close, but continued their devotions in their rooms; and a real shout of 'Glory!' burst forth at the supper table. God bless thee and keep thee and use thee in his glad service till he come." (There is a reality about this religion—the reality that the Chinese must see to recognize. Over here, we are so afraid of ridicule, so engrossed with the thought of self—how we appear—what our neighbors will think of us! Fancy a band composed of persons of at least a dozen different denominations, all sitting at the supper table—Methodists and Baptists and Presbyterians and all the rest—and a glad, exultant cry to God bursting spontaneously from every throat! This China band of missions held their religious services every day even on the ship that carried them from America. It was not in vain. One of the rough seamen said, "Last night I heard the steward praying, and when I heard him praying for the China band, I had to get down on my knees and pray, too!" The chief officer was an agnostic; when he left Japan with the crew, he cordially hated all missionaries. "On bidding us good-by at Taku," says the leader of Drusie's band, "with moistened eyes he looked forward with us to a meeting in heaven.")

A Friend, Springfield: "I send one dollar for orphan Charlie." Vessie Porter, Hiawatha, Kan.: "I will let you know how sunny Kansas is. Thanksgiving our school gave an entertainment. The house was packed but I believe I could have found room for you if you had come." (I can sit pretty close, sometimes.) "I spoke a piece, played the organ and acted in the dialogues, and was so tired I could hardly stand up; and we had a box supper afterwards; some sold for 10 cents, but we made over nine dollars. I send a nickel for our orphan; perhaps it will help buy something for him.") Indeed it will. He can get two palm-leaf fans with that much. "My oldest sister, Minnie, is in St. Joseph, now; it is near your home, isn't it?" (Just 30 miles away, and we call it "St. Jo.") "I think I'll go to Hiawatha academy next year; won't that be nice, though?" (I'll be real proud of you, yet!) "I will close with love to all the girls" (and the boys can go 'way back and sit down). Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: "I send 20 cents for Charlie and Drusie. I had kept the Av. S. rules six weeks when one Sunday, 14 of my cousins came to see me and I forgot my Bible verse, so I began over. May Speece must withdraw her motion about expelling Josie Lineberry, as we have invited those who are married into the Av. S." Mabel G. Damerell, Walnut, Kan.: "I send 50 cents, half for Charlie, half for Drusie." E. E. Herriman, Mooresville, Mo., sends a dollar for Charlie. Mrs. J. M. Tosh, Greenfield, Tenn., sends a dollar for Charlie and Drusie. Mrs. J. R. Goodwin, Abeline, Kan.: "You said you were going to open a birthday box for the missionary on your birthday. As February 11 is also my birthday we will celebrate it by giving instead of receiving. So I enclose a dollar for Drusie—may God bless her in her work!—and 25 cents for orphan Charlie. May God bless you all." Claire Saunders, Ozark, Ark.: "I have just been trying ever since I sent my first report to get on the Honor List again and have just succeeded for a second quarter. To-morrow is your birthday; we will remember you again. I am glad you're writing a new story." M. Emily Day, Sparta, Mo.: "We have lost our dear father since I last wrote to you. We miss him very much every day, for he was a dear, noble father. When Ruth visited in Springfield, she wrote you a long letter and watched every week for it, but in about three months it was returned to her with 'no address' written on the envelope. Yes, I knew that mice sang. My aunt once had a mouse in the house that sang so they could not sleep so they gave chase and succeeded in taking mousie prisoner. They put him in a cage in the woodshed, where the cat upset the cage and ate the singer for his dinner." (His tastes must be similar to those of Felix.) "Donnie Swift said she was not acquainted with us. I always read her letters with pleasure and feel she is kin to us because she lives in the same county." New HONOR LIST: Mabel Damerell (eighth quarter); Edna Bear (sixth); Ruth Sampsel (ninth and tenth—Warrensburg, Mo.); Bertha Beesley (twenty-fifth).

Current Events.

The Chicago Election.

Judge Edward F. Dunne (Dem.) was elected mayor of Chicago last Tuesday, by a plurality of 24,061 over John M. Harlan (Rep.). The issue was a phase of municipal ownership. Both parties favored ownership of the street railways by the city. The Republicans had a plan looking to that as an ultimate goal, while the Democratic program called for immediate ownership. The latter position obviously had the advantage in some respects. It is easier to work up enthusiasm over doing something now than over doing the same thing ten years from now. The Republican candidate owed his defeat to the resentment which a large element of his party cherished against him on account of his past revolts against the party machine. Mr. Harlan is a born independent. For many years he has been a strenuous fighter for whatever he thought was right in Chicago politics, and, while he has always called himself a Republican, his ideas of right have not always coincided with those of the party managers. A few years ago he had the temerity to bolt the party ticket and run for mayor as an independent candidate. Now that he and his friends had captured the machine, he expected it to support him with enthusiasm and singleness of heart. But the men who had constituted the old machine were not captured, though the machine was. The extent of this resentment is shown by the fact that Harlan ran far behind his ticket. A Republican city council was elected. Two years ago Carter Harrison (Dem.) received a plurality of only 7,000. Last November Roosevelt received 109,000 plurality in Chicago. And now a Democratic mayor is elected by a margin of 24,000.

Democratic Intentions.

The success of the Democracy in Chicago on an issue closely approaching what some people call socialism will give comfort and support to that large element in the party which believes that success is to be found in the direction of radicalism. Mr. Bryan of course stands pre-eminent among those who believe that being a Democrat is at the other pole from being a Republican, and that the policy for the party to pursue is not one of microscopic criticism upon details of Republican administration but of bold adventure into new fields. In a recent speech in Des Moines before the Iowa Democrats he gave the watchword "Back to the people" as expressing the tendency which is beginning to make itself effective in reaction against the spirit of combination and centralization, and also as representing the principle upon which Democratic reconstruction must take place. In the course of this address Mr. Bryan said:

> This tendency to restore to the people their lost rights and to put them in possession of their own affairs is not going to stop with the trust question or with the railroad question. It will extend to every issue. When applied to the tariff question, it will put an end to the system that has been in vogue for a quarter of a century under which the manufacturers have been permitted to write the schedules and determine the amount of the collections that they must take from the people through the operation of high tariff laws.
> The doctrine that a few financiers can safely be permitted to dictate the financial policy of a nation will be overthrown with the overthrow of the doctrine that railroad magnates can safely be allowed to control the traffic of the nation, or trust magnates the industries of the country.
>
> As to-day organized, the Republican party is under the control of the corporations. The reform element in the party is protesting and demanding that this leadership shall be overthrown. However much Democrats may wish to see the reform element in the Republican party successful in its efforts to control the party, it is inevitable that the triumph of the reform element must come through convulsions in the Republican party as the reform element came through a convulsion in the Democratic party. But out of these convulsions will come good; reform can come in no other way.
> The Democratic party has lost in three campaigns and the majority has increased, and yet the party is stronger to-day than it has been any time since the polls closed in 1892, because it stands upon solid ground, and because events have been proving the correctness of the position taken by it.

In an interview the next day Mr. Bryan said that no re-organization was needed in the party, but that the movement is "to put the radical and progressive element in more complete control."

Business at Panama.

Dissatisfied with the progress of affairs at Panama, the President has undertaken and carried through with characteristic vigor a complete re-organization of the force. The resignations of the seven members of the Isthmian Canal Commission were requested and received. The President's wish was to concentrate the authority and the responsibility in as few hands as possible. Since the law required that the commission be composed of seven members, he secured the concentration necessary for effectiveness by giving most of the authority to three of the number. These are: Theodore P. Shouts, chairman; Charles E. Magoon, governor of the canal zone; and John F. Wallace, chief engineer. These are the men who will really do the work. The other four members are Rear Admiral M. T. Endicott, Brigadier General Peter C. Haines, Colonel Oswald M. Ernest, and Benjamin M. Harrod. Harrod is the only member of the former commission who was re-appointed. The members of the commission have been chosen with regard solely to their reputation for practical efficiency, and they have been given to understand that they will be held rigidly accountable for results. They are there to produce a canal, and the character and record of the men are ample ground for believing that they will do it.

The Distribution of Immigrants.

The volume of immigration into the United States was somewhat less last year than was expected, but this year is making up for the deficiencies of last. During the months of February and March, there were almost twice as many arrivals as there were during the corresponding months of last year. It is easy to estimate that the total influx for the calendar year will be well over one million. One of the most serious aspects of the situation is the tendency of these fresh immigrants to settle down permanently in New York. This course is doubly objectionable: they are bad for New York, and New York is bad for them. In the ordinary course of things, at least one-third of these immigrants will stay in New York and less than one-third will ever get any appreciable distance from the Atlantic coast. The Bureau of Immigration is trying to devise plans which will encourage a westward and southward movement among these newcomers. One method that has been suggested is to establish at Ellis Island a permanent exposition of the resources and advantages of the various states of the south and west. To those of us who live west of the Alleghanies it may seem strange that so large a proportion of these people elect to stay where they have the least chance to profit by the opportunities and resources of our great country. The reason, of course, is that they know nothing about the country. And when one reflects that a considerable proportion of the intelligent native population of New York is practically oblivious to the existence of anything west of the Hudson river, it is scarcely surprising that the ignorant Italians, Poles and Hungarians who land at New York by thousands every week do not have any very adequate conception of the relative advantages of Texas, Nebraska or North Dakota as compared with the slums of New York. It might be well also to raise the property requirement for entrance, so that those who are convinced that they had better go west will have money enough to go.

A Maritime League.

It is announced that an organization composed of a large number of prominent public men has been formed to foster the interests of American shipping. It is to be called the American Maritime League. There is already a long membership roll including some of the leaders of the administration and powerful representatives of political and industrial interests in a score or more of states. A magazine is to be established at Washington and various means will be employed to create public sentiment. As a general proposition there is no harm in creating public sentiment in favor of the strengthening of our merchant marine. But the point toward which such effort, in this case at least, obviously tends is the ship subsidy program. A country which is calling for tariff revision will not be pleased by a proposition to go even beyond the limits of protection by tariff and enter upon an era of bounties and subsidies. The lobbies are too potent. The chances of abuse are too numerous. Even the theory is of too doubtful validity—and the ship subsidy scheme is far more defensible in theory than in practice. The Maritime League looks ominous.

The Nippur Library.

We are less accustomed in this country to academic scandals than to political and commercial scandals, and consequently the criminations and recriminations which have been passing back and forth between Dr. John P. Peters and Prof. H. V. Hilprecht have caused the greatest amazement. It must be remembered that several years ago Professor Hilprecht, who succeeded Dr. Peters as Assyriologist for the University of Pennsylvania, headed an exploring expedition which unearthed at Nippur, in Babylonia, what was reported to be a "temple library" which would unquestionably be the richest and most important collection of Babylonian literature yet discovered. It has been occasion of growing surprise and discontent that this collection has not been edited or published, that Professor Hilprecht has apparently neither translated the tablets himself nor given anyone else an opportunity to do so. Only five of the tablets, out of several hundred, have been published. And the worst of it is that Dr. Peters now charges that some of these five were secured under his own directorship years before the explorations at Nippur, and that others come from an entirely different region. The statement of Dr. Peters was first made to the trustees, to whom Professor Hilprecht is responsible, who were unable to get from him any explanation or refutation of the charges, whereupon six of them resigned. Professor Hilprecht has at last gone so far as to state that he is preparing a statement by which he will be completely justified. It is sincerely to be hoped that he will. It would be calamitous to have this wonderful "temple library" turn out to be nothing more than a lot of old business records similar to any number of other collections which have been discovered. And it would be far more calamitous to have an honored scholar and university professor proven guilty of so miserable a piece of deception.

Steeples.

There has undoubtedly come a great change in church architecture. Some remarks of the secretary of the church extension society of the Methodist Episcopal church would seem to indicate that in the future there are to be fewer steeples holding up the Methodist banner. "Steeples," says Dr. Forbes, "are relics of barbarism, and were used to point to heaven when it was thought the world was flat. Now that it is known that the world is round, they point the wrong way and should be demolished. There is enough money wasted on church steeples to pay the debts of the entire country."

In Spite of the Senate.

We are not among those who believe that President Roosevelt cherishes any sinister intentions regarding that clause of the constitution which declares that, in making treaties, the executive must act "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." But he likes to see things done when they need doing. A method has been found to meet the emergency in Santo Domingo in spite of the Senate's refusal to ratify the treaty. That instrument, which the Senate failed to ratify largely (not solely, of course,) because it conceived that it had not been consulted early enough, provided that the United States government, by officials appointed by the President, should collect the customs of Santo Domingo and apply 55 per cent of the receipts to the liquidation of valid claims against that government. The Senate did not reject the treaty but adjourned without ratifying it. The plan now is for the customs to be collected by certain Americans who are actually though not officially designated by the President but who are commissioned solely by President Morales. They will deposit 55 per cent of the receipts in a New York bank until the Senate acts upon the treaty at its next session. If the treaty is adopted, the money will be paid to the creditors; if not, it will be paid to the government of Santo Domingo.

Christian Conscience and Municipality.

The movement for separating municipal government from party politics is spreading. Colorado Springs is one of the latest examples where the people have won a victory for themselves against the political machine. The fight has been a fierce one, and we are not surprised to learn that Crayton S. Brooks has been one of the leaders in it, on the side of the reformers. The Denver Times quotes Brother Brooks as follows:

> "I have seen a great deal of political corruption in Missouri, but it is my conviction that Missouri, in her darkest days, was a Sunday-school compared with Colorado. St. Louis, under Ziegenhein, was a Methodist class meeting by the side of Denver to day. Jefferson City, with her twenty-two saloons, consumes less liquor than Colorado Springs, with her drug stores and clubs, while her political tricks make Missouri's capital look like a kindergarten. One blunder of one alderman recently cost Colorado Springs $3,000.
> "I am told that the city hall suffered no ess than five defalcations in the last few years by officials elected by partisan rule. Too much partisan politics and not enough business and conscience. The vexing problen of municipal government can only be solved by independent nonpartisan rule. I have always believed in woman suffrage, and look confidently to the Christian wives and mothers and sisters of Colorado Springs to correct these evils at the polls by straight ballots in favor of honest men upon a nonpartisan ticket."

Colorado Springs is one of the most beautiful cities in this fair country. From investigation a few years ago we believe that the statement of Crayton Brooks is not far from the facts in the case, and we rejoice to know that the Christian people of the city have united, putting party politics aside, to destroy the machine rule, that has worked in the interests of the few at the expense of the many.

Any day may bring news of the greatest naval battle ever known. Two large modern fleets are not far apart somewhere off the Malay Peninsula, the Russian Baltic fleet having successfully navigated the Malacca Straits while the Japanese are supposed to be sailing ahead of them awaiting a favorable moment for action.

A Christian minister, David H. Shields, has been elected mayor of Salina, Kan., after a great fight with the forces of evil.

A Suggestion.

Two weeks ago the Baptist Argus dissented from the Christian Standard's statement, that the believing sinner is "regenerated" but is not "born" until he is baptized. In response there comes a suggestion in a personal letter from a prominent Disciple minister. He asks, why might not some prominent Baptists define the Baptist position on this matter at the next congress of the Disciples, which meets next spring in Cincinnati? Why not? And why might not some prominent Disciple ministers define their position before the next Baptist congress?

About two each would be sufficient, and the Baptist Argus would like to nominate the writers of the papers. How would these do? For the Baptists, President E. Y. Mullins of the Southern Baptist theological seminary, and President A. H. Strong of Rochester seminary. Both of these men are professors of theology. And for the Disciples, President Jenkins, of the State university, Lexington, Ky., and Dr. J. H. Garrison, editor of the Christian-Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo.

Both of these congresses are free lances, representing nobody but the speakers themselves, and the four men named have no superiors on theological questions in their denominations.—Baptist Argus.

The foregoing interesting suggestion meets with our hearty approval with perhaps slight modification as to the method of procedure. It is an excellent idea, it seems to us, to bring this question between ourselves and our Baptist brethren to the crucible of free and fraternal discussion in our next congress. Let either one of the brethren, mentioned as representatives of the Baptists, present a paper defining and defending the Baptist position concerning the place of baptism in the plan of redemption; and then let one of the brethren named, or some one else, representing the Disciples of Christ, present a paper of equal length setting forth the view generally held among us, with reasons for same. These papers could be followed with a general discussion, which might be opened with a brief paper, reducing the differences to their least common denominator, and indicating whether such differences constitute any insuperable obstacle to mutual fellowship and co-operation as churches of Jesus Christ. This discussion might be repeated in the Baptist congress.

This kind of program, we are sure, would attract wide attention, draw a large attendance, awaken deep interest, and, what is more valuable than all these, we believe it would conduce to diminishing, to a very large degree, the supposed differences between us on that question. It would mark a distinct step forward in the direction of Christian union. We therefore give our hearty approval to the suggestion, with the understanding that there should be a genuine comparison of views and differences with the single and supreme desire to ascertain and follow the New Testament teaching on this subject.

Our contemporary may imply this discussion in his suggestion, but the statement might be interpreted to mean that the two men from each of the bodies were simply to present their positions to the congresses without discussion. What we desire is a face-to-face, mind-to-mind, and heart-to-heart examination of this subject—not in any spirit of debate, but in the spirit of truth-seeking and the desire to find a common basis of fellowship and co-operation. Not that the question at issue constitutes a scriptual barrier to co-operation, but that mutual misconceptions do prevent such co-operation. We are sure that both Baptists and Disciples of Christ desire nothing but the truth on this and all other points of difference, and such a friendly comparison of views would be sure to promote the unity of two religious peoples which are already moving along converging lines toward a common goal—the Christianity of the New Testament.

He Wanted a Simpler Faith and Worship.

During the progress of the World's Fair, a member of the Swedenborgian church, attracted by the scriptural mottoes in the front of our pavilion, entered it and asked the young lady in charge a few questions about the faith of the people represented by the building. During the conversation, the editor of this paper chanced to enter the building and the hostess referred the inquirer to him. After a little conversation in which we sought to answer his questions, he departed, and we heard nothing further from him until recently, when we received a letter from him, announcing that, following the conversation, he had gone home and read his New Testament carefully to see what the Lord himself said on the subject. The outcome of it was that he could not exactly harmonize Jesus and Swedenborg, and decided to accept the former as the highest authority. Soon after this he decided to attend the services of the Christian church in his city, which he had never attended before. "I can't describe," he writes, "how I enjoyed the simple, whole-souled worship there that Sunday, and I have been going ever since, and I intend to go, for I come away so refreshed and delighted that it is a joy to go there. So I thought, which is worth the most—the intellectual reading up of another man's version of the world to come, followed with a so-called worship of forms and ceremonies on the Sabbath day, or this simple heart-worship of the Lord Jesus, and the effort to proclaim him as the Son of the living God, and win souls to love and follow him, leaving the details for him to make plain in due time? The conviction came decidedly in favor of the foundation principles of the Disciples of Christ, and so I want to become posted, and I herein send for your excellent paper, that was loaned to me at my request, after I learned you were the editor of it." As this is a personal letter, we do not feel at liberty to give the name of the writer, but the experience we are sure will carry its lesson to other hearts that may be seeking something more comforting and strengthening than the philosophy of any man, for Jesus knew what was in man, and has given us a religion adapted to the needs of men.

Reasons for Being a Baptist.

It is a striking proof of the close kinship between Baptists and those who prefer to be known as Christians, or Disciples of Christ, only, that the reasons assigned for being with the one are equally good for belonging to the other. Our eye has just fallen on this statement of Robt. Burdette, who is perhaps more widely known as a humorist than as a preacher for a Baptist church. Having stated that he was born of Baptist stock, and came naturally to his religious inheritance, he adds:

> "Moreover, I love the beautiful symbolism of the ordinance of the Baptist church. I love a baptism that does not have to be argued, defended or explained, but is in itself such a loving picture of burial and resurrection that even a blind eye must close itself if it would not see. And I love the creed that is written nowhere but in the New Testament, which allows for growth—which, indeed, demands steady growth. I love the simplicity of the Baptist organization. I love the democratic churches. And I love the Baptist recognition of 'private judgment,' the liberty of personal opinion. I love the free responsibility of the human soul, standing face to face with God, with no shadow of pope or bishop or priest or man-made creed falling between himself and his Master. That's why I am a Baptist."

Why, bless your heart, Bro. Burdette, these are some of the very reasons why the writer is a Christian, only! So if these things are true, let's quit our nonsense in fighting each other and unite our forces against "the world, the flesh and the devil." What do you say? Time was, of course, when Baptists and Disciples regarded themselves as enemies, and fought each other with a will. Let us hope that the "times of this ignorance God winked at," but we may be sure that he now calls all men to repentance—including warring Christians.

The Education Session at Congress.

It has been the custom since the birth of our American Christian Education Society, for it to hold its annual meetings in connection with our Congress. This was done at Columbia at our last Congress. Prof. Wallace C. Payne being in the chair, the annual report was made by the general secretary, Harry G. Hill. The secretary did not have much money to report, but gave an account of what he had done during the year to interest the churches in our colleges and to call attention to education day. A larger number of our churches observed education day than heretofore, and there is evidently a growing interest in the work of our colleges on the part of our churches. It was explained by the secretary and others, that the object of the society was not so much to receive direct gifts from the churches to be distributed among the colleges as to stimulate generosity on the part of the churches to give directly to the institutions in which they are interested, and to bring the churches into closer relationship with our colleges. The secretary recommended that we continue to observe education day, and that our papers unite in calling attention to the same, and that hereafter, instead of holding our annual meeting in connection with the Congress, hold it in connection with our National Missionary Convention, where a larger number of the churches are represented. These recommendations were approved by the meeting.

There was a discussion, in which a number of brethren participated, the import of which was that there is a place and a work for the Education Society in representing our educational interests in general; that this need not interfere with the plans of any college in pushing its own financial interests; that our churches and the brotherhood should receive the representative of the Education Society and hear his message in behalf of our educational work; that we should not expect too great results at once, but be content to labor and wait, and that there ought to be as great interest in education day among our churches as in any other of the appointed missionary days, and that our papers should give the same emphasis to that day as to other days in our missionary calendar.

The feeling was universal in the Congress that the work of our colleges at present is second to no other interest among us, and that, because our educational work has been permitted to lag behind, special emphasis should be given to it until all our churches are interested in and are helping to support our institutions of learning, to which we are looking for our ministers, our missionaries and our trained workers in various fields.

Notes and Comments.

"There is no sense in organic union," says the Baptist Argus, "before there is inner agreement. The only way to have real union is for all to see alike first." That depends on how much you mean by the phrase "see alike." It isn't necessary, certainly, to "see alike" on every question that may be raised in reference to every phase of Christianity in order to union. We should "see alike" as to the lordship of Jesus Christ, and as to the necessity of accepting him and conforming to his requirements of discipleship, in order to union. After this there should be large liberty of opinion and interpretation so long as Christian character is maintained.

To quote from the same paper again, the editor says:

> The Baptists have struggled victoriously for some half dozen basal principles. These principles are the lordship of Christ over the individual man, the Bible alone the standard of faith and practice, regeneration before baptism, immersion of the believer the only baptism, religious liberty, and church independence.

Now, every one of these "basal principles," including "regeneration before baptism," using the term regeneration to mean what the editor means by it, is not only accepted by the Disciples of Christ, but they have been strenuously advocated by them from the beginning. Why are Baptists and Disciples not united? Because they do not "see alike" on some speculative or minor questions that do not involve Christian character, and ought not to involve Christian fellowship!

In connection with the foregoing, note the following: Here is a local church paper, entitled The Church Record, representing the Second avenue Baptist church of New York City—evidently a large, influential, institutional church, under the pastorate of Rev. Chas. J. Keevil, D. D. In an editorial setting forth the work of that church, which is quite extensive, the pastor closes the statement of its work with the following: "Yes, friends, this is our parish, our work, and our opportunity, and this is what our church stands for"—and what do you suppose follows? The poem, "What We Stand For," appearing each week in the Christian-Evangelist, and beginning,

> "For the Christ of Galilee,
> For the Truth which makes men free,
> For the bond of unity,
> Which makes God's children one."

and so on, to the end of the fifth verse! Now, aren't we getting things pretty well mixed? In another place we give Brother Burdette's reasons for being a Baptist. But they are our reasons for being a Disciple of Christ! Then we give above the "basal principles" for which the Baptists stand, according to the Argus, and they are basal principles of the Disciples of Christ! Last of all, here is a Baptist pastor in New York City literally gobbling up our platform, and appropriating it as the platform of his church! Clearly a committee will have to be appointed, pretty soon, to straighten things out, or Baptists and Disciples will be getting so mixed up that nobody can tell which is the other. That would be too bad!

We are promised a sensation in St. Louis. The Excise Commissioner says he is going to enforce the Sunday closing law against the saloons. Governor Folk says all the laws will have to be enforced until they are repealed! It will be a novel thing for the people of St. Louis to see the officers of the law in the city fulfilling their oath in enforcing the law. But after all, as Dr. Williamson, of this city, told us recently, it will take something more than enforcement of the law to save St. Louis. He says:

> "God be praised for the officials who stand by the oath which they solemnly take before God! But you are not going to save the city with excise commissioners. God's grace saves the city. We will never have righteousness in the city until men's hearts are changed and they serve God royally and loyally. At the base of all changes for good is the gospel of the Son of God."

A subscriber from California asks us to give our views on Christian Science, "as it seems to be taking this coast by storm." It is not the absurd philosophy of Christian Science that gives it its popularity, though that may have a sort of fascination for a certain class of people who imagine that they have gotten hold of something new, and very profound. Christian Science finds its opportunity for growth in the shortcomings of the ministry and of the churches. Its emphasis of the supremacy of mind over matter, though carried to an absurd extreme, and the prominence it gives to the almost forgotten teaching of Jesus concerning the putting away of anxiety and of finding peace in complete trust in God, thereby giving rest to burdened souls in the midst of the tumult and strife of the times, are the chief secrets of its popularity and power. The attention which it excites because of its novelty in method and teaching, will soon pass away, and it can exist permanently only by sloughing off its false philosophy, its tendency to the deification of Mrs. Eddy, and whatever else in its teaching or practice shall be found contrary to sound reason and to the religion of Christ. The best way for the church to meet it is to correct its own faults, and to get in closer touch with Jesus Christ, and preach a full-orbed gospel for the world.

The following remarkable statement is from the Christian Companion:

> We venture the assertion that if an actual count should be made of the members of the church of Christ that we would find that, instead of having a membership of a million and a quarter we could not find more than a million.

We had supposed that the churches of this reformation embraced nearly that number of members. But if the whole "church of Christ," after nineteen centuries of Christian work, cannot make a better showing than that, it is truly discouraging! But the editor does not, of course, mean that. It is just an instance of using a scriptural name in an unscriptural sense, which is quite as bad as using an unscriptural name.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Why do the owners of summer resorts torment us before the time? It is hard enough to stand the routine duties of office work when the trees are arraying themselves in green, and the sky is as blue as a jaybird's wing, and every voice in Nature seems to be calling you out of doors. But when in addition to these allurements there come to the office those finely-illustrated pamphlets setting forth in marvelous pictures the beauties and delights of certain seaside or lakeside resorts, one's sense of bondage to his environment is intensified. Here, for instance, right before the Easy Chair, lies a beautifully illustrated pamphlet setting forth the beauties and attractions of Pentwater Lake, and of the resort near it fronting on Lake Michigan. There is the quiet village of Pentwater, nestling beside as beautiful a little lake as one ever dipped an oar in, and then there are the wooded heights along the shore of Lake Michigan, with their half-hidden cottages seen through the pines; and there is old Lake Michigan, roaring out her fury in a storm, and dashing her white billows against the beach. There, too, is the still, deeply-shaded canon, where the sunlight is only filtered through the thick branches of the trees to play checkers on pine needles which carpet the earth; and there is the large lake steamer landing its passengers on the dock. And it is all very realistic. We have been there, and know it to be true to life. We have no desire to resist the appeal which these pictures and eloquent descriptions make to us. We have already surrendered to the enticements of the place, and only plead for a little time. A little later on, when the mercury soars above the 90s, we will be with you, Mr. Resorter, but do not torment us before the time!

If there were no other reasons for the day known as "Home Mission" day in our churches, it would justify itself on patriotic and religious grounds, as an occasion for studying the condition and needs of our own country. "Home Missions," as a phrase designating a particular line of activities, has come to mean a great deal more to us than it once did. It stands for the fundamental idea that Christianity is the very foundation of all that is best and most enduring in our American civilization—our free churches, our free schools, our free press, our free platforms, and our free representative government. Every evil that threatens the permanency of these free institutions would be removed by the evangelization and Christianization of the people who make and administer our constitutions and laws, and the voters who elect the lawmakers. If this be true, the first Lord's day in May ought to be marked in red letters on our church calendars, and the best talent of the churches, and all the resources of the brotherhood, should be directed toward making this day a day of sacrificial offerings for saving America, by the extension of Christ's kingdom, without whose teaching and influence there would have been no free America, no civil and religious liberty! Get a map of our great home land, and notice its imperial extent from northern lakes to southern gulf, and washed on its eastern and western shores by mighty oceans, with all its vast domain covered by free commonwealths. This is our country! Christ's kingdom enthroned in this mightiest nation of the earth, and dominating the lives of our people, would radiate its light and truth and saving power to all the peoples of the earth. Make Home Mission day a holy height, a mountain top, from which to survey the past, and face and plan for the future, and to gather fresh courage, and gird ourselves with high resolves for the tasks that lie before us!

The discussion over Mr. Rockefeller's gift of $100,000.00 to the American board for missionary purposes continues. The protest against accepting it by the Boston ministers has been reinforced by such distinguished men as Washington Gladden and President Tucker, of Dartmouth. We see no occasion for modifying the principle we laid down in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST several years ago when one of our mission boards refused to accept a missionary offering from one of the churches because of irregularity in the manner of receiving a few persons into its membership. We stated then that it was not the province of a missionary board to pass upon the regularity, or soundness in the faith, of any church contributing to its mission fund; that that was a task altogether too large for it, and one which had not been laid upon it by the churches. The same principle, we believe, holds good in the case of Mr. Rockefeller's gift. It is not possible for the American board to look into the methods by which all the dollars are earned which may be offered as gifts for its work. But especially is it impossible for the American board to know the motives which prompt such gifts, and whether or not they are well pleasing to God. That is a matter that lies between the individual donor and God. As some one has pointed out, there are two things that should be kept very distinct. One is the method of making money, and the other the method of spending it. A man may earn money honestly and spend it very foolishly and wickedly. To condemn his manner of spending it is not to condemn his manner of earning it. He may, on the other hand, make his money by doubtful or nonethical methods, and yet spend it wisely, and for righteous purposes. To approve of the purpose for which the money is spent, does not carry with it approval of the methods by which it was earned, even if these were known. It is a hopeful sign that the public conscience is being quickened as to the methods of money-getting, but we must not lay on our mission boards the tremendous responsibility of investigating all contributions made to their work, and deciding whether the money thus contributed has been honestly earned. As a matter of fact, neither mission boards, nor local church officials, nor individual ministers undertake any such impossible task in reference to funds offered them. Only God is equal to such a task!

There is another principle involved in this discussion that needs attention. It is the principle of charity. This matter of passing judgment upon the individual actions of men without knowing all the fact is not a charitable procedure. Dr. Gladden and others tell us that the methods of Standard Oil have been investigated and are well known. That may be true of the corporation in a general way, and too much cannot be said in condemnation of some of the methods which that corporation is said to have pursued in amassing its wealth. It ought to be understood that the discussion going on is not about the righteousness or unrighteousness of such methods. The question goes deeper than that. It involves the right of the representatives of a Christian organization to pass judgment upon the motives of an individual who offers certain funds for its use. How far Mr. Rockefeller may be personally responsible for the course pursued by the system of which he is a part, and how far his judgment may be at fault, even in instances where his approval has been given, are matters, we take it, concerning which the public has no definite information. But granting that his ethical standard has been altogether too low, and that he has, as many another man has, in his great pursuit of wealth, ignored certain great fundamental principles, such as proper respect for the rights of others, and the claims of human brotherhood, may it not be possible for such a one to honestly desire to do good with the money which he has thus acquired, and, knowing no better way to make restitution, to offer it, in all sincerity, for missionary and educational purposes? Is that a question which a missionary society or a board of college trustees may rightfully undertake to settle? Are we not acting more in harmony with the spirit of Christ in such cases, to accept the gift and leave the giver in the hands of him who alone knows what is in man, and can judge righteously? This would seem to be the course prompted by that love which is greater even than faith and hope.

Destructionism at Bay . . By W. DURBAN

One of the most singular of recent literary incidents is a fresh combat over the subject of Bible criticism. I was rather startled when, on looking over the contents of that first-class monthly, the Contemporary Review, I noticed an article entitled, "The Bankruptcy of Higher Criticism," by Dr. Emil Reich. An attack on the higher critics from any ordinary man would not have attracted my attention, but Dr. Emil Reich is one of the most marvelous scholars now working in England. He is a Hungarian professor of history who has for some time past been giving lectures at Cambridge university and also at various London collegiate centers. His remarkable utterances have made him immensely popular with students, who crowd to listen to him. And he has written several books of international interest which have during the last few years been eagerly discussed. With these I am not at the moment concerned. But the article of last month has so roused the wrath of that Oxford destructionist theologian, Canon Cheyne, that this famous professor in the March Contemporary writes a furious rejoinder. That is something unique, for Dr. Cheyne is famous not only for his massive learning, but for his literary sang-froid. Never before have I known the Olympian serenity of this Oxonian don thus ruffled. What has the man from the Danube done to create this commotion on the banks of the Isis? I must show.

Reich on the Renaissance.

Says Reich, "Despite all the great debt which we owe to the Renaissance, we must admit that it has foisted one great incubus upon us, and that is, the blind admiration of words." This is the keynote of the essay. The philologist was allowed, in the wonderful revival of classic letters during the middle ages, to take precedence of the scientist. Who in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries were the men most generously patronized and rewarded? Not Copernicus, not the incomparable Kepler, not Descartes, not Giordano Bruno, not Spinoza, persecuted by every synod of the seven provinces, denied by father, mother, sister, and dying as an outcast pariah, when still in the heyday of manhood. Scaliger, who cannot claim to have advanced humanity, great philologist though he was, was adulated at the Dutch universities and splendidly remunerated, while that sublime mathematical and philosophical genius, Pascal, was neglected in France for the sake of the pampered commentator, Casaubon. This French litterateur came to England at the time when James I. declared that he never could see anything in Bacon, and was received with open arms by that king. James left Shakespeare without recognition, so that to-day, little being known of the great poet, he bids fair by future historians to be treated as a myth. Heyne, the great critic of classical texts, was made an oracle and listened to by the whole of Europe, whereas Lessing was left to languish in obscurity on the miserable pittance of an eighteenth century librarian. And yet Lessing's "Laokoon" will live forever, while the hair-splitting textual refinements of Heyne are mostly long discredited and forgotten. But in the ninteenth century the worship of philologists became still more exaggerated. Humboldt and others with a mere linguistic smattering were allowed to lay down the law on history. How many of these bold philologists has the last century seen, who have embarked in the nutshell of a word and set forth merrily to explore, like retrospective Columbuses, the ocean of the prehistoric past!

The Demolition of the Classics.

Before the destructionists set about destroying Moses, they had in the classical department of learning been busy about demolishing Homer. Out of a missing digamma they were able, first, to rob Homer of his character, to pillory him as a plunderer of other men's wits, and finally to prove that, with or without character, he never existed at all. But this sort of thing was comparatively harmless. "It was no doubt a pity," says Reich, "to see the figurehead of Greek and Roman history robbed of all credit and turned into mere mythical figments of the primitive brain. But to this we might have been reconciled. To-day, however, the philologists have pushed forward their linguistic parallels against far more serious objects. They are seeking to batter down the foundations of all that we believe and hold most in reverence. They have disturbed the minds and troubled the consciences of thousands of people who have been too simple to grasp the emptiness of the philologists' methods in history."

Thus does Dr. Reich inveigh against the higher critics of the most advanced school. I know that it may be said by some among us that we Disciples of Christ have no direct concern with the arguments of either destructionist critics or their opponents. I beg to demur to this plea. No people are more concerned than are we with the stupendous issues involved in such controversies. I know some theological colleges in England whose young students have complained pathetically to me that they were dosed constantly by some of the professors with German criticism of the Bible. Dr. Reich wants to know, and I confess to sympathy with him, why it should be assumed that a German professor in a little university town, whose life is isolated from reality, and whose training in ancient languages has cast his mind in a mold little suited to historical investigation, should be accepted as an authority on ancient history.

"The Pack of Philologists."

I will quote Reich once again. "The results have been disastrous. The philologist who all his days has never seen a personality, cannot bring himself to believe that institutions like the Spartan state are the making of a single man. Thus Lycurgus has been dissolved into a myth. Theseus and Romulus have survived more than 25 centuries only to be ruthlessly murdered by a pack of philologists. And now, not satisfied with these crimes, they are moving forward to attack yet greater and more sacred personalities, those of Moses and even of Jesus Christ himself. Some of the latest samples of philological jugglery with which the public has been duped are too amusing to be omitted. Professor Winckler in his two latest volumes finally dissolves into myth the small portion of Jewish history which had mercifully been left to us."

Reich commends us to Winckler if we have any sense of humor and want a merry half hour. For this German critic tells us that Joseph is no personality but only an astral myth. Joshua is the sun. And as he was son of Nun, and Nun means "fish," and the sun at the spring equinox issues from the constellation of Pisces, what can be plainer? And then as Caleb means "dog," of course Caleb is the dog-star Sirius. What are we Disciples of Christ going to say in our schools and colleges and congregations and families about this kind of higher criticism? Are we to coolly affect to believe that it is of small consequence whether we accept or reject it? Surely it must be of some importance whether we have any Bible left to us or not. I frankly say that I agree with Reich that all this is "philology run mad," and I am unable to see that philological lunacy is more entitled to acceptance in ecclesiastical and academic halls than any other kind of lunacy. I must conclude with a reference to the section of Reich's essay which is by far the most sensational.

An Enlightening Discovery.

Within the last few weeks a German explorer has made one of the most extraordinary discoveries of modern times. Captain Merker, an officer of the German army, has spent eight years among the Masai tribes of German east Africa, in the region around Mt. Kilimanjaro. He tells in his recently published book that he has been astonished at the remarkable coincidences between many of the native legends and those of the book of Genesis. The ruthless Masai savages only by degrees gave their confidence to Captain Merker. Wonderful were the results of his investigations. The Masai myths are striking indeed. They include a paradise, a woman eating fruit given by a three-headed serpent, a pair banished from paradise, a deluge sent as a punishment, a murder like that of Abel, a divine law given in a tempest and a decalogue in many respects almost identical with the Ten Commandments. Now, it is certain that no foreign missionaries ever carried their propaganda into the Masai country. It is evident that the Masai, the Babylonians, and the Hebrews, coming as they all did from Arabia, had these legends in common before the Chaldeans went from Arabia northeastward to Babylonia, the Hebrews northward to Palestine, and the Masai southward to east Africa. This is Dr. Reich's conclusion. Canon Cheyne does not relish it. It is a fatal blow to the whole of the scheme of destructionist criticism. How Cheyne attempts to meet it I must show another time.

London, England.

[The Disciples of Christ are by no means disinterested in the developments which are going on in the field of historical criticism, but we have refused to become panic-stricken by any of the fantastic feats of the destructive critics. We are seeking to discriminate between the results of sound scholarship and the speculative fancies of what Dr. Reich calls, "the pack of philologists." The Christian-Evangelist, from the very beginning, has advised the policy of "proving all things and holding fast to that which is good." We have never doubted that extreme and untenable positions would be corrected by more sober and reverent critics, and that ultimately we would reach a solid substratum of truth on this question. It is very interesting to see the Danube critic "go" for the philologists; and to notice how the Oxford professor comes back at his critic, and we are glad our London correspondent keeps us informed of these movements and counter movements; but our faith, as Disciples of Christ, does not rest upon the conclusions of either the one or the other, but upon the immovable rock, Jesus Christ, who is the same "yesterday, to-day and forever."—Editor.]

The Central Significance of Jesus*

By Henry Churchill King

"Seeing it is God, that said, light shall shine out of darkness, who shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6).

All the great characteristics of the age point towards Jesus Christ. We have no right to characterize it as an age of doubt. In the first eighty years of the nineteenth century there were more adherents added to Christianity than in the eighteen centuries before. It is an age of realism, and also an age of faith, and an age which shows stupendous reliance on machinery, but yet no generation has been so characterized by the social conscience, and we have come to think that we are all made in the image of God. Persons are the most important facts we know. It is an age, too, when we have put Christ into his historical setting as no other generation has.

What is the abiding thing in this age of transition? As Christians, we consider Christ our supreme datum. He is our supreme datum because he is the supreme fact of history, and he is the supreme fact of history because he is the supreme person in history. Christ, according to his own conception, is primarily a revelation of a person—not of truth. He is, he believed, God's own supreme self-revelation. And his great value for us is found, not in the fact that he brings us more truths, but that he puts us into personal touch with God himself. When we ask, "Who is Jesus Christ? what does he mean? how does he reveal God?" we find ourselves led to a series of propositions, as a basis of our belief in his real divinity. For myself, the propositions which best set forth the absolute uniqueness of Jesus Christ are such as these:

1. Jesus Christ is the greatest in the greatest sphere—that of the moral and spiritual. He sees the moral problem as no other has seen it, and applies it as no other has. He is "transcendent among founders of religion." We talk about religious leaders! What is a leader in comparison with the founder of the religion? The more we enter into comparison the more clearly Christ looms up above all others, and the character of his kingdom bears witness that he is the greatest in the greatest sphere. He takes his life task to found a kingdom which shall never make its appeal to the lower side of man, and establish one that should be throughout primarily spiritual. He meant that his call should be one that should sift men out—a call to self-denial. He expected to found a kingdom that should be eternal. He becomes for us a kind of personified conscience.

2. He is the sinless one, the one man of "impenitent piety." His sinlessness lies upon the surface of the record and it is this peculiar thing that sets him aside from all other good men. Compare him with his perhaps best and greatest apostle, Paul, with whose, "Oh, wretched man that I am!" we have no corresponding note in Jesus.

3. Again, with the highest moral ideal conceivable by men, Jesus rises always to his own ideal, and, in the words of Hermann, "compels us to admit that he does rise to it."

4. Jesus Christ has such a character that we can transfer it directly to God, feature by feature, without any sense of lack, and without any sense of blasphemy. Fairbairn's words seem literally true: "He was the first being who had realized for man the ideal of the divine." He has not only realized what God is, but has shown him in his own life.

5. Jesus Christ is consciously able to redeem all other men. Whatever else Christianity is it is a religion of redemption. He is, himself, the one great Redeemer.

6. Again, Jesus Christ has such a God consciousness and such sense of mission as would make any other brain the world has ever seen topple into insanity, but only keeps his life the sanest, sweetest, most normal and wholesome of all human lives. I do not know anything else like it.

Because he is all this, he is able, as no other man has ever been able, to call out absolute trust and sympathy. You can trust him without reserve, and that means that Jesus Christ is a personality so great that in him you can find God, and God can find us. He is thus for us the Ideal realized, from whom we would take nothing away, and to whom we can conceive nothing to be added. If just a tithe of what I have said is true, then the supreme fact of history is the supreme person of history.

That means that the highest task is to know him. The supreme test is our ability to sound his great personality. Are we giving him his proportionate place? We have courses where we give 38 weeks of study to Shakespeare, and call it merely introductory study; yet men wonder that they do not know Christ better, when they have given him no study, and given him no chance. The great confession is Jesus Christ; nothing more; nothing less. And if we would conserve our faith there is no way so certain as by being loyal to him. We have tried the way of creeds and it does not work. In Oberlin college we have no creeds. You do not conserve faith by writing a series of propositions and hauling men up to them every three months. To conserve truth there is no way so certain as to bring the man face to face with Jesus Christ and have him ask, "What would my Lord say?" Christ is so transcendent that no man is able to give an adequate opinion of him. A man grows into him. There are only two things a man can do in the last analysis: 1. Put on him the stamp of the high character; 2. Put on him a great vision. The measure of our great vision is Jesus Christ. The Light has come into the world.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

A state funeral at the capital is always a matter of great interest. Washington dearly loves a spectacle. In most minds the associations are sad enough, but I have heard of funeral occasions that were anything but distressing. A miserably old man possessed of large property, no portion of which he had parted with during his lifetime to relieve the necessities of others, died, and left in his will five thousand dollars to be expended on his obsequies. A good woman said: "Why not benefit the poor by this? Why not invite all the needy, infirm and aged of the neighborhood to this rich man's funeral and give them clothing suited to the ceremony?" The idea was adopted and carried out. It was a delightful funeral—the most cheerful scene witnessed in that community for years. No tears, no groans, no sighs, not a mourner visible, everybody in tip-top spirits. Old women came trotting along each in a warm cloak and a new gown and bonnet, and old men in the best clothes in the market, silk hats and patent leather shoes. None thought it necessary to be cast down. All were glad that the old miser who had taken care to aid no poor creatures when alive should have made so many hearts happy when he died. It was a joyous funeral, a festive funeral.

A state function of this character does not present this feature, but it is spectacular. It means form and ceremony, the gathering of the prominent people, perhaps the blare of trumpets and the beating of drums, and the brave show of banners and marching columns, and long lines of carriages, and buttons and gold lace and feathers. "The boast of heraldry and the pomp of power" have their fascination. The world likes a show. Even death must be a time for display, panem et circenses. Those who share in it, and those who are but lookers on, get their reward. The dead care not.

This time it was in honor of the Mexican ambassador. The state department took it in hand and sent out its little black bordered missives announcing the ceremony at St. Matthew's Roman Catholic church, and inviting diplomats and high officials to pay tribute to the distinguished dead. The military escort was there, representing all three arms of the service. The brass band and the small boy and the stranger within our gates, and the habitual sightseer were there. The gay uniforms and the dashing turnouts were there. Even the red, white and blue autos and the festive tallyho made it convenient to hover on the border of the crowd to see what was going on. The big policeman never looked more imposing. Martial honors and stately ceremonies, the charm of color and the glitter of gold made an attractive picture in the spring sunshine.

Manuel de Aspiroz was the first ambassador from Mexico to this country. He came in 1899, succeeding Romero. He was born in 1836 at Pueblo under the shadow of Popocatepetl, and as a soldier had a hand in the Mexican war against the French in 1862-5. He was a lawyer, and after the fall of Queretaro was appointed prosecutor in the military trial of Maximilian, which resulted in the execution of the invader, for which Emperor Francis Joseph placed him under ban, and therefore he could not be recognized by Hengelmuller, our Austrian ambassador. This, on several occasions, resulted in rather embarrassing situations at diplomatic and other functions, and prevented the Austrian from doing homage with the other dignitaries to the deceased diplomat. He came here from the cabinet of Diaz, was a quiet gentleman, and did all that was needful for an ambassador to do socially and officially. The ornamental part of the administration is the diplomatic corps, and sometimes there is business that seems to demand the presence of these gentlemen here, but all practical interests between nations could be handled by consuls and the fuss and feathers and friction of etiquette that belong to courts would be done away in our government of and by and for the people. However, these people are interesting, and perhaps a necessary frill on our democratic garment.

With a visiting dominie, anxious to take in all the sights under the Dome, I went to the funeral. Infantry, artillery and cavalry filled the streets, and people, old and young and black and white, lined the sidewalks and gathered on the terraces. An artillery caisson heavily draped in black and drawn by six magnificent horses took the place of the hearse. We went in and found seats among the foreigners. The church was heavily draped in black about altar and chancel, and the air heavy with the perfume of many flowers. In groups the diplomats came in, gorgeous in their court uniforms, blue and red and white and gold, booted and spurred and with swords and orders, the most conspicuously arrayed being the Russian and British and German—the most modestly decorated, the heathen Chinese with their curious hats and peacock feathers. There was a sprinkling of members of the House and Senate; of the Supreme Court, and the Cabinet, and then the usual array of officials of less importance. Then a rustle of expectation, and the President and wife, both in deep mourning, the whole audience rising to receive them. Back of the ambassadors sat the ambassadresses all in black though without veils, and back of them ministers, charge d'affaires, secretaries and attaches, army and navy men in full uniform, and so on. Utmost care is always taken to see at such a time that the right man is in the right place. Precedence is everything in diplomacy. It is not, as in war, to get "the mostest men to the spot in the quickest time," but to be sure of your place in the procession. Finally, borne on the shoulders of eight men, came the casket, wrapped in the Mexican flag, with the chapeau and sword of the dead envoy on top, and as the band without played a dirge it was solemnly taken from the caisson to the altar. Candles burned everywhere. Great flower pieces, wreaths and crosses, and clusters of orchids and roses and lilies and violets, of galax leaves and palm leaves, tied with purple and green and white and blue and red ribbon, surrounded the casket.

Then came the requiem mass. The music was sweet, and the great organ and double quartet had most of the service to themselves. The priest moved back and forth and the altar boys performed their part. There were prayers for the dead. Sub tuum præsidium confugimus Sancta Dei Genitrix. There was no word of eulogy. The sombre surroundings, the mystery of the mass, the hushed multitude, the movements of the figures about the altar, the music, the presence of the dead—all had a certain impressiveness, but I confess it seems far from my New Testament ideas of religion. Appeals to the Blessed Virgin Mary, blessed angels, patriarchs, and prophets, saints, apostles, disciples, martyrs, confessors and virgins to pray "for the soul of the faithful departed" may bring consolation to some mourners, but all this in an unknown tongue to me at least is not edifying. Paul, being a Roman, no doubt could understand the language, but even Paul would be puzzled over the genuflexions and ceremonies and sentiments of the service.

We went out into the sunlight. The casket was removed to the caisson, the troops presented arms and the band playing "Nearer My God to Thee," the cortege started. The state funeral was over. Later the warship Columbia, specially fitted out for the purpose, will transport the remains to Vera Cruz. Following the funeral the newspapers observe that abominable custom of announcing the donors of the floral tributes.

I am not sure that state funerals are wholesome. Lord Salisbury never did a better thing than when he expressed the wish that his funeral should cost not over $100. As a matter of fact it cost $70; and when the richest nobleman in Great Britain, the Duke of Westminster, passed from earth, his obsequies at his own request amounted to $35. The wood of their caskets was grown on their own estates and shaped by their own artisans, but it was a fine rebuke to senseless display at funerals.

Beginning at Jerusalem

By N. J. Aylsworth

Why begin at Jerusalem? The reasons were so many and so weighty as to make it almost fatuous to do otherwise. Without doubt one object was to give the chosen people the first chance to hear and accept the gospel. But beyond this there were reasons well-nigh compelling in their nature. Palestine was the land of Christianity's birth. It was there that John the Baptist had shaken the nation with his preparatory plea, and introduced the Messiah to the waiting people. It was there that Jesus had walked and wrought during the preparatory years—the wonder of all the people. It was there that he had taught and done his mighty works in the presence of multitudes—it was there that he was known. It was there that he had been crucified, and risen from the dead, and ascended to heaven. It was there, and in no other country, that all these materials entering into the constitution of the new kingdom had come into existence and were familiar to the minds of the people. The Jewish scriptures were full of "the hope of Israel," which Christ had come to fulfill. None of these favorable conditions existed in any other country. To have begun elsewhere would have been to attempt to build without a foundation.

Under the conditions, "beginning at Jerusalem" meant more than simply beginning in that city. The divine purpose was to begin at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost—not before, not after. There is large significance in this. On that day Palestine would flow into Jerusalem; great multitudes from all parts of the country would be there to keep the feast. On the day of Pentecost Jerusalem was Palestine. To begin at Jerusalem on that day was to begin over all Palestine; it was, broadly, to begin in the home land—it meant simply home missions to the front. True, many Jews and proselytes were from other countries, but they came into the home environment, where the tale of the Messiah was on every lip, and work upon them was thus essentially work upon home material.

Beginning at Jerusalem was a masterly piece of statesmanship, and it did not originate with man, but was placed by the Master himself in the commission, and was carried out in all particulars under the direction of Heaven. This is the divine charter from the primacy of home missions. It is God's wisdom, God's way. It is as divine as the commission itself.

Results justified the wisdom of this requirement. The very first sermon preached in the home land resulted in three thousand conversions. A little later the number had become five thousand. No such results followed the preaching of the gospel in any foreign land in that age. Converts had to be slowly quarried out of a bedrock of unfavorable environment. In the home land the iron was hot for the descending blow. Environment had whitened the fields for harvest.

But soon the home band was scattered, and "they went everywhere preaching the word." The whole world was filled with preachers; home missions proved, at bottom, to be foreign missions. To begin at Jerusalem was to end everywhere. God's statesmanship is blossoming. To begin at Jerusalem was to shake Rome, Europe, the world. This was not man's wisdom, but God's, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

Does all this mean anything for us? It does if essential conditions are similar. How about our Jerusalem—our Palestine, our home land? Has environment done here what it had done in Palestine? Everywhere in this country, with good and bad alike, Christianity is enshrined as another name for goodness. What a magnificent prestige! Throughout this whole land Christianity stands beautiful with tears in her thousand charitable ministries. What a winning spectacle! Millions of the unconverted in this country have sat under Christian preaching, been members of Christian Sunday-schools, and lived in and been influenced by Christian communities. Multitudes of them have been reared in Christian families, whose dearest memories are fragrant with Christian thought and feeling. They are far on their way toward the kingdom. Environment has made the iron hot for the striking. A meeting of days, or at most a few weeks, brings many, sometimes many hundreds, of these into the church. Not thus is it in any foreign field, where converts are with difficulty wrested from an unfavorable environment. This is our Palestine, our Jerusalem. Begin here; begin here all the time, for the condition is continuous, and fields are perpetually whitening for the harvest.

Here, also, as in Palestine, home missions prove to be foreign missions. To fill America with Christians would be to fill the world with missionaries. Our missionaries are made here. Double our membership and you double our missionaries. Nay, much more, for with missionary work the mission spirit grows. To Christianize America is to Christianize the world.

As multitudes came from surrounding nations to the Jerusalem feast of Pentecost, taking their place in the home environment, and hearing the gospel there, so the nations are flowing by millions into our country. All too little we are doing for these people. The trouble is with the environment. They are so numerous that they are marring our environment. The continental Sunday is pressing at our gates. The saloon is mainly in the hands of the foreign element. A united church could throttle this dragon, but the Christian hosts are divided, and therefore weak. They know this, and lament it, and would be one, but they know not the way. Here is the demand for our plea for Christian union on catholic ground. It should be sounded like a bugle blast, clear, strong, kind, from end to end of our land—now. Our country is suffering from evils which our plea, laid to heart, could remedy. Shall we deny her our aid? Let us make haste, for the need is pressing.

There is one thing in which, I fear, we compare unfavorably with those who began at Jerusalem—their heroism. They gave all—even life. Heroism is giving, and giving may be heroism. The widow's mite was heroic. It meant planning, pain, tears. He who gives until it hurts is as brave as he who receives a sabre thrust in defense of the right. Christianity is heroism. In many ways the scriptures teach that heroism is a condition of salvation. The Master says that he who will not deny himself and take up his cross and follow him can not be his disciple. Love is heroism; it lays all upon the altar, even self. Christ was the greatest hero. Heroism has many manifestations, each peculiar to the age in which it exists. This is the age of the purse. There must be a heroism of the purse. There must be giving till it bleeds. There must be self-denial and cross-bearing for this purpose—or spiritual death. The call is not now to the rack and the stake, but to another martyrdom. There must be purse wounds. Duty strikes us there. Shall we be found wanting?

The men are waiting to be sent, opportunity calls as never before.

An Exponent of the Grace of Practical Christianity.

The National Benevolent Association, though youngest of all our national organizations, should have been eldest born. Though last in the ordinary time, it was first in the heart of God. Possessing a scriptural, it should have had also an historical primacy. Beyond all other agencies, it has highest and holiest claims.

Like our other national societies, this is also missionary, its added sacredness of appeal is in the nature of its mission—a mission to the weakest and most helpless in all the world, the aged and the children. Nor, though we have tacked it on as a kind of an addendum to our program of world-wide endeavor, does it come to us with any sort of aloofness or detachment. It is related to all our other interests. It is keyed to the divine enterprise of missions. It is woven into God's plans concerning us as a people. Its success is vital to the success of our plea. Geo. H. Combs.

The International Sunday-School Lesson Committee and Its Work.—Second Paper.

By B. B. TYLER

I have been a member of this committee since 1890. It usually meets once a year. The last meeting was held in Buffalo, N. Y., in June, 1904. In 1903 the committee met in Washington, D. C., in the month of April. In 1902 the meeting was held in Denver in connection with the international convention. The next meeting will be held in Toronto at the time of the triennial convention, June 23-27. The committee is chosen by, and reports to, the international convention. It is elected for a term of six years. The committee has power to fill vacancies occasioned by death or resignation. The present committee is at work on a series of lessons extending through 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910 and 1911.

The year 1906 will be spent in a study of the synoptic gospels. This will be a study of the life of our Lord in chronological order.

The year 1907 will be given to a study of sacred history up to the time of Samuel. The general title will be, "Stories of Patriarchs and Judges."

From Jan. 1 to June 30, 1908, the time will be devoted to a study of the life of our Lord as given in "The Gospel of John." The second six months of this year will be given to a study of Hebrew history from Saul to Solomon.

The Acts and Epistles, events considered in chronological order, will be studied in 1909.

The study of Jewish history will be resumed Jan. 1, 1910, and will be carried on during the entire year. The study will begin with the division of the kingdom of Israel and will include the story of the captivity in the east and the return of the chosen people to Palestine. The story of the kings, prophets, and people of Israel will be read during this year.

The year 1911 will be devoted to a study of "The Gospel of Matthew."

The purpose of the committee is to so arrange its lessons that pupils and teachers will obtain a bird's-eye view of the entire Bible in six years. The committee prepared a course of lessons for advanced students which it presented to the Denver committee. Their work was rejected. To the approaching Toronto convention the committee will recommend the selection of lessons for advanced students of the word. Shall this be a two or six years' course? is a question that will be propounded.

The system of uniform lessons, now known as the International Sunday-School Lessons, was launched by a great convention of Sunday-school workers in Indianapolis in 1872. The system is a growth. Its popularity was never so great as at the present time. Rival systems have had no appreciable effect in reducing the numbers using the international lessons.

The selections of scripture to be used in our Bible-schools are not made alone by the fifteen men composing the lesson committee. A company of Christian gentlemen in England, Bible students and Sunday-school workers, is a part of our committee. The selections made by the American committee are submitted to the gentlemen in London for criticism. The English brethren are not backward in coming forward with suggestions! There are also helpful correspondents in Australia and India. Conferences are likewise held with the writers of lesson notes. There has been organized an association of editors of Sunday school papers. This editorial association renders valuable assistance to the lesson committee. There is a standing invitation to any person, in any part of the world, to aid our committee by criticisms and suggestions. The first thing in a meeting of the lesson committee, after prayer and the reading of the minutes, is the reading and consideration of suggestions coming from any quarter.

What is the specific work of the international Sunday-school lesson committee?

The work of this committee, as already intimated, is to select such portions of scripture, for use in our Bible-schools, as will give a bird's-eye view of the sacred writings of Jesus and Christianity in six years.

The committee prepares no comments on the scriptures selected. This work is done by others. The lesson committee gives titles to the lessons, suggests verses to be committed to memory, and selects for each lesson a verse called the golden text. The text is supposed to present the thought in the lesson with which it is connected. The committee having done these things, with such assistance as that suggested above, its duty has been discharged.

This committee is placed under one restriction by its creator—the International Triennial Convention. It must provide one lesson in each quarter, four lessons a year, twenty-four lessons in the six years' course, on the subject of temperance. Again and again those who seem to be especially called to combat the traffic in, and use of, intoxicants have been invited to suggest appropriate temperance lessons to our committee. The person has not been found who can name twenty-four sections of scripture of sufficient length to constitute a Bible-school lesson that can be used in this way without a manifest perversion of the sacred writings.

It will be interesting to Disciples to know that more attention has been devoted to a study of the book of Acts by our Sunday-schools, since 1872, the time of the beginning of the international lessons, than to any other of the sixty-six books of the Bible. The lesson for January 7, 1872, was entitled, "The Exalted Savior," and the scripture studied was Acts 2:32-41 and this was the first lesson in the first series.

The committee does its work without financial reward. No member of our committee receives a penny for work done, for services rendered, for time bestowed. The publishers of lesson helps cheerfully defray the expenses incurred by the members of the committee in attending its meetings.

After the lessons have been selected they are distributed among the writers of expositions, and through them, in due time, they reach the public.

The international Sunday-school lesson committee furnishes the best example of Christian unity and union that I have seen. When the discussion was on which resulted in the present well known system, some contended that doctrine should be the basis of a uniform plan of Bible study, others maintained that duties should be the foundation, others that the lessons should follow the ecclesiastical year, as Christmas, Easter, and similar holy days, which led the late Doctor H. Clay Trumbull to say that the battle was for "doctrines, duties, or days." It was finally agreed that the fundamental thought should be the study of the Bible which, in fact, includes all suggested plans.

In all the years that I have served on this committee I have not detected a man, at any time, attempting to gain an advantage for his particular belief, or practice, or church. It is pleasant, believe me, to dwell together in unity in leading 20,000,000 in a study of the word.

Denver, Colorado.

A Message from J. B. Briney.

While no public enterprise that we have in hand should be neglected, the general home mission work is entitled to special consideration and prompt and earnest support. This country is our base of supplies for the whole world, and hence the importance of taking particular care of the work here. While our efforts should by no means be confined to these shores, it is absolutely essential that we lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes in the home field, for it is only as we increase our power and resources at home that we can augment our power and efficiency abroad. The time for the offering for the home work is rapidly approaching, and everything should be in readiness when the day arrives, that there may be a general and generous response to the urgent demands of the cause. Let there be an advance all along the line—more and larger offerings than ever before. Listen to the bugle call of the Master and rally to the standard of home missions in a way that will make angels rejoice.

The Convention--Reasons for Going

By A. C. SMITHER

Among the many advantages or benefits gained by the easterner from attendance at the convention at San Francisco, I mention the following as worthy of consideration:

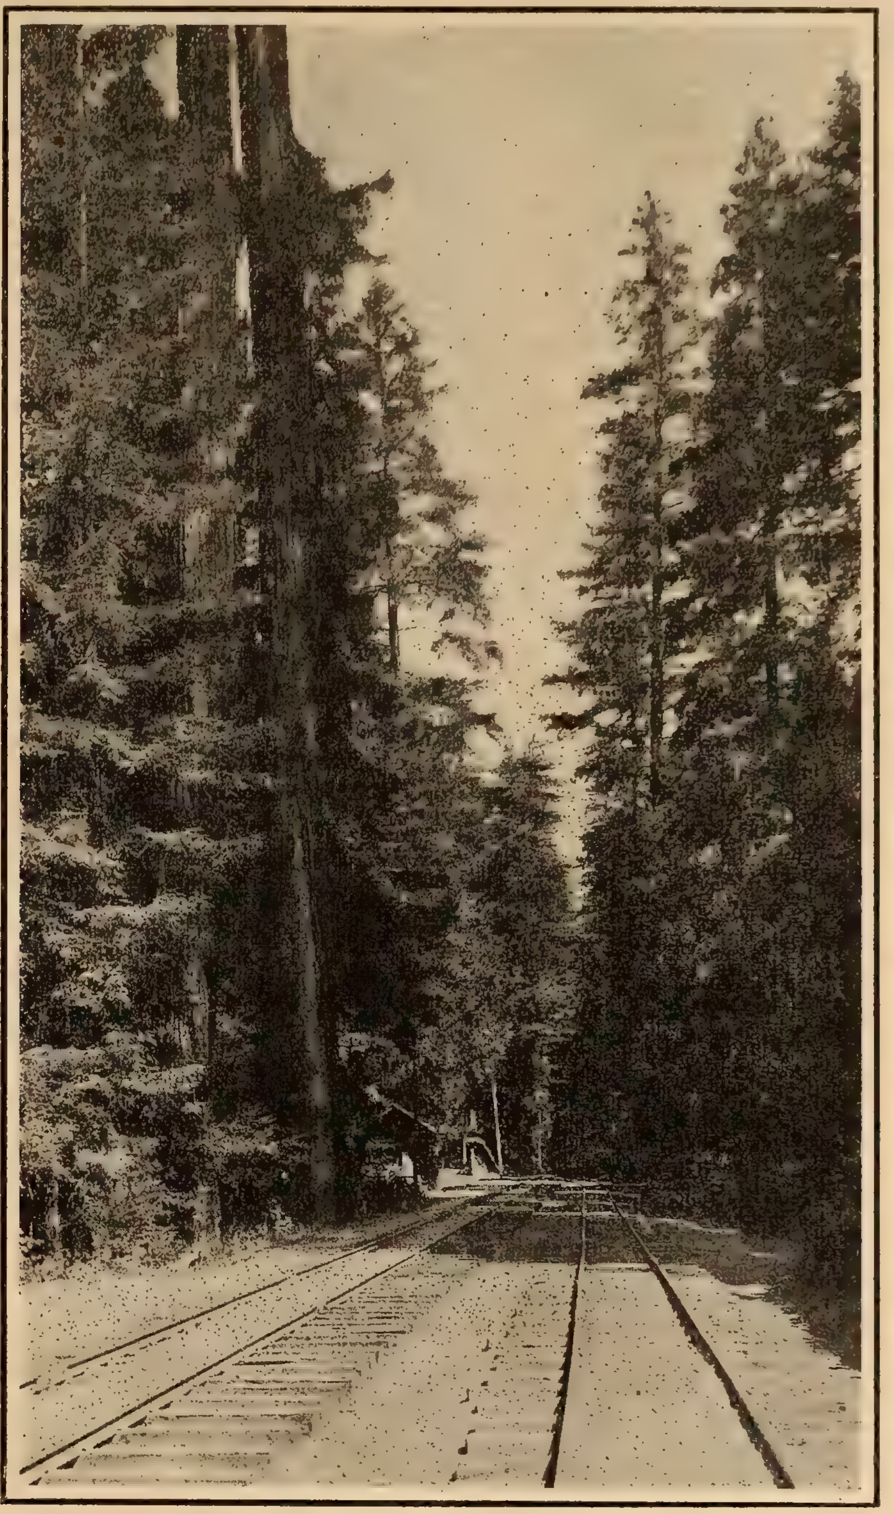
1. It will familiarize eastern people with the magnitude and enormous resources of our great country. All too little do the majority of the people know of this. A trip of this kind will afford one an opportunity of seeing its outstretching prairies, its mighty rivers, its uplifted mountains, its alkali deserts, its vast wheat fields, its corn belt, its irrigated orchards, its mining camps and its varied and unique resources. A trip across this mighty continent always leads one to a new respect for the flag and the country.

2. It would afford one an opportunity of seeing much of the finest scenery in the world. One can come via the Denver and Rio Grande R. R. to Salt Lake City and from there to Los Angeles by the new Salt Lake Route, thence via the Southern Pacific to San Francisco and Portland, thence via the Great Northern to Minneapolis and Chicago. On this route can be seen the grandeur of the Rocky mountains, the wonders of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the glories of Yosemite, the beauties of the Golden Gate, the sublimities of Mt. Shasta, Mt. Ranier, Mt. Hood, the charming scenery of the Columbia river and the gorgeousness of Yellowstone Park. No trip in the world affords a finer opportunity for seeing matchless scenery than this. I have seen the Trossachs and the Alps but they do not compare with the genuine American product!

2. The coast is a most delightful place to spend a vacation. Our resources for caring for people in the way of hotels, transportation, etc., are unsurpassed in the world. The weather is a marvel to an eastern man. The whole of this coast is cooled by breezes from the Pacific ocean, thus keeping the air delightfully tempered. One needs always to carry wraps when traveling in the summer on the Pacific coast. Los Angeles, San Francisco and thereabouts and the Puget Sound country are nature's specially prepared summer resorts. Added to this are the marvelous provisions made by the genius of man for the comfort of the tourist! You could ask lttle more! "Come and see."

4. This would afford the traveler an opportunity to visit the Lewis and Clark exposition, which will be unique among the fairs of the world. The natural scenery from Portland is unexcelled. The history of the Pacific coast as illustrated in that fair will interest and instruct every true American and produce a new thrill of patriotism in his bosom. Every person who plans to visit San Francisco ought to return via Portland. The city and the surrounding country will be worth a visit.

5. This will afford tourists a fine opportunity of seeing the Golden State. California is unique. Its history is romantic. Its climates are unlimited. Its products are varied. Its resources beyond comparison. Its scenic beauties are unsurpassed. Through it our country looks and speaks to the Orient. In California squirrels live in the ground, rats in the trees, and the bottoms of the rivers are on top. Its haze fascinates, its climate enchants, its valleys charm, its people entrance, its cities grow by magic, its land produces the orange and all citrus fruits. See California and die. See it before you die and thus get an anticipation of the richness of the Christian after he dies!



Big Trees, Near Santa Cruz, California.

6. In no place in the world can you travel farther with more comfort, see more, learn more, experience more unique things and at less cash than by taking this trip to California. You could come in a private car. You could live at hotels which would size up your cash before they presented your bill and make it large enough to satisfy the most ambitious. You need not do this. You can get a better meal in Los Angeles or San Francisco for 25 cents than you can in many eastern cities for twice the amount. I think a six weeks' trip can be made for $200, or even less, if you are wise and economical. You can not invest $200 better than to put it into such a trip as this.

7. This trip properly planned would enable you to visit Los Angeles, that most marvelous city on the American continent. It has doubled its population to 200,000 inhabitants in five years. It is growing as rapidly as tourists can sell eastern property and get out here. We are seriously thinking of importing a county or two of Missouri land to divide into town lots. Our supply of land for this purpose is about exhausted, and still the tenderfeet come! Whatever you do, let no man persuade you into coming to California without spending most of your time in the Angel City.

8. You ought to come to California to see one of the greatest mission fields in the world. Cities out here grow with amazing rapidity. They are rapidly becoming centers of tremendous activity. With the development of the Orient, the opening of the Panama Canal, the growth of oriental trade and the awakening of India and China, the Pacific ocean will be the world's Mediterranean and California will be our natural outlet from the east. We ought to capture these cities for Christ. In Greater San Francisco we ought to plant 10 new churches in five years. This is the nick of opportunity. To-day is pregnant with opportunity, is big with destiny. Come out and help to plant our beloved cause in these growing cities.

9. You ought to come and help and cheer the faithful Disciples who have been toiling all these years to plant our cause in this great western empire. The brethren east little know of our difficulties, little understand the hardships that we have undergone in establishing the work on this frontier field. Their presence out here in large numbers and their sympathy and support will send a thrill of enthusiasm that will reach from San Diego to Vancouver. Your presence here will be a great impetus and inspiration to our work. A large number of you will want to remain.

Begin now to lay your plans for San Francisco, August 17-24. Let nothing interfere if you live. If you die you will pass through the Golden Gate to glory anyway. Bring your friends. Have an experience worth remembering. Come one, come all.

[If you wish to take advantage of a fine opportunity to go to the magnificent country described above do not fail to read the article in last week's Christian-Evangelist and likewise what we have to say in this week's paper about the Christian-Evangelist special train. Then write us at once. It will be a splendid company, the best of train service and more sightseeing, comfort and enjoyment than you can get in any other way. And you may go at our expense. J. Murray Taylor has fulfilled the conditions; why not you?]

—Brooks Bros.' revival 15 days old. One hundred and sixty nine additions, 110 in the last seven days, 42 yesterday.—E. R. Edwards, Bedford, Ind.

—We have received both private and official notice that by unanimous vote at the last meeting of the Cincinnati ministerial association a most hearty welcome was extended to the Disciples' Congress to go to Cincinnati in 1906. We are glad that the Cincinnati brethren have thus cordially fallen in with the wishes of those attending the last Congress, and we believe that the next meeting may be a better Congress than any we have yet held.

—We have received, and are still receiving, many letters commending very highly our symposium on the Holy Spirit and prayer, in connection with evangelism. We have reason to know that it has accomplished great good both within and without our ranks. We have by no means done with that class of topics which have to do with the deeper life of the people. There are many souls hungering and thirsting for those truths which feed the inner life.

—The church at Bardstown, Ky., has been renovated.

—Edward Bell has begun work at Worthington, Ind.

—Edw. Clutter is in a meeting at Bee, Neb., with Edw. Longman's church.

—J. M. Elan, of Rensselaer, Ind., will continue in the general evangelistic field for a time.

—G. C. Campbell has just relinquished the pastorate at Lexington, Ky., and may locate in Nashville, Tenn.

—A. N. Lindsay, New Franklin, Mo., is in a meeting with E. H. Kellar, Carrollton, Mo., with fine prospects.

—Dr. W. A. Alton and wife succeed H. G. Wilkinson and wife as missionaries of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Bayamon, Porto Rico.

—A. James Ellis has closed his work at Dighton, Kansas, and is ready to take the field for evangelistic work.

—There are 150 pupils in the industrial school conducted by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Lum, Ala.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is making good progress with its church building at Mt. Carmel, Jamaica.

—The burden of a $1,500 debt has been removed from the church at Princeton, Ky. R. H. Crossfield will hold a meeting there, beginning May 28.

—On April 5, 17 students of the Mountain school of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at Morehead, Ky., were baptized by R. B. Neal.

—The new Sunday-school room of the Central church, Bristol, Tenn., is expected to be occupied on Easter Sunday. W. P. Crouch is the minister there.

—Miss Muriel Randall, the beloved daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Randall, so long missionaries in Jamaica, died March 13. She was 16 years old.

—Mrs. Julia C. Gerould is on her way home from India, where she has visited the stations of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

—Ira M. Boswell, pastor at Chattanooga, Tenn., is holding one Sunday evening service each month in the opera house, thus reaching people who will not go to church.

—W. T. Wells has had three successful years of work at Bowling Green, Ky.; 135 have been added to the membership. A new pipe organ is to be installed this summer.

—Two more gifts from Nebraska, one of $2,000 and the other of $200, have increased the fund of the Board of Church Extension. There have now been 138 gifts to this fund on the annuity plan.

—J. E. Randall, Kingston, Jamaica, so well known as the Jamaica secretary of Christian Endeavor, has become a missionary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and will work in and near Kingston.

—Miss Elsie Gordon, Bina, India, writes that the work of that station, which is cared for by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, is prospering. Miss Gordon is the living link of the Third church, Indianapolis, Ind.

—In the near future houses of worship will be dedicated by L. L. Carpenter, at West Lebanon, Ind., Kalamazoo, Mich., Elk City, Okla., Fairfield, Ill., Harrisonburg, Va., East Aurora, N. Y., and Connersville, Ky.

—Jas. S. Spears, of Holliday, Mo., has taken up the work at Pardee, Kan., for quarter time, and may be addressed at Lancaster. Kan., by any church in the neighborhood of the former place desiring his services for part time.

—During the first six days of April the churches, as churches, gave $7,911.15 for foreign missions, or a gain of $1,045.38. This makes a gain of $7,284.43 from the churches, as churches, since the first Sunday in March.

—S. W. Robinson, of Libertyville, Mo., writes: "I have been a reader of the Christian-Evangelist since 1877. The first thing I turn to when the dear old paper comes is the Easy Chair, in which I always find comfort and consolation."

—"I love your Easy Chair and the way you present union with the Free Baptists. I came from the Free Baptists. See?" J. B. White. You didn't have far to come, brother, and the little chasm that once existed is growing "beautifully less."

—Jesse T. Craig, who has been in a successful meeting at Flat River, Mo., reports that the brethren expect to build immediately. This will probably result in the consolidation of the Elvins and Flat River congregations; with Elvins as a mission point.

—J. Murray Taylor, whose picture you will find on another page of this week's issue of this paper, has already sent in his 100 new subscribers for the Christian-Evangelist. This means that he will travel on the Christian-Evangelist special to the national convention on a ticket at our expense. Go thou and do likewise.

—We have a personal note from A. T. June, written from Everett, Mass., under date of March 20, in which he says: "The Everett church gave this year for foreign missions $42 against $21.30 in 1904. There have been five additions, three by confession and baptism, within the last month." That's a good record, and shows that it is possible to "hustle the east"!

—The Foreign Society is in need of four men for the field, two physicians and two evangelists. One physician is needed for India and one for China. One evangelist is needed for Africa and one for Tibet. Whoever goes out in either capacity should be well qualified for the service. Applicants should not be over thirty years of age. They should have the best of health.

WHY $200,000 FOR HOME MISSIONS?

BECAUSE—We should correct our neglect of this great work.

BECAUSE—It is the ripest field in the world.

BECAUSE—It is our base of supplies. The Missions receiving assistance from our Home Treasury sent $2,340.66 to our Foreign Society in 1904.

BECAUSE—Our own brethren—our own flesh and blood are asking help to establish churches—we should certainly hear and heed their cry.

BECAUSE—The Home Board did more work last year than any previous year in our history—165 churches organized and 16,861 additions by our Home Missionaries. This work is a success.

BECAUSE—It is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ—to win souls in America. We should be about the Lord's business.

Ask your minister about the Offering the first Lord's Day in May. Full supplies of envelopes; literature, papers, etc., sent on application to the Secretary.

—We regret, for the sake of the work in the Mormon territory, that T. W. Pinkerton, who has been at Salt Lake City for the past three years, will leave this field to succeed C. C. Rowlison at Kenton, Ohio. Brother Pinkerton has been recalled to this church of which he was pastor six and one-half years, and he will begin the work again July 1.

—C. A. Freer, pastor at Collinwood, Ohio, and our Ohio correspondent, we see from the secular press, has been stirring up the public schools. In a prelude to one of his sermons he took up that question, condemning the "red tape" and "machine methods," which disregard the individualities of children, and the system of examinations and grading. Too many children are made nervous wrecks, he said, by the present strenuous methods. No doubt reform is needed in the direction indicated.

—"I subscribed for the Gospel Echo to J. H. Garrison when he entered into partnership with John C. Reynolds, before their first issue. Hence I am among the oldest subscribers to your paper. John Courson."

The name is familiar at this office. Few subscribers outrank Bro. C. as a "sticker." One such subscriber is worth a dozen of the "please-stop-my-paper" kind, who become offended at every statement that does not harmonize with their opinions. May his tribe increase!

—In a note from W. H. Rogers, of Swampscott, Mass., he says. "Bro. Robt. Pegrum, who recently came to us from the Congregationalists, supplied the pulpit at Swampscott for me very acceptably for five weeks during my absence." We sincerely hope the churches will see to it that he is not without a field of labor worthy of his ability.

—The "Conference for Education in the South" will be held this year at Columbia, S. C., and will open April 26. Many of the leading educators of the country are expected to be present, and to take part in the conference. The conference goes to Columbia by invitation of the governor of the state, the legislature of South Carolina, the state department of education, the educational institutions of Columbia, the mayor, the city council, and the Columbia chamber of commerce. It will be an event of importance in the educational world.

—A. T. Wise, Collinwood, O., referring to a statement of a minister in another religious body that the heathen who do not hear the gospel will be saved, calls attention to Paul's statement that "they that have not the law shall perish without the law." The church cannot escape responsibility for its failure to give the gospel to the heathen abroad, or those at home, by the plea that they will be saved in their ignorance. The gospel offers not a negative salvation, but a positive salvation which those only can enjoy who hear and accept the gospel.

—G. D. Edwards, pastor of the church at Nevada, Mo., has accepted a call of the Christian church at Honolulu, Hawaii, and will sail for that island from San Francisco at the close of the national convention. The engagement is for two years with the privilege of terminating the contract by either party giving 60 days' notice any time thereafter. The church at Honolulu has been for some time seeking an available man for its work, and in Brother Edwards they have found a young man of fine education and of approved character and ability, who, with the experience that he has already had in the ministry, will doubtless be able to do a good work in Honolulu.

—E. H. Kellar, whose resignation of the pastorate at Carrollton, Mo., we announced in our last issue, desires this to take effect about May 15. He has been at Carrollton about five years, and there has been perfect harmony between him and his congregation. He desires to remove to California, where his father and other relations reside, and to which place Mrs. Kellar's father intends to move. Brother Kellar is a strong man, and will be a very distinct loss to the work in Missouri. We trust that he may yet be prevailed upon to reconsider his decision, which caused considerable surprise, though some knew that he had been contemplating a change of field.

—Wm. Ross Lloyd, having been asked to reconsider his resignation of the pastorate of the First Christian church, Bloomington, Ill., has done so, and will remain in this field. The matter came up at the close of a Sunday evening service, when the request was unanimously made to Mr. Lloyd to withdraw his resignation. In his statement the minister said that the whole matter had been a misunderatanding, and that he had been led to believe that there was friction in the congregation because of him, and hence he had proffered his resignation. Having been made to feel that he had been mistaken, and if the congregation really wanted him and would stand by him, he would gladly remain.

—Referring to the work of Bro. W. J. Wright as superintendent of our Bureau of Evangelism, Bro. J. M. Rudy, who was with him in Kansas City, says: "I am very much pleased with the work of our Brother Wright. I think his being where he is, is an illustration of the Spirit's working. I became well acquainted with him in Kansas City, and I feel that this great work is in safe hands." It is generally agreed that Brother Wright is the right man in the right place, and if he can lead our ministers in the divine art of co-operating with our brethren of other persuasions in evangelistic work, he will have accomplished a great deal for the future of our cause and of our common Christianity.

—"An evangelist who has been holding a meeting here denies the existence of the Holy Spirit entirely. I think that is a wrong position. What do you understand by the 'gift of the Holy Spirit'?" Mrs. Ella Scott. Let us hope our correspondent misunderstood the evangelist, or if not, let us hope, at least, that he had no religious affiliations with those who are seeking to restore New Testament Christianity, in which the Holy Spirit was so prominent and so vital a factor. Such a preacher, no matter with what religious body he is affiliated, needs to have a Priscilla or Aquilla take him aside, and teach him "the way of the Lord, more perfectly." In answer to the question, "what is the gift of the Holy Spirit," our answer is, "it is the Holy Spirit," just as the gift of eternal life is eternal life. God gives his Holy Spirit to them that ask him. (Luke 11:13.) For fuller treatment of this subject, see the editor's book on "The Holy Spirit?" now ready for publication.

—Dr. W. F. Winbigler, pastor First Baptist church, Washington, D. C., in a letter of March 24 writes: "I have enjoyed reading the Christian-Evangelist and I want to thank you for the pleasure that you have thus given me. In the issue just at hand I note what you say about faith and repentance and think your statement, in your comments on Brother Ainslee's article, is true and correct. I still hold to the statement which I made in my paper as to the waste of time in publicly discussing the difference as to which comes first, viz.: 'When Baptists or Disciples become so critically exact as to take exception to the form of statement, "faith and repentance," or, "repentance and faith," as to which word ought to come first, they are wasting time. There is doubtless a theological statement which might theoretically settle the matter for the time being, but practically the difference is as if we should discuss which is first through the board, the hole or the rifle ball; they both go through at the same time. Both statements are scripturally correct and any one can see by the context what is meant.' Your statement is clear and helpful."

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, and a book that tells all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure to mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis Christian-Evangelist. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

—In a letter from E. H. Rayner, preacher at Kissimmee, Fla., under date of March 22, he says: "We are earnestly and prayerfully struggling along with our work, and are now putting forth our greatest efforts in raising money for our new church building." Brother Rayner began his work there with a dozen members. In a meeting in which he was assisted by Brother Nichols, of Worcester, Mass., there were 64 additions, mostly by baptism. Others have been added since. The crying need is a new church building. Brother Rayner is sending out a circular from which we make the following extract:

> Through the power and guidance of Almighty God, who has wonderfully blessed the humble instruments in his hands, there have been 74 accessions to our church since November 1, the membership being more than quadrupled in four months; and now we propose to honor him and to further his cause and establish his work by building a house that will meet the needs of the work and be a home and a training school for the many babes in Christ.
> We have sold our old church property for $500 (all it was worth) and with this small amount as a nucleus, and with great faith in God and his people, we have started to build a church that will cost us $3,000.
>
> We are mostly poor in material things, but we are doing our best individually, and are determined with the help of God to raise that which is beyond our own ability to reach.
>
> We are worshiping in the opera house at present—a place wholly unsuited to religious exercises because of its associations.
>
> We want you to send us something. Anything from 25 cents to $25, just what you feel the Lord would have you give; for it goes toward extending and establishing the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.
>
> These remittances can be sent to E. H. Rayner, pastor Christian church; H. P. Bragg, treasurer of the building fund, or C. E. Yowell, clerk.

FOUR UNION MEETINGS.

At Virginia, Ill.

Thirty-one have been baptized and seven have been restored as the result of a union meeting conducted by Evangelist Hay Bell, of Carbondale, Ill. The Cumberland Presbyterian, the old school Presbyterian, the M. E., and the Christian church were in the union, and the meeting of four weeks was held in the Christian church. There were about 160 additions to the various churches in town, and quite a number have taken membership in churches in the country. It was a remarkable meeting. It demonstrated the power of Christian union, imperfect as it was, and did for Virginia what no individual church effort has been able to accomplish. All churches are now advocates of the union plan.

J. N. Carpenter.

At Troy, Mo.

A union meeting began in this place the first Lord's day in March and closed the third. Mr. McConnall, of Atlanta, Georgia, with the united effort of the four churches, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and Christian, succeeded in stirring Troy as it perhaps had not been stirred before. Somewhere near 160 determined for a better life. It was my privilege to enjoy about 10 days of the meeting, when duty called me elsewhere. I returned to Troy last Wednesday and began my regular work for this month, since which, there have been eight added by letter or statement and I have baptized 31, three of whom made no move during the union meeting. There are some four or five who handed in cards who have not yet come forward to "put on Christ." A baptismal service at the river last Lord's day at 3 p. m. was peculiar, in that I baptized nine persons; then Brother McPherson, of the M. E. church, put on my baptismal suit and baptized five, and the Baptist pastor, Brother Melichamp, baptized five also. An immense audience witnessed this union baptismal service.

E. J. Lampton.

At Erie, Pa.

We are in a union revival here, with home forces doing the work. There are about 20 preachers enlisted. There is a managing committee, of which the writer is the chairman. There has been the most blessed harmony so far. Especially the three Baptist and Christian (old connection) and the church of Christ have worked as one church. The five M. E. churches have also been in the closest fellowship, and while the five Presbyterians and two United Presbyterian churches have been in earnest co-operation, their methods have been somewhat of a weight on the movement. There has been the fullest fellowship, and no spirit of selfishness has yet manifested itself among the first ten, while there is earnest co-operation among them all.

One reason of this is the prayer of Jesus has been emphasized and there has been such a willingness to follow his leadership. The appalling apathy in the churches was a potent factor in bringing them together for united work. Then the Holy Spirit has been relied upon for guidance. There has been such a surrendering of all hearts to his control and there have been so many tokens of his leading that we cannot doubt he is leading the forces here. One token is this: Hardly one service has been held but Acts 2:38 has been quoted and many times emphasized. I preached a sermon on "Setting Up of the Kingdom," and showed the law of pardon laid down by Peter on earth and bound forever in heaven. And when I was through the pastor of the First Baptist church with warm congratulations said, "If that is your view every Baptist pulpit is open for you to enter." I told him I was sure that none of the Disciples of Christ would have objected to anything I said, for that sermon had been preached from Alexander Campbell down to the present time.

The Methodists also were delighted. I preached in a M. E. pulpit on "the Holy Spirit." When I was through I received many congratulations, many saying they had learned more about the Holy Spirit that night than ever before. The pastor arose when I was through and said, "There is one passage our brother quoted that I want to repeat and emphasize, and that is Acts 2:38." Then he announced for his subject for the next night, "The Conditions of True Discipleship." Well, when I was going home I had to thump myself to see if I was really the Methodist preacher and the other man the Disciple. Brethren, when we come to know the full teaching on the Holy Spirit we can teach the denominations so much on that subject—just what they are anxious to receive, for they are more or less muddled upon the subject. We are never to compromise a particle of truth. It is not ours to barter away. But let us work and with uncovered heads and unsandled feet, behold with surrendered hearts, what work our God can yet do.

F. A. Wight.

Erie, Pa.

At Iola, Kansas.

We were led by Rev. C. G. Jordan, evangelist, and Mr. R. E. Mitchell, singer, with the pastors of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, Methodist, Reformed and United Brethren churches as helpers.

There were about 500 decision cards signed during the four weeks' meeting. These were largely adults. Many of these have already united with the church, and many more will soon. Apart from the matter of additions, however, it was an exceedingly good meeting in that the work done was of a substantial, common sense kind, that appealed to thoughtful men and woman, especially men. There was no effort at sensationalism or inappropriate appeals in an emotional way, but a simple, practical, forceful upholding of the Christ by both preacher and singer. Then, too, in developing a spirit of unity and fellowship among the churches and Christian people of the town, the results were very good indeed. Both preachers and people worked shoulder to shoulder, never stopping to think of denominational differences, but with one great aim of getting men and women to accept the Christ.

For the Christian church the results were good in many ways, and yet not what they might have been had our people been more willing to drop into line as if the meetings were in our own church. In all the churches there were a large number that could not be enlisted in a union effort. The Christian church, however, was a recognized force, the pastor being chairman of the executive committee and the personal workers committee having among its leading workers some members of our church. We have already received a number of additions as a result of the meetings and expect several more soon.

The best result of all, to our church, was to lead many of our people to think more of what practical Christian union is and to see that it can be made a matter of fact instead of being a mere theory, which has been so largely true of us in the past, it seems to me. The church learned the value of getting better acquainted, and, with others, that no one denomination has a copyright on method of extending invitations, plans of work, and such things, but that all have their good points which the others will do well to use.

Personally I am led to believe more heartily in union work, particularly evangelistic meetings. This is the third one I have worked in as pastor, and I am convinced that when our people learn that they can enter heartily into union work with other churches without compromise of truth, we shall be, as we ought to be, leaders in great practical movements for Christian union. Oliver Cook.

National Benevolent Association Notes.

Let the Easter giving be spontaneous, universal, and hearty as unto the Lord. Send the offering promptly to headquarters at 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis.

"He who helps a child helps humanity with a distinctness, with an immediateness, which no other help given to human creatures in any other stage of their human life can possibly give again."

Geo. L. Snively, general secretary, was called over into Illnois last week to write the will of a venerable brother who bequeathed $5,000 to the association. Brother Snively has had years of probate court experience, and will donate his services in this capacity to all testators making the association one of their beneficiaries. Address him, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis.

It is questionable whether there are any other mission stations under the auspices of our brotherhood where so many converts are being added unto those who are being saved as those in our various orphanages. And there are no better Christians than these bright American boys and girls, nor will any others more abound in all good works than these for whom the church is doing so much at present.

The Christian-Evangelist Special to the San Francisco Convention.

It will be a great delight to go on the Christian-Evangelist Special to the San Francisco convention on Aug. 17-24. This trip has been organized with a view to the comfort, enjoyment and restfulness of all who go with us. Every detail will have special care; your meals, sleeping arrangements, your baggage, etc., will have special attention.

The outward trip will be by the way of the Burlington Route to Denver, and the Midland to Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak, and much of the grandest mountain scenery in the world.

Then on to Salt Lake City, and from there southwest over the new railroad to Los Angeles, where we will spend two days among the Orange Groves, the most beautiful country in the world. We shall then go northward to San Francisco for the convention, from the convention on to Portland, where the Lewis & Clark Exposition can be visited. Then the itinerary will be through Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, by way of the National Park, then through Wyoming, South Dakota, Nebraska, and home. Of course it is not necessary to take the northern route unless you desire it, but the expense will be only $6 more than to return direct from San Francisco.

There will be stop-overs at all important points, such as Colorado Springs, Manitou Springs, Salt Lake City, etc., where the most wonderful scenery of the American continent will delight all. In addition, the National Convention at San Francisco is sufficient of itself and will be worth a trip across the mountains to the Pacific Coast. This trip will be the opportunity of a lifetime to view the most remarkable scenery in the world. The railroad fare for this round trip will be from Kansas City and return, $56; from St. Louis and return, $63.50; from Chicago and return, $67.50. Double berth in tourist sleepers for the round trip will cost about $6 per person from Kansas City, $6.50 from St. Louis, and just twice this amount for Pullman sleepers. A large number of persons have already indicated their desire to take this opportunity to see the great West.

All the above tickets are good for ninety days, and you can stop over as long as you please west of Denver, Cheyenne and Billings at any place you desire, providing you get back within ninety days.

The trip will be as follows: We leave St. Louis on Aug. 10 at 9 p. m.; Kansas City, Aug. 11, 8:30 a. m.; Denver, Aug. 12, 5 a. m. Arrive at Colorado Springs 7:30 a. m., leave 11:30 a. m.; Glenwood Springs 8 p. m., leave 9:30 p. m. Arrive at Salt Lake, Aug. 13, 9 a. m., leave 3 p. m. Arrive at Los Angeles, Aug. 15, 8 a. m, leave Aug. 17, 6 a. m. Arrive at San Francisco, Aug. 17, 8 p. m. This is the way to go to see all that is grand and beautiful in a single trip. After the convention you can come home direct in a little more than three days. Or you can go north by way of Portland and stop a day or as long as you wish at the Lewis & Clark Exposition, then return home as indicated above. If, however, you would rather take the Oregon short line, you can do so, or if you wish to come home over a route still further north by the way of St. Paul, you can do so without additional cost. Do not forget that your tickets will be good for ninety days, and you can stop over at any point you wish. For further particulars write at once

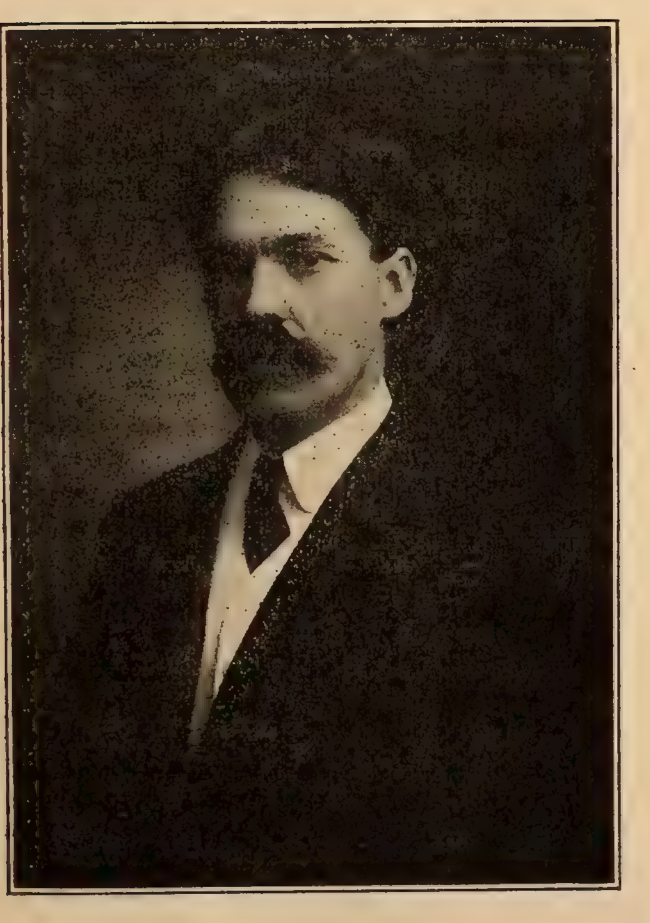
TWO WORKING BROTHERS.



J. J. TAYLOR.

J. J. Taylor was born near Warsaw, Ky. Educated in the common schools of his native county and at Frankfort, Ky., and Bethany, West Virginia. His first pastorate was at North Vernon, Ind., where he did a splendid work in a very hard field. After leaving his first pastorate he entered the evangelistic field, where he has been ever since, with the exception of one year. He has a fine personality, engaging manners, knows men and how to reach them, knows his Bible and how to teach it to others. Gentle in spirit, loving indeed, preaching only the simple gospel of the Son of God—building alone of gold, silver and precious stones, his work will abide.

J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

J. Murray Taylor, minister of H street Christian church, Washington, D. C., was born near Warsaw, Ky., March 17, 1872. He was educated in the common schools of his county, and in the College of the Bible and Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky., and has been in the active ministry for eight years. Just prior to his going to Washington, he was for three years the successful minister at Madison, Ind., where he built up a strong congregation and erected a fine new building, freeing it from debt before leaving. While he has always held a pastorate, he has nevertheless found time each year to hold one or more meetings, and has brought about 1,500 people into the church, besides dedicating several churches. He is now minister of the Third Christian church at the national capital, where he is laboring hard to build them a handsome new church building, at the same time giving heed to "feed the flock of God."

"Separation of Baptists and Disciples"

A few weeks ago the ministers of the Christian churches in St. Louis extended an invitation to those ministers that take the name Baptist to meet with them in conference. The meeting place was the Union avenue church and the time Monday of last week. There were about forty ministers present, the Baptists being in the majority. With a view to having something definite for discussion Dr. Armstrong, editor of the Central Baptist, had been asked to prepare a paper reviewing "The Early Relation and Separation of Baptists and Disciples," a book written by Errett Gates (a Disciple), of the University of Chicago, to which Dr. Hurlburt (a Baptist), Dean of the Divinity Department of that university, had contributed an introduction. After this discussion, luncheon, prepared by the ladies of the church, was eaten and a delightful social time enjoyed. S. B. Moore, president of the Christian ministers' association, made a good chairman.

Dr. Armstrong declared he had not, in writing his paper, consciously departed from what would have been his course had he a gathering of Baptists only in view. He felt perfectly free to express his opinions, as Dr. Garrison hoped he would. The book, he thought, was as nearly free from partisan bias as any dealing with Mr. Campbell and his movement. But he did not think Mr. Gates was quite fair in the character of the witnesses he introduced. There was not a marshaling of forces under one Baptist leader as under Mr. Campbell, not the single embodiment of the doctrines Baptists were defending. Quotations were made from Baptists who cannot be regarded as fully representing all their cause, and minor points received undue attention. Dr. Armstrong suggested that Mr. Campbell's progressive views may have been due to a restless spirit and that even to-day his followers are not all agreed as to the exact meaning of some of his contentions.

Coming to the points of divergence Dr. Armstrong thought Mr. Gates, while "detailing with reasonable fairness" the twelve or fifteen years' period when Mr. Campbell and his people maintained some sort of denominational connection with Baptists, he had not put the points of divergence with proper emphasis. He objected to giving the differences of view concerning the binding force of the Old Testament the first place. Quoting Mr. Gates' summary of the resolutions of the Beaver association, Dr. Armstrong said the Baptists had come to an agreement as to what they thought Mr. Campbell's teachings embodied, and though the correctness of their interpretation might be a matter for debate their fellowship was withdrawn because they thought the Reformers held these doctrines. "He and the Baptists differed not so much in the sum total of things that make up a soul's history, as they differed in the order and relation of these different elements." In a very admirable conclusion the Baptist editor said: "Final unity will be attained, unity of the only kind that is worth the seeking, by preserving all the truth, by preserving our capacity to cling to the truth and by a spirit of love to all who are seeking the truth."

The trend of the discussion was that it does not now matter so much why Baptists and Disciples separated in the past as does their relationship to-day. The spirit manifested by the reader of the paper and all the speakers was towards brotherly love and closer union. Dr. Ford, a Baptist, and the oldest minister present, one who had known Mr. Campbell and had indeed been "talked a great deal into his views," emphasized that leader's objection to the title "Christian church," in his contention with Barton Stone. "Let's quit it, Baptist and Christian," said Dr. Ford. "I like the title 'baptized disciples.'" As to an objection sometimes raised, Dr. Ford gave this fine eulogium upon Mr. Campbell: "His statement about the Holy Spirit in his debate with Mr. Rice is enough in itself to make Alexander Campbell immortal."

J. H. Garrison expressed himself as especially pleased with Dr. Armstrong's statement that "time was when men did not know that they could love each other while holding different doctrines; the time will never come when the privilege of loving each other will demand the sacrifice of clear conviction." As to Dr. Armstrong's criticism of the book, Dr. Garrison thought Mr. Gates had sought to get the representative opinion among Baptists, not that of any extremists. He did not think the essayist did justice to Mr. Campbell's independence. The fact that he went over from the Presbyterian to Baptist ground when convinced that immersion was scriptural, was clear proof of his fearless and independent spirit. As to any extreme statements into which he may, in the heat of debate, or at any time, have been led, what great reformer was not led into extremes? Mr. Campbell went into debating very reluctantly. "The Baptists led him into that," added Dr. Garrison, with a smile. Campbell, too, never claimed to be consistent. "I do not," he said, in his debate with Rice, "hold to the doctrine, once in error always in error." He sought only to know the truth. The relation of baptism to the remission of sins was the main point of difference between Disciples and Baptists and Dr. Garrison said he felt sure that he represented his brethren when he declared that they are as far as the poles from any thought of baptismal regeneration. They were of one mind in holding that what is called a change of heart, the impartation of the new life, must precede baptism, and this spiritual change is wrought by the Holy Spirit through faith—the truth of the gospel being the instrument and the Holy Spirit the Agent. Baptism is symbolic and declarative of what had been accomplished in the believer by faith, and of God's pledge of forgiveness.

Dr. Ford, taking up this statement by Dr. Garrison, thought that if we could agree upon baptism as a "declarative" act it would level a mountain between Baptists and Disciples. Dr. W. J. Williamson made a most fraternal speech although he did not seem to grasp the real meaning of Christian union, as understood by the Disciples. He could not, he said, see any difference between the two bodies. He was sure that Baptists to-day did not wish to stand for some of the things that Baptists of Alexander Campbell's time stood for. In a fine testimonial to that reformer, he said there was not any other man who could stand for the vital truths of religion that Alexander Campbell stood for. Dr. Williamson also said that in practical church life he was putting great emphasis upon baptism, as he believed there was a necessity for doing this to-day. "I am grateful for the spirit of this meeting, and am dead sure we are brothers," he said in conclusion. John L. Brandt suggested that it would be interesting if some of the Baptist brethren would answer the question, "What would you tell a man to do who asks how to become a Christian?" But no effort was made to meet Mr. Brandt's request. Dr. Samuel F. Taylor said if the Baptists had been a little more patient with Mr. Campbell, there would never have been a Christian denomination. It seemed to him that Mr. Campbell was hounded into many of the positions he took. Dr. Taylor said he had personally come into close contact with a number of Christian ministers, and that he had loved Brother Mountjoy, of Columbia, as a brother, that he died in his arms, and he had never heard him nor C. H. Winders utter anything he could not endorse; but he did not think there would be any formal union of the two peoples. F. N. Calvin spoke along the lines that it is not so important how the two bodies got separated, as how they are going to get together again. S. R. Maxwell, whose father was an Episcopalian, mother a Presbyterian, and himself a Methodist Episcopal preacher for nine years, said that it was the plea for Christian union that had won him to the Disciples. Dr. Philputt, in a few practical remarks, urged that the present duty of every person present was to go from the meeting, and carry its spirit into action. Dr. Armstrong in a few closing remarks said that his duty had been "to break the ice, but there wasn't any ice to break!" He was rejoiced at the brotherly spirit prevailing there, though he was afraid that out on the firing lines some of the brethren were still keeping up the fight.

As we go to press comes this message from Dr. Armstrong: "I have heard nothing but the kindest expressions from my brethren about the delightful meeting we had with you."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois.

At Du Quoin I was taken down with grippe. I found a generous home with Bro. B. F. Pope and his most genial and cultured Christian family. His son, Dr. Rolla D. Pope, a graduate of Eureka college, as is also his wife, gave me most valuable medical attention. After a few days I returned home to the best earthly care that comes to us, that of a loving wife. Three weeks put me well on my feet again, for which I am grateful to our good Father and to the generous help of loving friends.

S. A. Hoyt, who died at his home in Forrest early in February, remembered Eureka college in his will. While we will not receive any immediate help, we are grateful for the generous impulses that prompted this noble bequest. There is certainly no great enterprise among us where a dollar means more, nor one which will bring a larger or more sure reward to the giver, than to put money into the training of men for the service of God. The college has been neglected too long, but by the grace of God and the generosity of his people there is coming a better day when this part of the Lord's work will have attention in proportion to its importance. This course is cordially commended to people when they make their wills.

Chicago's spiritual life is one of the great problems of Illinois. The city has been in a hot contest to determine who shall be its mayor. What this may have to do with its spiritual life may not at first appear. But there is no doubt but that a wholesome administration of law adds greatly to the morals of the city and finally to its spiritual blessing. Oliver W. Stewart, the invincible, one of Eureka's talented graduates, was the Prohibition candidate for mayor. I heard one of his speeches. His contention was for city improvement, civic righteousness and the enforcement of laws. Such speeches as he makes cannot fail to do great good. The time will come when the city will learn that what is true of a nation is true of it, that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

In the midst of this great population there are 25 churches of our brethren, for the most part heroically contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. Several things have conspired to make our work difficult in Chicago. The high price of lots, poverty of our people, the desertion from the cause by many whom the Lord blest with the very means so much needed to make the work permanent, are some of them. But we are grateful to see a class of younger men growing into financial strength and, we believe, into sufficient spiritual power to be steadfast unto the end and liberal to the cause which has been the object of earlier struggles. The general spirit of the Chicago churches is in hearty accord with our enterprises. Twenty-three of our churches last year gave $1,562 to foreign missions; $948 to home missions; $1,244 to C. W. B. M. work; $920 to city missions in Chicago and smaller sums to Church Extension, Benevolent Association, etc. Eureka college was not in the list of Chicago offerings, not because they do not believe in Christian education, doubtless, nor from a failure to appreciate such men as J. W. Allen, N. S. Haynes and C. G. Kindred, whom the college has trained and who have poured out much of the best of their lives most usefully in Chicago, but rather because the college claims have not been pressed upon their attention. The future gives promise of a change for the better. The preachers at their Monday meeting unanimously invited Eureka college to present its claims in all the churches of the city. This for the most part will be done. Brethren, did you know that when the preachers get right the people easily follow? They are more willing to do than we are to let them.

HAVE YOU A TONGUE?

When you consult a physician, he first asks to see your tongue. It shows at a glance if you are bilious, and if your stomach, liver and bowels are acting as they should. Save the expense of consulting a physician, and send today to the Vernal Remedy Company, Le Roy, N. Y., and you will receive, free of charge, a trial bottle of that wonderful household remedy, Vernal Palmettona (Palmetto Berry Wine) which will surely and quickly cure you of all diseases which are brought on by an unhealthy condition of the stomach, liver, kidneys and blood. Your druggist can supply you, but the proprietors wish to have every reader of the Christian-Evangelist first try a bottle so as to become thoroughly convinced of the wonderful benefits to be received.

I had the pleasure of attending the quarterly banquet and reunion of the churches of Chicago, already reported in the Christian-Evangelist. Such a function cannot be properly characterized in a paragraph. It was delightful. Three out of the four of our speakers were educated in Eureka college and ought to understand and appreciate the great theme which we have pleaded from the beginning. It will be of encouragement to many who have donated and sacrificed for Eureka college to know that in every church that I visited in Chicago and vicinity the influences and help of people trained in Eureka college are in evidence. Many of the donors rest in their graves, but the influence of their money is still unfolding new beauty and strength in the cause of our Master and will until the end comes.

The semi-centennial calendar of Eureka college will be ready to deliver by the time these notes reach you. It contains considerable information, a list of donors, about 26 pictures of familiar places about Eureka, and about 37 familiar faces. It ought to be in every Christian home in Illinois and in the homes of all Eureka friends everywhere. It will be encouragement to the older, inspiration to the younger and interesting to friends. Send 50 cents to Miss Clara L. Davidson and it will come.

The following churches are to be added to the roll of honor as having observed education day: Champaign, $40; Evanston, $5; Hyde Park, Chicago, Englewood (neither reported amount); North Side, Chicago, $28. I am sure there are others, but their reports have not reached me. These efforts are highly appreciated. J. G. Waggoner.

Kentucky University Letter.

It has been definitely decided to establish a law department at the university next fall. The law college will be an integral part of the university. Recitation rooms will be provided in Morrison chapel. Judge Lyman J. Chalkley of Virginia, son-in-law of the late W. C. P. Breckinridge, of this city, will be dean of the new college. A fine faculty will be secured and the most prominent lawyers of this city and Frankfort have agreed to deliver lectures to the law students. A two years' course will be provided at first. It is believed that the new college will be a success from the start.

Matt. Walton, an old K. U. boy, has been honored with an editorial position on the Law Journal of Yale university. He secured the place by competitive examination. Mr. Walton entered the Yale law college last fall.

Pres. Jenkins delivered the principal address at the quarterly meeting of the Disciples' union of New York City. While in the East, Pres. Jenkins addressed the students of Columbia university and those of the University of Pennsylvania. He made a fine chapel talk on college life in the east upon his return.

Prof. Fairhurst is rejoicing over some new apparatus for the scientific department of the university.

The "Lampas Club" is the latest organization at the university. It is composed of a few leading students and is patterned after the "Skull and Bones" of Yale.

A Sunday-school institute has been held at the College of the Bible. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago; Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Kentucky; E. A. Fox and R. M. Hopkins, of Louisville, all prominent Sunday-school workers, were the conductors and speakers. The institute was well attended and profitable. It is thought that the institute will be made an annual feature of the College of the Bible.

President Jenkins has been in Covington, Kentucky, delivering a series of lectures at the Fourth street Christian church.

M. L. Hurst, of Texas, and L. E. Larkin, of Missouri, have been awarded first and second honors in the College of Liberal Arts. Mr. Hurst will deliver the valedictory and Mr. Larkin the salutatory address at commencement in June. E. B. B.

Kansas.

The Kansas ministerial institute meets at Leroy, April 11-13.

Our districts begin holding their annual conventions this week. There are nine districts in the state, and all district boards have taken time and pains to formulate strong programs, which will be exceedingly helpful to those who are fortunate enough to attend.

D. Y. Donaldson and his singer McWray, closed a splendid meeting at Hartford the last of March. There were in all 36 additions, 19 being men and boys. The church was greatly revived, and is about to locate a pastor. The evangelists are now at Larned.

P. D. Holloway and A. W. Shaffer are at Altamont. This will be a new field. Neal Overman is working heroically at Perry in a meeting. This field has many difficulties, yet a good work is being done. N. A. Stull is at Sedgwick, having recently started the meeting there. He reports a good prospect. J. S. Beem and wife recently closed a good meeting at Fall River. J. J. Satliff organized a new church with 115 members at Edmond in Norton county. Money was raised to erect a church building and employ a pastor. This was a splendid meeting.

I earnestly hope that the churches in Kansas will not fail to do their full duty by the American Missionary Society the first Lord's day in May. The home board has had to borrow money to pay the missionaries in its employ, besides having to begin the present missionary year with quite a deficit. It is imperative that the offering be larger than last year if the present volume of work is sustained. The board will be compelled to retrench unless the brotherhood comes to the rescue with open, generous hands, and no one will be proud to have our home work suffer such a humiliation.

Topeka, Kan. W. S. Lowe.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Good news comes from the South Joplin church of a new auxiliary organized by the pastor's wife, Mrs. J. W. Baker. The officers are: Mrs. J. W. Baker, Mrs. Irwin Hale and Mrs. E. W. Atkinson. We are so glad of these new associates with the work.

St. Louis has been enjoying the presence of the state superintendent of Y. P. work, Miss Martha Stout, of Kansas City. She met with the Juniors of the orphans' home and also a rally of the city was held at the First Christian church on Sunday afternoon of April 2.

The St. Louis union was held at the First church on March 28, and a most enjoyable day was spent in discussing the work of the Y. P. department under the C. W. B. M. The attendance was good, the program excellent and the spirit one of deep, earnest desire to find the better ways of doing the Master's work. Mrs. B. F. Davis, the manager, is doing splendid work, backed by Mrs. W. D. Harrison and the whole executive committee. The special work for the last part of the missionary year for St. Louis, is Jamaica.

Every auxiliary in the state is earnestly urged to observe the week of prayer, the week leading up to Easter Sunday. If it is impossible to hold a prayer service every day, let them be arranged for on at least two days, which are most convenient to the auxiliary. Cottage prayer-meetings are advised. Every woman in each congregation should have a blessing box, and deposit therein thank offerings for some special blessings, for the benefit of the special fund for which the auxiliary is working. Use every one of the many helps to growth that are spread before you by our ever faithful national officers.

New Junior societies are reported at Palmyra, Laplata, Lamonte, Pleasant Hill, and First, St. Louis. Let every auxiliary see to it that the children within its reach are being taught of the Christ life, and of Christian living.

St. Louis. Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Iowa Jubilee Convention, Des Moines, June 22-28.

Every pastor in the city of Des Moines is up and at work getting things in readiness for the convention. Committees are appointed and local church bulletins make frequent and enthusiastic mention of this great gathering of the saints.

At our last meeting of the I. C. C. board that occurred April 4, President Hill M. Bell, H. O. Breeden, Chas. S. Medburry, T. J. Dow, I. M. Leiser and S. G. Fisher were present and participated in the meeting most heartily.

The meeting was held in the parlors of the Chamberlain hotel and occupied the entire afternoon and evening. Through the courtesy of Mr. W. L. Brown, the proprietor, the Chamberlain hotel will be our headquarters for future meetings. It is a beautiful sight to me to see 10 or 15 men turn away from their personal affairs and devote an entire half day to the Lord's work. That is just what each member of our board does once each month. It is not to be wondered at that the work of the I. C. C. is growing in volume and in favor with the people. I wish that all of the Disciples of the state could look in on our board when in session and see earnest and godly men so deeply concerned about the affairs of the Master's kingdom.

At this meeting the program for the state convention was blocked out. The details are not all arranged but the program in substance is as follows:

The convention will begin on Thursday night with a C. W. B. M. session. They will have charge until Friday evening at which time we will have the jubilee opening service with talks by Governor A. B. Cummins, Mayor Geo. Mattern, Pastor C. S. Medbury, Moderator J. C. Mabry.

The services of Sunday night will be held at the University church and the college auditorium.

Wednesday the day will be devoted to business and in the afternoon the jubilee program. A special address will be delivered by one of the leading men of the brotherhood on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday each.

All letters of inquiry should be addressed to the corresponding secretary, B. S. Denny, Des Moines, Iowa.

Des Moines.

A recent special number of the Des Moines Capital, showing the business and other interests of its flourishing city, contained an interesting resume of the city's home life, its educational facilities and its churches, written by our Bro. H. O. Breeden, who is now the senior among the active pastors of the city. It will interest our people to know that we not only have in Drake university the leading school among several of note in the city, but that we stand at the head, numerically, among the religious bodies. Brother Breeden secured his information directly from the proper authority in each church. Of the eighty-four churches in the city, we have ten, and of the 25,200 members, we have 4,420. The article concludes with the following:

The religious bodies having a thousand or more communicants in the city are the following in their order of strength:

Churches of Christ	4,420
Roman Catholic	4,200
Methodist churches	3,366
Presbyterian churches	2,156
Lutheran churches	2,100
Baptist churches	1,682
Congregational churches	1,360
Episcopal churches	1,189

The above does not include the 100 added in he recent meeting at the Central church, or a considerable number of other churches, so the number can now be very safely put at 4,550.

According to previous announcement, Bro. Chas. Medbury took personal charge at a recent prayer-meeting at the University church and occupied the time reading letters from twelve non-resident members of the church, now widely scattered, and five missionaries in the foreign field in whom the congregation is especially interested. It was intensely interesting and, as such material is quite abundant, it will be made a feature quite frequently. It cannot fail to strengthen and intensify the spirit of fellowship, not only with those who have departed, some isolated and others doing valiant service, but among those who remain together.

A very practicable feature of the arrangements on foot for the Iowa jubilee convention at the University church in June, was the raising of $525 at the morning service March 26, three weeks after providing for our living link missionary, for certain repairs and improvements in the basement of the church—an important department at convention time. Let all our people in Iowa, and all others who want to enjoy the feast with us, prepare to attend.

The missionary item, "Des Moines and the foreign field," in the Christian Endeavor March 9, showing that Drake university has sent, and is sending, 25 persons to the foreign mission field in its 23 years, failed to mention the volunteer mission band, now numbering 13, who are studying missions and shaping their school work with that ultimate purpose in view. Brother Medbury presented them to the congregation on the morning of the foreign mission offering. So the work in this line is not yet completed. S. C. Slayton.

Warnings—Impostors.

Look out for a book agent who claims the authority of selling "The Ridpath Library of Universal Literature" at a special testimonial price of $5 and $10 per set. He usually gives the name of J. A. Young, alias Phillips, Paul Cooper, McCray, McDonald, McDowell, etc. He can easily be detected: first, by the prices above mentioned; second, he usually takes the initials J. A. to all names; third, the original contracts have a portrait of Dr. Ridpath on the margin, whereas his does not have any portrait. He also uses the address of the Fifth Avenue Library Society, 490-492 Fifth Avenue, New York City, which is incorrect. Any contract bearing the above address is fraudulent. If such a man presents himself the publishers request that you close the contract, pay him the money and have him arrested, then telegraph the Fifth Avenue Library Society, 95 Fifth Avenue, New York City, who will attend to the prosecution and pay all costs of same.

Please observe the above very closely, as the company has authorized agents at work and does not wish to have the wrong man arrested.

Zuinglius Moore.

From another source we learn that this man's scheme is to interest four or five ministers in a place in a testimonial offer for a set of Ridpath's. He has a shrewd proposition, and has taken orders, collected what he could by a shrewd scheme and then skipped out.

Owing to various reports coming to different members of the ministerial association of western Pennsylvania churches of Christ, concerning one Charles E. Moss by name, a man who has proven himself in various ways unworthy of Christian recognition, and in order that others may be warned against him, the following resolutions have been unanimously adopted by the above-named association, February 27, 1905:

Resolved, First. That the claims of Charles E. Moss to be a minister in the church of Christ now or at any other time are unqualifiedly false.

Second. That his claim to be an agent for Kimberlin Heights School of Evangelists or any other of our educational institutions is without authorization. Further, that he was never a student or in any way connected with the above named school.

Third. That as a man he is grossly immoral, dishonest and palpably untruthful. He is a married man, having a wife and two children in Washington county. He has not obtained a divorce, as he claims. He has had, on Nov. 26, 1904, a true bill for desertion found against him by his wife, Flora B. Moss, in the courts of Washington county.

In order that this may have the widest circulation, be it further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be offered the local daily papers and that an especial request be made of the Christian Worker, Standard and Christian-Evangelist to publish the same, that the brethren be warned against this impostor.

A careful canvass of the reports from the fields of evangelistic activity shows the following wonderful advancement for the months of January, February and March: Baptisms, 25,207; denominations, 1,007; all other sources, 3,160; dedications, 17; new organizations, 14.

SAMUEL GREGG.

Farlin, Ia., April 6.

CALIFORNIA.

Fullerton, April 3.—Yesterday was the second Sunday in our meeting here, and 37 were added. This is a new field for the Disciples, and this was the planting of a new church. We look for many more. All but seven of the above number had been Disciples in other places. We began here under quite exceptional advantages. C. C. Chapman, president of the state board, and one of the noblest men I ever knew, had a fine chapel ready, and his high standing, and the love of the people for him, were the largest human factors in the result.—SUMNER T. MARTIN, evangelist.

COLORADO.

Greeley, April 4.—Forty-seven additions in our eighteen day meeting at this place—19 by baptism, one reclaimed, 27 by letter. V. E. Ridenour led the singing. The local minister did the preaching. I recently held a ten days' meeting at the "S. L. W. Ranch" near Greeley. Result: 17 additions, 16 by baptism. R. A. Givens led the singing. This makes 77 additions in our eleven months' ministry at Greeley—37 by baptism.—F. D. MACY, minister.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, April 4.—Preachers' meeting yesterday on board Steamer McAlister. Present: F. D. Power, W. S. Priest. E. B. Bagby, J. E. Stuart, J. Murray Taylor, Walter F. Smith, and the writer. Additions reported: Vermont avenue (F. D. Power); eight, seven by letter and one by baptism; Ninth street (E. B. Bagby, pastor, and W. S. Priest, evangelist), 45—24 by letter or statement and 21 confessions; Fifteenth street (J. E. Stuart), 14—seven by letter or statement and seven by confession and baptism; Thirty-fourth street, (Claude C. Jones), one by statement. Total, 68—39 by letter or statement and 29 by confession and baptism. Revivals commence April 23 at Whitney avenue and Thirty-fourth street, and April 30 at Fifteenth street, the pastors in every case doing the preaching.—CLAUDE C. JONES, secretary.

ILLINOIS.

Eureka, April 5.—Four additions at Rossville. I began work with the Rossville church April 1.—H. H. PETERS.

Sandoval, April 5.—The 10 days' meeting here by John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, resulted in 49 additions, 45 by baptism. It is one of the greatest revivals in so short a time on record; 13 came up the last night, and the church has taken on new life. J. E. DeGafferelley is our faithful young pastor.

Normal, April 5.—On closing my work here we had three conversions, making eight additions in March. We have good prospects in my new field, Danville.—ANDREW SCOTT.

Sterling.—One addition last week; Will begin a meeting soon.—JAMES W. JOHNSON.

Paris, April 7.—The meeting at the First Christian church continues, with increasing interest. People are driving in from six to ten miles every night. There were 21 added tonight and 41 Sunday, with 127 in six days this week. (We have no Saturday service.) We have been here 42 days with 590 added to date. There have been over 20 whole families baptized into Christ and scores of husbands and wives have stood up side by side to confess their faith in Christ Jesus. There have been six of the public school teachers among those baptized. The Sunday-school has grown from 250 to an attendance of 596 and 600 the last two Sundays. One week ago, we held a service for young people at 3:30 p. m., and 101 signed the Christian Endeavor pledge and five young people confessed Christ. A full report will be given later.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

INDIANA.

Broad Ripple, April 5.—O. E. Tomes, of Hillside avenue Christian church, this city, has closed a meeting for me at Broad Ripple. He accomplished much in three weeks, a better feeling and more enthusiasm. Twenty-six added—18 by confession and eight by statement. The meeting was a great blessing to our cause at Broad Ripple.—LOUIS A. HOPKINS, Indianapolis.

North Salem, April 5.—Meeting two weeks old with 25 additions to date. Crowded houses and wonderful interest. W. H. Alford, evangelist, is doing plain, earnest preaching and the people are doing their part. We continue another week and expect a great meeting.—GEO. W. WATKINS, minister.

Markle, April 4.—Two added by baptism on Sunday morning. All departments are doing good work.—M. G. LONG, minister.

Kendallville, April 3.—Three additions yesterday: one by confession, one from the church of God and one from the Free Baptists. Foreign missionary offering has reached $70.—J. D. HULL, minister.

New Albany.—S. M. Martin now in a meeting at Park church. Ten accessions to date: eight by confession and baptism, two by statement.—WM. A. WARD.

Spartanburg, April 6.—Ten additions in the meeting here. Four confessions at the women's meeting Sunday afternoon, conducted by Mrs. Williamson. Pastor Willis M. Cunningham is preaching.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, singing evangelist.

New Albany, April 3.—Seven additions to the Central church last night; eight since Martin closed a week ago—five of these by baptism; 204 additions to the Central church in less than a year. We must have more room, hence we hear talk of a new building.—B. F. CATO.

Corydon, April 3.—The church here, according to the district convention plan, gave their minister, Frederic Grimes, to the Highland church in Harrison county for a two weeks' meeting. The church was greatly strengthened, and the meeting resulted in 17 additions—16 baptisms and one reclaimed. They have preaching once a month by J. R. Radcliffe. If every church that has all-time preaching would do likewise much good would be done for the many weak places.—S. K. JONES.

IOWA.

Clarinda.—The meeting here with H. H. Hubbell, of Leon, as evangelist, closed after running twenty-four days. There were 73 added—about 50 baptisms. The church feels that the meeting was a very prosperous one.—W. T. FISHER, pastor.

Bagley, April 3.—We closed a 20 days' meeting at Bagley with 34 additions—26 by baptism, eight by statement and otherwise. This was a continuation of the meeting begun in January which lasted nine days with 10 additions—nine baptisms and one reclaimed. Two persons came in between the two meetings, making a total of 46 added since January 1. W. S. Johnson, of Des Moines, our evangelist, is now employed by the state board. The church gave a welcome reception to the new members.—FRANK W. MUTCHLER, minister.

Mystic, April 3.—In a three weeks' meeting 72 were added to the church, 13 by letter and statement, nine from the denominations and 50 by primary obedience. I have received and accepted a call to serve this church as pastor. Expect to begin work on April 15.—C. E. CHAMBERS.

Webster City, April 8.—Evangelist Vernon and I. Estelle Harrington, of Valparaiso, Ind., have just closed what is pronounced one of the best meetings in the history of the church here; 38 were added. Too much can not be said in their praise. The meeting was a rare feast to our souls.—J. WILL WALTERS, pastor.

JAPAN.

Yotsuya, Tokyo, March 12.—Baptized two college men to-day. One woman and 19 men baptized since Jan. 1.—W. D. CUNNINGHAM.

Dighton, March 30.—We closed our work here with a week's meeting giving us 25 additions.—A. JAS. ELLIS.

Troy, April 2.—Four more confessions last night.—THOMAS H. POPPLEWELL.

Toronto.—My work in Oklahoma and Indian Territory resulted in 27 baptisms and 10 otherwise and a church and Sunday-school in good shape and the community happy.—G. W. ROGERS.

Yates Center, April 6.—Seventy-four added up to date in meeting, here. When J. G. Slick came here two years ago, he found a membership of less than 100. They have recently dedicated a $15,000 building free of debt and have a membership of over 300. Next meeting at Alliance, Ohio.—OMER J. SPRAGUE.

Thayer, April 4.—We have just closed a 10 days' meeting with the church here, with 26 additions—14 by baptism. The church is in

MISSOURI.

St. Louis, April 3.—Four additions to the Fourth church yesterday, two by primary obedience and two by statement.—E. T. McFarland.

Hallsville, April 3.—Five additions at my regular appointment here.—W. H. Kern.

Eldon, April 3.—One addition, Dr. J. L. Short, of Oklahoma City, who recently located here in the practice of medicine.—S. J. Vance, minister.

St. Joseph, April 2.—Closed a twelve days' meeting in the First church here to-night, with 58 persons added. We have had 84 additions since Jan. 1.—C. M. Chilton.

Farmington, April 3.—Baptized two Lord's day.—P. S. Hillman.

Jasper, April 4.—Our meeting at Purcell closed with five added, four confessions. Brother Abbott will dedicate our new building on the third Sunday in this month.—O. W. Jones.

Kahoka, April 4.—Eight added here recently: five by confession and baptism, one by letter, and two by reinstatement.—J. C. Bennett, pastor.

Lamar, April 3.—Two confessions yesterday morning. Raised our apportionment for foreign missions.—S. W. Crutcher.

Jonesburg.—At Bellflower one addition by letter. The first foreign missionary offering in the history of the church realized $18.78. At Price's Branch, one by confession, and Bible-school reorganized. Two weeks ago I preached at Truxton in the M. E. house, and gathered together for organization 20 members.—David Millar.

Bogard, April 3.—During the first quarter of the year I have had 15 additions at regular services as follows: Mt. Carmel, one by letter; Hale, two by letter. Bogard, one by statement, one reclaimed, four by baptism; Norborne, three by statement, two by letter, one by baptism. Two additions in five days' meeting at Tina, one by letter and one confession. Total for quarter, 17.—C. C. Taylor.

Burlington Junction, April 3.—The church here is doing an excellent work. I have been here just four months; have baptized 18, and yet have two to baptize; added six by letter and statement. This makes 26 added. We have had no protracted meeting, but are planning one in the summer. Six confessions have been given at prayer-meeting.—Wm. M. Thomas, pastor.

Dixon, April 4.—Our meeting at Dixon closed on Sunday night, April 2. It began on the evening of March 1, thus making it of one month and two days duration. It resulted in 34 additions to the church, 25 baptisms, two from M. E., and one from the New Lights, the remainder by relationship. Dixon is a hard field because of its many infidels and sectarian spirit. The evangelist is usually bluffed in that town after he has gotten those who were ready to come into the church when he comes. But Joseph Gaylor could not be bluffed. No opposition could daunt him, but in the face of a stubborn fight, and almost supplying faith for a weak and trembling church, he held the crowd for 11 nights without an addition, after the first nine came.—J. R. Blunt, Richland.

Flat River, March 27.—Closed a four weeks' meeting with Flat River and Elvins churches, two weeks with each. Results at Elvins, six additions to congregation; Flat River, 12, total 18, six baptisms. While there, Flat River people purchased a building lot with a house available for temporary use; best building site for church in Flat River lead belt. A new building at once and the consolidation of the Elvins and the Flat River congregations, with Elvins as a mission point (the churches are not more than a mile apart) is a probability.—Jesse T. Craig.

Chillicothe, April 7.—One baptism at prayer-meeting this week. The outlook is quite encouraging. This is a splendid church. We begin a meeting April 23, with Clarence E. Wagner as singing evangelist. The pastor will be his own evangelist.—James N. Crutcher.

De Soto, April 8.—Since last report we have received three by letter and two by baptism.—J. W. Bolton.

NEBRASKA.

Omaha, April 7.—S. D. Dutcher and the First church are in a good meeting with home forces; 16 additions to date.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Wilson, April 3.—I began here March 28 and in less than a week there have been great audiences and 27 additions to date. The "Martin family" are engaged for all of 1905 and are now arranging dates for 1906. The outlook is fine for a great meeting in North Carolina.—Richard S. Martin.

OHIO.

Cleveland, April 6.—One confession last Sunday, making three recent additions by primary obedience not heretofore reported. The church recently held its annual meeting and nearly 200 people sat down to the tables. The reports indicated progress in nearly every department. The missionary offerings showed a gain of $101.76 over any previous year. Receipts in church treasury $183.04 larger than former year. All bills paid.—E. P. Wise.

Utica, April 4.—Church organized with 65 members—18 baptisms, mostly men and women. About 40 added to the cause by baptism from denominations and reclaimed. Arrangements are being made for preaching for full time and for building a good house, co-operating with state missionary society. This is the result of a four weeks' meeting held in the opera house by W. T. McConnell of Holdenville, I. T. Jason G. Elstun, of Indianapolis, gave much inspiration to the meeting with the gospel story in song.—Mrs. Jos. Cragg, clerk.

Deerfield, April 8.—Rev. Walter Mansell, of Salem, O., assisted us in a meeting here during March resulting in 10 additions. During the past year our building has been thoroughly overhauled and the expense, amounting to $1,300, has been met. The church is doing well in all departments and we look forward to greater things in the future.—Arthur Braden.

OKLAHOMA.

Perry, April 3.—We had Atwood and Gardiner with us 20 days. Fourteen were added to the church—seven confessions, one from Baptists, one from Methodists, the rest by letter. The church has been strengthened in every way. The young people who had formerly come into the church without teaching now feel that they can stand.—J. M. Rhoades.

OREGON.

Ashland, April 3.—I am preaching par time at Grant's Pass. We have had eight additions to the church there recently, three by baptism, five otherwise.—A. C. Corbin.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Ellwood City, April 4.—A deepening of interest continues. Forty-six up to April 2 were told what they must do.—Ferd F. Schultz.

Braddock.—McKeesport and Braddock arranged for exchange meetings. I held a three weeks' meeting for McKeesport church beginning Feb. 7, which resulted in 35 additions, since 10, making 45. A. T. Gordon, of McKeesport, preached for me at Braddock for three weeks beginning March 5. Result, 36; since 3, making 39.—O. H. Philips.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond.—The Third Christian church, this city, closed a three weeks' meeting Sunday, April 2, with 53 additions—45 confessions. C. O. Woodward, of Manchester did the preaching. The work at the Third church is prospering under the leadership of P. A. Cave, who is closing the fourth year of his ministry here.—H. W. W.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Bluefield, April 3.—We are in the midst of a good meeting with home forces. In two weeks there have been 32 additions. The meeting began as a part of a simultaneous movement on the part of all of the churches in the city. Several churches have already dropped out. We continue with increasing interest. The work here is hopeful. We raised $215 for foreign missions and are hoping to exceed this for home missions. We have recently made considerable improvements on the building. The congregation is united and working.—W. G. Walters, minister.

WASHINGTON.

Spokane, April 4.—The Dean avenue Christian church has just closed a short meeting with S. C. Sargent, of Pullman, as the preacher. Twelve persons were baptized and six others added to our membership by letter and statement. The additions with one exception were all persons of mature years and will be a source of strength to the church. The meeting was an excellent one and has done us much good. It was my pleasure to preach for Brother Sargent three Lord's days at Pullman while he was here in the meeting. I found that Brother Sargent has brought our cause to the front there. He preaches to more of the students than all other churches combined. Their new church building will be ready by the middle of June in time for our state convention. Bro. Z. T. Sweeney has been invited to dedicate it. Our cause is moving grandly forward in these parts and the future is as bright as the promises of God.—J. W. Allen.

WISCONSIN.

Grand Rapids, April 6.—We closed our meeting of four weeks with the church at Milford, Ill., March 8, with 23 additions. Our audiences were large, and often hundreds were turned away. It was said to be the best hearing any church has had in Milford in fifteen years. Percy Baker is the pastor. The writer knew him some fifteen years ago when we were both students at the Bible college in Lexington, and it was a real delight for us to meet as pastor and evangelist and labor in this meeting. We began here April 2, and will continue several weeks. We have no church organization here, and but a few families who have been members elsewhere. We are under the direction of the state board of Wisconsin. Our audiences are steadily growing, and we hope to be able to organize a church before we close the services. There had never been a sermon preached in the place by our people until our coming.—C. H. De Voe and H. K. Shields, evangelists.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

EASTER CHEER.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his great mercy begat us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you" (1 Peter 3:4).

Darkness Before the Dawn. It is difficult for us to realize the deep gloom that must have pervaded the apostolic company and the first disciples immediately succeeding the crucifixion of our Lord. In spite of his repeated prediction that he would rise again from the dead they were unable to grasp so stupendous a fact, and the crucifixion and the burial in Joseph's tomb seemed to them to be the end of their fondest hope. How pathetic is that lament of the two disciples with whom the unrecognized Savior walked on the way to Emmaus: "But we hoped that it was he who would redeem Israel"! But now that hope lies buried in the tomb of Joseph!

A Living Hope. It is on this dark background of gloom and despondency that Peter paints the bright rainbow of the living hope. When, on the morning of the third day, according to the promise of Jesus, he had risen from the dead, and appeared to his disciples, they were so overwhelmed with joy for a time that they could not believe. They feared it was "too good to be true." But when by "many infallible proofs" he had made it evident to them that it was indeed their Lord and Master who had risen from the dead, then, as Peter expresses it, they were "begotten again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." They had hoped before, but their hope had been dashed to the ground; but now they have been begotten unto a living hope, an imperishable hope, by the risen and ever living Savior. Only those whose hope is based on the living Christ can be said to have a living hope.

The Easter Message. The return of the Easter season brings something of the same cheer and joy to the hearts of believers which the early disciples experienced. Nineteen centuries have not dimmed, but have vastly intensified, the significance of the resurrection of Christ. If Christ be risen from the dead, then life has a deep and sacred meaning, and our hearts should thrill with a triumphant hope. Christ has indeed risen; but have we risen with Christ in the newness of life? Are we living as those who have been begotten unto a living hope? (See Col. 3:1-4.) Have we experienced the "power of the resurrection" in our lives? (Phil. 3:10.) This is the Easter message.

The Inheritance. This living hope points to an inheritance unlike that which we possess here on earth, in that it is "incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." Nor is there any doubt about our entering into its possession, seeing that it is "reserved in heaven" for us. (1 Peter 1:4, 5.)

Prayer. Oh, God, our Father, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we do thank Thee that Thou hast begotten us unto a living hope through the resurrection from the dead of Jesus Christ Thy Son and our Lord. We rejoice that Thou hast thus dispelled the darkness and gloom of death with the light and joy of the resurrection and the life eternal. Help us, we beseech Thee, to live as those who have risen with Christ into the larger and truer life, that we may at last enter into the possession of that glorious inheritance, reserved in heaven for us, through riches of grace in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

THE POWER OF HIS RESURRECTION. —Rom. 6:3-14; Phil. 3:10.

For the Leader.

We are now at the Easter festival day of the church. But this day is more to the Protestant world than a church festival or an occasion of ceremonial in the church. If it is anything to us, it brings a deeper message than special music, lighted candles, ecclesiastical robes of unusual beauty, and such like. It brings us at once to the very heart of the gospel of Christ. It is the very foundation stone upon which faith rests. It is, in the words of one gospel writer, God's assurance given to us. It is a gala day for us as Endeavorers. Let us rejoice in it. Let us show forth to the unconverted the pleasures and joys that Jesus Christ has brought to us, and which this anniversary celebrates. This should be a meeting long to be remembered. Let us see what good things we may bring out of the gospel message from the Lord to us in this Easter story.

For the Members.

1. The fact of the resurrection of Jesus is the first consideration for us in this study. It has been denied in some quarters; minimized in some; explained away in others. But the clear light of scholarship reveals no better interpretation of the gospel account than the one the writers make for themselves. They said he came from the tomb. Their testimony has been sifted and tried, and the position of the scholarship of the world does not question the fact.

2. The connection of the resurrection of Jesus with his claim that he was the Son of God and from heaven is another question worthy of consideration. While his miracles testified of his divine power, and while both in the power required and in the purpose for which they were wrought they sustain the claim to Sonship, the resurrection is the sublime miracle. It stands out with a significance and a message concerning Jesus in his divine calling in such a way as to supplement and confirm all other miracles in the proof they bring to the Sonship of Jesus.

3. The resurrection sustains a relation to the assurance with which the apostles went forth to declare the gospel, and also the assurance with which, amidst trials and temptations and persecutions, the early converts to the new faith made progress in Christ. It was God's assurance to all men. It was, when understood in its true light, the one divine proof of the power of God, of the love of God, of the care of God for his children, and his intention to give every one a way of escape from sin. Of all opposition to Jesus his crucifixion was the sum and the culmination, and hence of all means of assuring the trembling heart the resurrection was the aggregate. It summed them all up.

4. The resurrection of Jesus proclaims the power that is to banish sin. It declares the power and the intention of God to put an end to the dominion of evil over men made at first in his own image. As Jesus triumphed over death, so we shall in him triumph over sin. This is conditioned on whether we are willing first to die with him. We must sacrifice as he has done. He is our example. In baptism the burial declares in symbol that we have made this sacrifice and have crucified the old man for Jesus' sake. The symbolism also declares the triumph through Christ we have made over sin. The resurrection of a penitent sinner from baptism is an awakening from death to a new life.

Let us not forget the closing lesson of the symbolism of baptism: since we have been raised in the likeness of his resurrection, to walk in the likeness of his life.

THE ENTRY OF JESUS INTO JERUSALEM.—John 12:12-26.

Memory verses, 12, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Matt. 21:9.

The feast at the home of Mary and Martha and Lazarus in Bethany had occurred on the evening of the Sabbath—probably after sunset when the legal Sabbath was over and its prohibitions no longer binding—six days before the passover. Having thus spent the Sabbath in quiet with his friends, Jesus resumed his journey to Jerusalem. It was not far to go, nor was he the only one who was at that time going up to Jerusalem. Pious Jews from all quarters were turning their faces in the same direction to be present at the feast, and as the roads converged toward the holy city many companies of pilgrims would meet and mingle and exchange the gossip of the day. We may well believe that, as at the feast of tabernacles some months earlier (John 7:11), one of the questions which was most often asked was this: Will Jesus, the prophet and miracle-worker whom some have thought to be the Messiah, dare to come up to the feast where his enemies are strongest? And, as he had come without concealment, there would be some who could answer that he was already coming and had stopped over the Sabbath at Bethany with that Lazarus whom he was reported to have raised from the dead. And so, both from his fellow-pilgrims and from the residents of Jerusalem who heard the word in time, there was easily made up a throng of eager witnesses who more than half believed the claims which Jesus was making for himself.

The sudden outburst of enthusiasm and the willingness of the crowd to ascribe messianic honors to Jesus was nothing new. Earlier in his ministry there had been occasions when they were only too ready to do that. He had restrained them and had even gone to the length of deliberately offending them with hard and mystifying sayings, lest they try to make out of him the kind of Messiah that he did not intend to be. But now the end was at hand. He had made full declaration of his conception of the Messiahship. If the crowd did not yet understand—as certainly it did not—it would at least be well to leave with them this one strong impression that he was the Messiah, the one spoken of by the prophets. And so he does not attempt to restrain the popular enthusiasm, nor does he now charge anyone to tell no man that he is the Christ.

The Pharisees were alarmed. "The whole world is gone after him," they said. We have here one of those light but significant touches which, like the account of the arrest by night "for fear of the people," indicate how great was the personal popularity of Jesus among the common people.

It is important not to think of this triumphal entry as a momentary gratification of ambition on the part of Jesus, a yielding at the last hour to the natural human craving for the recognition which he felt to be due to him. On the contrary, it was not for his own sake that he now permitted himself to be hailed with hosannas, even as it was not for his own gratification that he permitted Mary to anoint him with the precious perfume. But the day of humiliation was at hand. It would be hard for any fragment of his followers' faith in his mission to survive his ignominious death. It would help them if they could associate with the thought of him some remembrance of an occasion like this when he appeared in triumph over his enemies.

Doubtless most of those who participated in this demonstration did so in the hope that Jesus would, at this great national festival, make some display of his power and intention to lead an uprising against Rome or otherwise set on foot a movement to "restore the kingdom of Israel." That he failed to do so must have occasioned great disappointment and not a little resentment.

The Greeks who came seeking Jesus were probably proselytes. It is impossible from the brief record to determine much of their spirit or motive. The reply which Jesus gave suggests that they wished to see some exhibition of his power and glory, for his answer seems to imply a contrast between his method of glorification and some other which had been hinted at. Perhaps the full meaning of his answer is this: These Greeks are interested in me because, after the triumph of this morning, they think I am about to assume the pomp and glory of a king. I am indeed about to be glorified, but not as they suppose. My road to glory lies through the grave. And it shall be so with every one of you and all my disciples, that you shall win glory and give real worth to your lives only by the complete sacrifice of self and all selfish ambitions.

New Church at Bloomfield, Ia.

The illustration on our front page is that of the new church at Bloomfield, Ia., which was recently dedicated by Dr. Herbert Willett. The entire cost of the building will be about $12,000. Its architectural style is distinctly Old Mexican. One of the beautiful features of the auditorium is a dome 28 feet in diameter in the center of the ceiling. At the top of the dome is cut glass, 16 feet in diameter, which gives a most striking effect in lighting the building. There is a similar dome in the Sunday-school chapel. This latter is 30x48 feet, while the main auditorium is 48x48 feet, seating about 350 downstairs, with accommodation for 200 more in the gallery. The combined seating capacity is for about 1,000 people. D. A. Wickizer, the pastor, has an excellent record. During his pastorate at Oskaloosa, a $17,000 church was erected, and a $10,000 building was the result of his work at the East Side Christian church, Des Moines. During his present pastorate, covering a period of three years, up to Nov. 1, 1904, there were 300 additions to the congregation. Everything gives promise of a most successful work with this new building.
